Government Preparing For War

WASHINGTON.—In the political melee following Roosevelt's demagogic move "to take the profit out of war" and Senator Nye's flat statement that the President wants to stop the Senate munitions inquiry, pertinent facts have been suppressed. The daily press has left them out. They are:

1. The reason behind the munitions inquiry and the President's move is that the United States Government is definitely preparing for war.

Bending Every Nerve
This may be difficult for the ordinary man to see, but to those on the inside it is obvious. World war looms. The rulers of all the big nations are bending every nerve in that direction.

2. President Roosevelt is a big game and army man, believing in the "glory of our fighting forces" and the necessity for war. He has done more in his short time in office to militarize the country than any other president since the war. (As this is being written the Government lets two more contracts to the war manufacturers, one for 50 bombing planes, another for 150.) Much of the Public Works money allotted under Roosevelt has been diverted to the munitions makers.

Talk Is Demagoguery
Since the Government is preparing for war, and since the motive of war is profits, the President's talk is rank demagoguery. Senator Nye in his attack on Roosevelt pointed out that the commission appointed by the President to draft the anti-profit laws revealed his insincerity.

War Men Head Commission
Members in charge of the commission are Bernard M. Baruch, Will Street millionaire and during the World War chairman of the War Policies Board; General Hugh S. Johnson, the man who worked out the draft plan used by the Government during the war; and General Douglas MacArthur, chief of the Army staff.

"When I view in part the personnel of the President's commission," said Senator Nye, "I cannot but think how unfortunate it is that Dillinger is dead. He was the logical man to write the anti-crime laws."

Senator Nye is a liberal who despite the "shocking revelations" brought to light by the munitions inquiry still thinks that "something can be done" to curb war.

Government Co-Operated
The investigation has disclosed that the Government co-operated with the munitions makers over a number of years, the War Department going so far as to lend them aid in selling guns and military supplies to the governmental rulers of Japan, Germany and other nations able to buy.

Testimony in the Record
General MacArthur making sales talks in Europe for the DuPonts and other U. S. arms manufacturer. Documents introduced from the files of the manufacturers proved that industrial and political rulers of the United States are one and the same, working hand-in-glove. Besides co-operation on the part of Governmental departments, both Presidents Hoover and Coolidge were linked by the evidence with the war makers.

Would Avoid Confusion
President Roosevelt's own explanation of his hasty appointment of Baruch, Johnson and MacArthur was that the commission would draft a body of laws that would be necessary to avoid confusion which accompanies hasty preparations for war already declared.

PRISON FIGURES REVEAL NAZI TERROR
COLOGNE (T.I.S.)—The average daily number of prisoners in the jails and penitentiaries of Prussia has jumped from 32,525 in 1931 to 37,982 in 1932 and 36,928 in 1933. The latter figure proves the extent of the Nazi terror. A single ill-advised word is sufficient to bring about imprisonment in a concentration camp and jail. At the same time, food expenditures for the individual prisoner have decreased approximately 40 percent despite the universal rise in prices.

Muste and Cannon Start National Tour, Jan 13

Following is the schedule of the appearances of A. J. Muste and James P. Cannon, who on January 13 will open the first national speaking tour of the Workers Party, to extend to February 9, and covering 21 cities and industrial centers.

Robins, Gras Win New Trial; Framed in N. Y. Hotel Strike

Non-Partisan Labor Defense Sees Victory for Labor

Harold Robins and Andre Gras, railroaded to prison last April for their militant activity in the New York hotel strike, were granted a new trial by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court on Friday, December 7.

This victory for workers' rights came after Robins and Gras had served eight months of their sentences. The unanimous decision of the five appeal justices criticized the trial judge, Joseph E. Corrigan for "sarcastic characterization of the defendants," the suspicious he cast on the defendants' alibis, his failure to discuss discrepancies in the testimony of hostile witnesses, and the "plain import" of Judge Corrigan's attempt "to indicate to the jury the court's opinion that Robins had been employed as a strong arm man by the union."

Victory for Labor
"This is a victory for the organized labor movement of New York, which backed these victimized workers," declared Felix Morrow, secretary of the Robins-Gras Defense Committee. "Many progressive trade unions allied themselves to the cause and gave funds for the fight. The furor aroused against Supreme Court Justice Valentine last August, when he refused to grant Robins and Gras a certificate of reasonable doubt admitting them to bail, and thus forced them to stay in jail nearly five months more until their appeal came up, has now had its effect. We will redouble our efforts to see to it that this new trial ends in a further victory for the trade union movement."

Non-Partisan Labor Defense Acts
After their conviction last April, Robins and Gras appealed to the Provisional Committee for Non-Partisan Labor Defense to initiate a struggle for their release. Herbert Solow, secretary of the N.P.L.D. called for the organization of a united front Robins-Gras Defense Committee. Among those who answered the call were the American Workers Party, the Communist League of America, the Socialist Party and the Communist Party Opposition. Among the unions which supported the defense were the Dressmakers Joint Board and the Cloakmakers Joint Board of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, the New York Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the United Hebrew Trades and many of its affiliates, and the Amalgamated Food Workers Union. More than a hundred branches of the Workmen's Circle also contributed funds.

Abraham Abramowitz, of the Socialist Lawyers Association, and Louis Glickhouse, acted as attorneys and wrote the brief which resulted in the reversal.

The Communist League of America and the American Workers Party, which have now played a leading role in the work on behalf of Robins and Gras. Most of the speakers who appeared before the scores of unions which were approached came from the Workers Party.

Daily Worker Attacks Committee
A vicious attack on the Robins-Gras Defense Committee which appeared in the Daily Worker during September, in the form of a statement by the leaders of the Hotel & Restaurant Branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers, to which Robins and Gras belonged, received a crushing answer a week later, when the Executive Board of that union, over the bitter protests of the Communist Party members, voted to liquidate their so-called "Robins-Gras committee" and to affiliate with the committee organized by the N.P.L.D.

Budenz Hails Party From Sickbed

"Objective conditions in the American scene call for the Workers Party of the U.S.A. and give to that party a great opportunity for revolutionary action and a great responsibility." Such was the statement of Louis F. Budenz, executive secretary of the C.P.L.A. and of the A.W.P. up to the time of its merger into the Workers Party.

Comrade Budenz was unable to participate in the recent conventions that achieved merger, due to the operations which resulted from his prolonged illness. He will be unable to function actively for at least six more months, his physicians say.

At his small apartment on 29th street, where he is convalescing while receiving further treatments for chronic sinusitis, Budenz was optimistic about the new party and sorry not to be able to get into the field at once.

"The New Deal has promised the masses and has given them nothing," he said. "Additional million-dollar incomes, reduced standards for the majority, curtailment of relief for the unemployed—that fact is sinking home."

Need Mass Action
"A clear-thinking force, able to voice the revolt and hopes of the workers in terms they will understand, is the need of the hour. The Workers Party will meet that need if it proceeds to build the party through mass action and the American approach."

"That group will give leadership in a revolutionary way which can demonstrate its fitness for leadership before and with the workers in their immediate struggles for bread and security," Budenz continued. "There is no other road to such attainment. Such intelligent audacity as brought about in Minneapolis and Toledo will also win the sympathy of the farmers and the other elements whose aid we need, if we proceed in the course of the fight to carry our message to the whole community involved."

American Approach
"When we speak of the American approach, we mean not only dramatic reference to the past revolutionary traditions of this country, on the basis of other class planes. We mean looking into the mind of the American worker, which gives us an appreciation of his pragmatic philosophy. This calls for a positive presentation of our aims, not a negative one. It demands the painting of a picture under which the present revolutionary movement is a natural development of all that went before in the making of America. The wide and favorable reception of the technocratic machine, despite its political middle-headedness, gives us the cue."

Language of the Machine
"The Russian worker must be made machine-conscious. The American worker has gone through all of that. We must cooperate in making him class-conscious. To do that, we must talk in the language of the machine, of further achievement, and of the American achievement."

"The Workers Party must evolve a crystal-clear message and give it to the masses, Budenz said—a message that will show itself in action, beginning with the fight for plenty and ending in the conquest of power."

HEALTH AND LOW WAGES
The average wage in Ontario is 55 per cent below the minimum health budget requirement, according to a recent official survey quoted by Federated Press.

"Four out of 10 children have physical defects; six out of 10 have dental defects; five out of eight who are ill and need trained care do not get it," the report declared.

THE FORGOTTEN MAN
CHARLESTON, W. Va.—The "forgotten man" is becoming more militant in West Virginia. Challenging President Roosevelt's statement that no one shall starve, thousands strong he marched on the state capitol and on relief agencies throughout the state on National Unemployed Day, Nov. 24.

Party Fund Drive Opened By National Committee

Assigns Tasks to Members in $5,000 Campaign

The Six Months Program of Action adopted by the founding convention of the Party must be put into effect.

To that end the first essential is to get together as promptly as possible the Five Thousand Dollar Party Foundation Fund. Without this Fund all our work will be seriously handicapped—the national office, the organizers, the party organs, the trade union and unemployed fractions. With this Fund we can make only a beginning, it is true, but a beginning which will give us an impetus that will carry us steadily and rapidly forward.

The organization of the campaign for the Party Foundation Fund has begun. Comrade Muste has been appointed chairman of the Campaign Committee and Comrade Rose Karsner executive secretary. The National Committee calls upon all members and friends to give immediately their fullest support to the Campaign Committee and its officers.

Each member of the Party is called upon to give two days pay or ten per cent of one month's pay

Youth in Convention Plans Broad Radical Organization
Spartacus League Pledges Adherence to Workers Party

Pledging adherence to the Workers Party of the United States, the first national convention of the Spartacus Youth League formulated policies and plans to build a broad revolutionary youth organization. Understanding the need for clarity for effective action, three days, from December 3 to December 6, were spent in thrashing out the course of the Spartacus Youth. Delegates had liked in or jumped the freight from Los Angeles, Frisco, Youngstown, Chicago, New Haven, Philadelphia, Newark.

At the first session an honorary presiding committee was elected consisting of founders and builders of the predecessor of the Young Workers League, the Young Workers Party, Martin Aberg, Oliver Carlson, Albert Glotzer, John Edwards and Max Shachtman. This act was symbolic of the connection between the old and the new militant youth movement.

Growth of Spartacus Youth
The organization report of the national secretary, Joseph Carter, showed the growth of the Spartacus Youth from a small club in New York City in late 1931 to several hundred members with branches in New York, Chicago, New Haven, Newark, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Youngstown, Minneapolis, Los Angeles and San Francisco. The difficulties of the national center due to financial poverty were explained and discussed. The effectiveness of the united front policy of the Spartacus Youth was cited as one of the major achievements of the past period.

The following report, given by Manny Garret, on the inadequacies of the existing workers' youth organizations and the character of the Spartacus Youth League, provoked a great deal of discussion. All agreed that the need is a broad militant youth organization which, while accepting the program and policies of the Workers Party, would embrace masses of youth who were sympathetic to working class struggle but not mature enough to understand or to accept the program of the party.

The discussion revolved around the problem of the specific weight to be given by the Spartacus Youth to various phases of its work—political, opponent workers' organizations, capitalist controlled youth organizations, cultural, sports, etc. A clearer understanding that the main field of work of the Spartacus Youth is among the politically unemployed youth resulted from the discussion.

Muste Addresses Convention
A. J. Muste, national secretary of the Workers Party, brought greetings from the party to the convention. He emphasized the importance of the youth movement and

Eleven Point Program Is Mapped

NEW YORK—With unconquerable enthusiasm, branches, members, functionaries and friends of the Workers Party of the U. S. are going to work to carry out the six months program of action adopted at the unity convention.

There is reason for the enthusiasm. The new party, for which many have been waiting, has been formally launched. An example of unity has been set after more than a decade of splits and disintegration in the revolutionary movement.

Sets Eleven Tasks
The Program of Action includes eleven points as follows:

1. Double the party membership in six months.
2. Raise a $5,000 Party Foundation Fund—in sixty days.
3. Build the paid circulation of the New Militant, official weekly organ, to 10,000.
4. Build the circulation of the New International, monthly theoretical organ, to 6,000.
5. Organize two coast to coast tours and two as far west as line drawn through Minneapolis and Kansas City.
6. Establish Party concentration districts with district organizers in at least five centers in addition to New York—Chicago for the Illinois-St. Louis territory; Pittsburgh for Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio; Detroit, Toledo or Cleveland for Western and Eastern Ohio; Lower Michigan and Eastern Indiana; the Anthracite and textile area of New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania; the South.
7. Organize national Party educational system—including the first semester of a resident school in New York.
8. Publication of at least one popular agitation pamphlet per month—elaborating some point in the Declaration of Principles or dealing with some urgent political question of the day.
9. Build and consolidate a National Youth Organization.
10. Help to launch an organization of the Left-progressive wing in the trade unions.
11. Extend and strengthen the National Unemployed League—and work toward united action by the unemployed and final unification is one solid organization.

Party Machinery in Motion
The party machinery itself in the national office and the local and district units must be set up and put in motion as the first essential for carrying out the Program of Action. That is already being done.

Directives to the branches of the former C.L.A. and A.W.P. instructing them to fuse where branches of both organizations existed and to get the branch of the new party organized and functioning were sent out three days after the close of the convention. The new membership books are being printed and will be in the mails in a few days.

Enrolling Charter Members
Steps are being taken to enroll immediately the many workers who have been waiting for the fusion. Those who apply for membership before February 1 and who are accepted become, with the members of the former C.L.A. and A.W.P., charter members of the Workers Party.

Despite technical problems in the print shop and the mailing department the party literature is going out to the masses.

Today the first issue of the New Militant, official organ of the W. P., makes its appearance. Pioneer Publishers will have an attractive pamphlet containing the Declaration of Principles and the Constitution ready before another week. Shortly thereafter a pamphlet describing in popular language the program, structure and activities of the party will be published.

Launch Speaking Tour
Party speakers are supplementing the printed word and spreading the message of revolutionary unity through the W. P. Comrade Oehler has addressed a meeting in Baltimore. Comrades Cannon and Muste will appear at mass meetings in (Continued on Page 4)

FROM THE FIRING LINE

We Ride The Rods To The Merger Convention

From Kansas City To New York

We were off the evening of Nov. 20, amid falling snow and sleet, on a Wabash oil car. I had $3 in my pocket—all the available cash of our Kansas City branch of the Communist League of America. My companions were three C.L.A. comrades who had travelled from California and who, like me, were bound for New York and the national C.L.A. convention and merger convention.

There was no place to sit, so we had to hold onto the iron rod that ran around the car. Oh boy, what a hold-on! My feet ached until they lost all feeling; I knew I had to hold on for 12 miles, so I did.

At Carrollton, Ill., we spent the night in the railroad station. When we asked the station agent to let us stay, he said curtly, "That colored fellow, does he get cold?" I replied emphatically, "Most assuredly; very much so." He let us remain, but looked at me suspiciously until I obeyed his dictate in the middle of the night and brought in a bucket of coal.

Next morning we decided to travel in pairs, so that in case of arrest at least one pair would reach New York. Ray and Abe took the highway; Al and I took another. But the next 90 miles were unprofitable. Open box cars, flat cars, on top and in coal cars, but no more oilers.

From then on it was a nightmare of cold cars and long walks from one railroad yard to another and efforts to get food and a place to sleep. In Moberly, Mo., we tried to panhandle for food and coffee, because we knew my $3 wouldn't last the whole 1,600 miles of our trip. All the restaurants lived up to the true American tradition of segregation. Finally we went into one to buy two cups of coffee. The corpulent blond at the counter informed me she was "so sorry" but I would have to go in the kitchen; but she became apologetic when Al went with me.

In Springfield we searched for hours and walked miles to find Joe Angelo, one of our League comrades. When we found him, he was almost barefooted and on the verge of starvation. He had been thrown out of his union and his relief reduced because of his radical activities.

Once we went too far, riding past Fort Wayne and on to Montpelier, O., where we had to wait all day to get out of town. This mistake was due to our ability to be so tolerant in the midst of bitter cold.

In Detroit, we had to walk 12 miles to get from one freight yard to another, and in Toledo, 20 miles and then remain for the night in a dilapidated vacant house. In Cleveland, we got a train out right away, after walking 15 miles to the west yards.

In Elmira, N. Y., we spent the night in the county jail lodging house on iron beds. The transient camp had gone on a holiday and the Salvation Army refused to feed us, although the table was elegantly set for the officials, on the pretense that we were too late.

At Susquehanna, Pa., we were pulled off the train and threatened with 30 days in jail. After some explanation the railroad bull directed us to the transient camp and advised us to take a day's rest and dry our clothes. We took his advice. I was forced to sleep on the floor because the transient authorities have not discovered that Negroes sleep in beds.

We left our last transient camp, in Port Jervis, with a group of hobo geniuses. From Jersey City we caught a bus to New York, took a subway to the office of the Militant, went home with a comrade to wash the dust from our faces and attended the celebration meeting of the joint convention that night. The conventions of the League and the merger were over. The song was over, but the melody of enthusiasm lingers on.

Defeating the Militants in Illinois - The Real Story

Allard's Account Reprinted from Labor Action

By GERRY ALLARD

Ralph Shaw, southern Illinois organizer of the Communist Party, writes another story of the Illinois coal miners in the Nov. 24 issue of the Daily Worker. Shaw writes of the struggle to place militant candidates on the ballot for the elections in the Progressive Miners union, Dec. 4.

He charges that the Left Wing miners, an amalgam of A.W.P.s, Socialists, Syndicalists, and independent radicals, refused to join with the Communist Party in fighting for a radical slate in the P.M. of A. elections. If Shaw means that we turned him down in a united front proposal he doesn't know what he is talking about as no such offer was made on this specific situation. The Left Wing group has turned Shaw down on a number of occasions when he approached us on united front proposals on the "basis of supporting" the Unemployed Councils, the International Labor Defense, etc.

The Left Wing faction of the P. M. of A. has time after time made unity with Communist miners, over the heads of Ralph Shaw and B. K. Gebert. We have no reason to alter our policy in this connection. We are dealing with a coal miners' situation; therefore, when we speak of united fronts in the Progressive Miners union we deal with members of that organization, and not with people who have opposed and scabbed on the Progressive Miners of America.

The struggle in the P. M. of A. to nominate a Left Wing slate was conducted without ballyhoo or a Communist Party. The line of the Left Wing faction was one of concentrating on local union elections.

Shaw states that the refusal of the Left Wing to unite with the Communist Party enabled William Keck, reactionary incumbent secretary-treasurer, to secure the nomination for president without opposition. In another paragraph he hastens to assure the readers of the Daily Worker that the Communist Party will support Joe Burrell, Left Wing candidate for secretary-treasurer. Shaw does not explain just how the refusal of the Left Wing to join in a united front with the C. P. resulted in Keck president of the union by acclamation.

The Real Story

Here is the real story: During the nominations for union offices in Amalgamated local union Number 1, at Gillespie, Ill., with a membership of some 2,400 members, Claude E. Pearce, incumbent president, was nominated by his faction for the position of secretary-treasurer. Joe Burrell, Left Wing candidate, was nominated by our faction. As predicted, the vote proved to be very close. In order to make it easier for the reactionaries to win the nomination the Communist Party miners, not of their own free will, but because of faction discipline, nominated Laverne Pruett, who everyone agreed had very little chance to receive the nomination. The result of the vote on the nominees resulted in Pearce receiving 118 votes; Burrell 115; and Pruett 4. Burrell was snubbed out by a nose, thanks to the treachery of the Communist Party.

Indignation swept through the rank and file miners of this territory. The repercussions penetrated deeply within the ranks of the Communist Party, and rumors are circulating to the effect that Adam Churs, leading rank and file Communist, has resigned from the C.P. and the professional ballyhoos began to justify the course by stating that the C.P. did not believe in the theory of the "lesser evil". This is horse radish to the miners who know Burrell, and the miners accepted the Shaw version of the C.P. position as an insult.

Shaw switches from his lamentable "theory of the lesser evil" to a blanket endorsement of Burrell. He does this not because of the interest of the rank and file, but in order to check the revolt within the C.P. coal miners.

C. P. Tactics

The treachery of the C. P., under caucus instructions by Shaw, was duplicated in scores of local unions where Left Wing candidates were nominated. In local union after local union, the reactionaries are plurality candidates not majority candidates, thanks again to the Communist Party leaders' tactics.

The Left Wing miners succeeded in placing in nomination candidates for every desired office with the exception of the presidency. What the result of the election will be is a foregone conclusion. The right wing have a machine, funds, political connections with the Reporators, etc., which will enable them to land the major offices. If the Left Wing fails to elect its slate, it will not be because of the workers; it will be because the Communist Party is

Merry Christmas--! F. D.'s Little Gift To the Jobless

FERA 30 cent Minimum Wage is Abandoned

Just a year ago President Roosevelt handed the unemployed a Christmas gift in the form of CWA. Men who had been out of work for several years gratefully accepted wages of $12 a week—and sometimes more—for "real work". The President was going to abolish the dole—and Christmas was a joyous time for those who had been put on CWA, and a time of happy anticipation for those who were still getting relief but hoped for CWA jobs soon.

Another Christmas will be here in a few days. President Roosevelt has a new gift for the unemployed. FERA, which succeeded CWA last spring, has abandoned its 30-cent-an-hour minimum wage rate. Instead, rates are to be set by local relief boards (which means by employers of labor) in accordance with local wage standards.

A Merry Christmas

It's a merry Christmas for the bosses, who have been begging for this ever since CWA was started. Reports from the south tell of new minimum rates of 5 cents an hour and maximum of 15 cents in some districts.

Removing the restrictions on FERA wages has had the result the employers hoped for; it has affected wages for employed men. The south, where lack of organization by labor always gives employers the jump when restrictions are removed, again reports farmers paying laborers as little as 50 cents a day; and, since employers, farm and industrial, usually run the relief boards, threats of withdrawal of relief can be used to force the workers to accept.

Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins, whose good but futile intentions promise to pave hell for the unemployed, fought long against lowering the minimum wage standard. But President Roosevelt, under pressure from employers, forced acceptance.

Unemployed Are Fearful

The unemployed are fearful that the relief administration's acceptance of the bosses' wishes in this instance presages further trouble for them. Pressure is being brought to reduce the already inadequate relief standards. While the Scripps Howard newspapers publish a survey in 24 areas in the country, showing 18,000,000 men, women and children are receiving public relief and pointing out that "the present outlay is inadequate," business men are asking for investigations and insisting that relief be reduced.

Voice of Wall Street

Speaking in San Francisco, Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank of New York, pleaded for a return to direct home relief and abandonment of work relief projects. Concerned about the increased tax burden—and evidently not at all about the effect on the unemployed—Mr. Aldrich talked about business and taxes and budgets (government budgets, of course, not more adequate budgets for the unemployed). He wants the cost of relief borne by local communities; but did not suggest how local communities which are now defaulting their bonds could meet these costs.

Clearly, what the bosses want is a return of relief to local communities over which they have more control, so that they can reduce standards and, by making voluntary contributions, or setting taxes through local politicians, can reduce at the same time their responsibilities.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that Community Chest campaigns—for private agencies—this year have been more successful than for several years past, and in many cities exceeded their quotas. For every business man who contributed more generously through a greater sense of responsibility—or sense of guilt?—there must have been others who want to see relief back in their own hands.

Using Sales Taxes

The growing custom of using sales taxes for relief is another symptom of the trend for industry to play the tune in relief. New York City has just put a tax of 1 and 2 percent on all articles costing more than 12 cents, exempting foods. Mayor LaGuardia, who made speeches in Congress against sales taxes a couple of years ago, suggested an income tax, but the bankers have a way of persuading the liberal mayor what is best for the city—and the bankers.

And So—Merry Xmas!

October, balmy month that it was, added 37,600 families to the relief rolls, according to preliminary figures by the Relief Administration in Washington. This brought the total to 4,082,000, as compared with 3,010,516 in October of 1933.

Another report from Washington showed that while incomes under $25,000 during 1933 had decreased, those above this figure had increased.

Merry Christmas!

Red Sees the New Militant Coming From the Press

Finds the Shop Coffee Good - And Black

By RED

First thing you see is a big coffee pot. In fact there are two coffee pots and a dozen cups. Half the cups are clean and half the cups are not clean. The biggest big coffee pot sits on top of a little heater which is sometimes hot and sometimes not so hot.

You go through a dark hallway on the first floor, and at the back a door opens into the print shop of the Pioneer Publishers of the Workers Party. You can't see the print shop for the clutter of things. The one peaceful spot is on top of the stove, and the coffee pot has a monopoly on that.

Clutter of Things

Tables, shelves, piles of paper, buckets of lead, fonts of type, a linotype machine moving its one long arm up and down, rattling out labor news and editorials for the New Militant, a Whitlock press in the hands of Joe Hirsch (who does everything) whooping off 1,200 copies of the paper an hour, a job press turning out red membership cards of the Workers Party of the United States, and three or four people going from tables to type and type to tables and back again so fast you get confused and imagine there must be at least a dozen of them.

theoretically supposed to be a part of the left wing labor movement. Until the Left Wing miners can definitely clarify the relations of the bankrupt Communist Party to the Left Wing, as that of being fundamentally dissimilar, the right wing will continue to be plurality candidates.

"We're Kept Busy"

"Yes," said D. Marcus, who takes care of the financial end of the shop, whichever end that happens to be, "we're kept busy. We're getting out 8,000 copies of this issue. The type is set for the first pamphlet of the Workers Party—the Declaration of Principles. The first printing will be 10,000. A new pamphlet will be issued each month. We're printing thousands of the membership cards. And in addition to the New Militant, we get out the New International and Young Spartacus.

"However, the shop does need a new press. This one is too slow. When the party moves into new headquarters, we will look around for a new press."

On Its Way

The rumbling in the shop continued. The linotype key-board under the hands of Walter Turshmann continued rattling off news from the labor front. Ann Cohen who looks 18 but declares she is older bustled herself setting up new headlines. Joe Hirsch was busy at the press, feeding papers into the machine, printing the first forms. The 8,000 sheets would have to be fed through once more and then the mailing department could get busy.

The New Militant would be on its way to you—in the mails!

P.S. Your correspondent had a cup of coffee from the big pot on the little stove and though it was black it was pretty good if you like black coffee.

Building Trades War

"When thieves fall out, honest men get their due," says the old proverb. And while it may not apply entirely in the case of the officials of the Building Trades Department of Labor, this rift in the ranks of the old guard labor leadership merits the most careful attention by those who are out to revive the fighting spirit of the trade union movement.

There has always been trouble between the big unions of the Building Trades—electricians, carpenters, bricklayers and their supporters—and the smaller unions of the department. For many years the Big Three were unaffiliated with the Building Trades Department of the Federation. Last spring, however, they joined again and the unity of the building trades was hailed with much jubilee and shouting.

It Didn't Last

A short six months and the war was on again. At the San Francisco convention of the A. F. of L. the ranks were again divided when the smaller unions in control of the Department refused to seat their opponents at the B.T.D. conference. It was a serious split and the Federation convention was unable to settle it. All efforts since have been fruitless. A convention of the Department called by William Green was attended only by the Big Three and their supporters. The Department was reorganized and in consequence we now have two departments, each claiming to represent the building trades unions of the A. F. of L.

Jurisdiction Claims

Behind the whole fight is the bitter jurisdictional squabble which has always cursed the unions of this industry. Who, for example, hangs metal doors? Sheet metal workers, iron workers and carpenters have claimed the work. What union takes care of moving metal furniture? The list is endless and the jurisdictional fights and strikes that they have caused has ripped labor solidarity in the building trades to pieces. With the coming of the NRA and the inauguration of the tremendous government building program, the issue has become even sharper.

The control of the Building Trades Department has become an important weapon in the jurisdictional war, since Department officials are the ones who confer with government agencies in charge of building projects. They have a great deal of influence in determining what kind of jobs should be done and what arrangements made to carry them out. Building Trades bureaucrats are afraid of the thousands of unemployed in their membership. If the per capita is to continue rolling in and their power to continue unchallenged, work must be found for as many as possible. The control of the Building Trades Department is a matter of vital concern to the union moguls. On it may depend, in large measure, their very existence.

Does It Mean Split?

The smaller unions know that the Big Three intended to take the reins into their own hands. They are determined to keep control themselves.

As yet, no solution has been found. The A. F. of L. itself must support the Big Three. But it must also find some solution soon if one group or the other is not to pull out of the Federation ranks entirely. The situation is already giving plenty of headaches to the executive council of the Federation. They know that unless some compromise can be patched up and patched up soon, a jurisdictional war is likely to ensue which will make all those which have gone before look like sham battles. Such a conflict, in fact, may go so far and be so vicious that unionism may be practically wiped out in the industry. The building trades organizations, furthermore, have always been the financial and political backbone of the Federation old guard. Unshakably conservative in their policies, they have constituted a Rock of Gibraltar against progressive ideas.

For their own self preservation, some sort of settlement will have to be worked out. Indications are that some sort of compromise will be concluded in time to prevent all around throat-cutting from killing organizations in the industry.

Basically, however, the conflict will continue until the reign of bureaucracy, gangsterism and corruption is wiped out, and until steps toward industrial unionism are taken. That is the job of the progressives.

Department Stores

There are few cases on record of strikes of department store employees. The labor turnover is great, the percentage of skilled workers small. Employees generally consider their jobs as temporary and are unwilling to organize on that basis. In Milwaukee, however, 1,500 employees of the Boston store have gone out in a strike which presents a number of interesting angles. The workers are organized into a number of craft unions of which three—clerks, janitors and truck drivers—have struck. Four other groups—the electricians, painters, carpenters and linoleum layers—have remained on the job because of contracts and are working side by side with scabs.

Incomes Under $25,000 Shrink, Tax Returns Show

President Roosevelt once remarked, echoing Adolf Hitler, that his New Deal would redistribute wealth. There is hardly a person left outside of Germany who still believes that Hitler is redistributing wealth; but a good many Americans who took Roosevelt seriously were unpleasantly surprised by the report, on Monday, of the U. S. Income Tax Bureau.

In the calendar year 1933 there was a rise of 25 in the number of people reporting a million dollar a year income. Mind, a million dollar income, not a million dollar capital, but a million dollar profit in one year, or about $3,000 per day. There were twenty million-dollar boys in 1932; in 1933, even though the first two months of that year saw the very lowest depression culminating in the bank crash, the New Deal in the remaining nine months succeeded in creating 26 new financial monsters, bringing the total up to 46.

"Redistributing" Wealth
That isn't all. Income tax returns are tabulated according to classes. There is the million dollar class, the five-hundred thousand dollar class and so on down to the thousand dollar class. (Incidentally one unnamed man, in a class by himself, reported an income of five million, $15,000 per day!)

Both the number of incomes and the amount of the incomes above $25,000 per year increased, while both the number and the total amount in the classes below $25,000 decreased. Guess which way wealth is being distributed by the New Deal!

Where did the money come from? Wages and salaries reported to the bureau totaled 7.7 billion dollars in

Wealthy Americans

Twelve billion or one-third of the $36,000,000,000 now on deposit in the banks of the country is owned by 49,900,000 small depositors, according to figures released recently by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. This figures out at an average deposit of $240.

Twenty-four billion or two-thirds is owned by 800,000 other depositors. They average $30,000 each. Nothing is said about the financial status of the other 70 million who make up the population.

We know, however, that 18,000,000 of them are being "kept alive" by relief.

Mooney May Be Pardoned

SAN FRANCISCO.—While the working class anxiously awaits the results of Tom Mooney's recent appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court (an appeal which would have more assurance of success if there were an organized and militant movement fighting for Mooney), rumors are afloat in California to the effect that the newly re-elected Governor, Frank P. Merriam of strike-breaking fame, is contemplating the pardon of Mooney.

Mooney has for years refused a conditional parole or pardon. Strenuously maintaining his innocence of the crime he was charged with, he has conducted a bold battle for unconditional release from San Quentin prison where he was incarcerated 18 years ago at the behest of the organized bosses of California. Merriam, who was elected by the skin of his teeth, is thinking of releasing Mooney in order to gain a little popularity among the California workers who hate his very bones. The reasons for the change are described as follows by George F. West, New York Times correspondent in San Francisco:

"A strong conservative minority embracing some of the most influential business men in San Francisco have long been saying privately that the Mooney agitation should be ended by executive action, preferably a commutation of sentence that would release Mooney with no opportunity to accept or reject; a choice that would be his should the method of release take the form of a parole, for which Mooney has repeatedly said he would never ask. MARCH
OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

The Chaotic Balkans

Once more the Balkan caldron threatens to boil over. In retaliation for the assassination of the dictator Alexander by Croat terrorists, the Yugoslavs, accusing the Hungarians of complicity, are resorting to wholesale deportation of Hungarians. Official figures issued by the Yugoslavian authorities place the number of those driven out in the most ruthless fashion at three thousand. Yet Belgrade denies that this is a "mass" deportation; it is merely getting rid of undesirable individuals. The Hungarians, whose irredentist struggle to regain territory lost in the War is one of the factors in present Balkan intrigue, have not been behindhand in the expulsion of Yugoslavs. The tension existing at the borders of these two countries is only one added strain among the many tending to tear asunder European civilization and to bring about the second World War.

Inssofar as the Balkans were concerned the first World War represented in actuality only a third unfinished Balkan war. It solved nothing but the temporary question of greater military strength. The present economic chaos in Europe is the outcome of the arrested development of the proletarian revolution after the World War. That tremendous upheaval signified the revolt of the productive forces of world economy against the outworn system of national capitalist states. By the failure of the proletarian revolution to spread, the bourgeoisie was permitted to remain in control of the national states and thereby to set in motion once again all the reactionary forces of capitalist imperialism. Thus the Balkans become anew the pawns of the Great Powers in their intrigues for world domination. Today, as at the end of the War, there can be only one real solution for the insoluble contradictions of capitalism that will inevitably make a bloody shambles of the Balkans: the creation under the hegemony of the proletariat of the Soviet Federation of the Balkans as part of the Soviet United States of Europe.

Italian Foreign Exchange Monopoly

The intense economic warfare of the capitalist nations for the capture of foreign markets during the world crisis unfolds itself in one aspect through the war of currency depreciation. The manipulation of currencies to make goods cheaper on the world market so as to regain a vanishing export trade, was accompanied in all the countries resorting to this weapon by a drive on the living standards of the masses, by a lowering of wages as the other method of producing goods more cheaply. The currency difficulties are far from over and continue to disrupt world economy as one country after the other finds itself in a condition bordering on bankruptcy.

Now it is the turn of Italy to resort to desperate measures to stave off a complete breakdown. Fascist Italy made drastic cuts in wages and salaries by decree in the vain attempt to meet cutthroat competition. Despite all efforts of the Italian capitalists to unload all their difficulties on the backs of the workers and peasants, the fascists now find their gold reserves down close to the minimum permitted by law. The lira is at its lowest value since May 1931. Hence Mussolini has decreed a government monopoly of foreign exchange through the National Exchange Institute.

All private citizens and corporations are required to make available to this Institute all their foreign credits and holdings. Even foreign securities will be registered in case they must be used to prevent Italy from going off the gold standard and from losing her last gold reserves. A similar situation drove Hitler to attempt the complete withdrawal of German economy from world economy—through the reactionary ideas of autarchy. Mussolini may be forced to take similar measures to protect the Italian bourgeoisie from the onslaught of world forces of capitalism.

Scrapping the NRA

As the legal end of the NRA approaches, the reactionary forces of American capitalism wish to make sure that there will be no continuance of government interference or control of business in any form whatsoever. Hence there is a concerted effort on the part of big business to apply the utmost pressure to all government agencies to carry out its reactionary program. An address by Jordan of the National Industrial Conference Board delivered at the Philadelphia meeting of the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences, sets forth all the planks desired by the big finance capitalists. He calls for the reduction of the heavy surtaxes on individual and corporate income, the relaxation of the Security Act, the lifting of restrictions regarding minimum wages, maximum hours and the collective bargaining provisions of the NRA (scrapping of the 7-a clause), the cessation of the expenditure of Federal funds for relief, the extension of the CCC and of the subsistence homestead idea, the deportation of alien unemployed, forced labor for other unemployed,

SOCIALIST PARTY TURNS TO THE RIGHT

The American Socialist Party turned sharply to the right at last week's three-day session of the National Executive Committee in Boston.

Six months of persistent pounding by the right wing extremists finally produced results. Of the ten N.E.C. members elected on the Militant slate in the heterogeneous amalgamation which rallied around the centrist Declaration of Principles at the June convention, seven definitely lined up with the right wing, while the remaining three retreated before the right wing attack on every issue.

The reorganized right wing of the N.E.C. immediately showed its colors, by accepting in essence the position of the reactionary New York State-Pennsylvania combination of Waldman-Solomon-Limbach, etc. on the three most important issues.

Thumbs Down on United Front

Consideration of united front negotiations was repudiated by the N.E.C. The avowed spokesman for the New York-Pennsylvania reactionaries, James O'Neal, was joined by four elected on the Militant slate (James D. Graham of Montana, Mayor Dan Hoan of Milwaukee, Albert Sprague Coolidge of Massachusetts and Darlington Hoopes of Pennsylvania) in a motion categorically and unequivocally rejected the united front with the Communist party or "splinter parties" under any circumstances until the 1938 party convention. There was a tie vote for this motion. Whereupon Maynard Krueger, Chicago Militant leader, prepared jointly with Hoopes a face-saving compromise which affirmed the united front "in principle"—but put it off, in exact accordance with the right wing demand, until the 1938 convention! Local united fronts are permitted in organized states upon specific permission from the State Committee and from the N.E.C. in unorganized states. O'Neal from the right and Hapgood and Daniel from the left voted against this resolution.

Since Thomas and Krueger voted for it, the Militants have been privately palming off this retreat as a clever maneuver which would actually allow them to have united fronts in unorganized states, in Illinois, and among the youth, etc. But Thomas destroyed this pretense by some frank talk in the New Leader of Dec. 8: "So far as the action of the N.E.C. is a victory for one group or another, I should say that it was clearly a victory for that group in the party which I am convinced is a majority, which de-

Million Dollar
Incomes Rise

Now we can see where the big shots over $25,000 per year got their money. While wages and salaries as a total decreased, the big shots took a much larger proportion. While dividends as a total decreased, the big shots were able to capitalize on their stocks by speculation.

It should be noted that income tax returns are filed by only about eight per cent of the total number of gainfully employed in the United States. The lowest class is the thousand dollar a year class, and the members of this category are subject to many exemptions, such as dependents, wives or children. Hence the number of actual working class people represented in the returns is comparatively small. What the decrease in the incomes under $25,000 as compared to an increase in incomes over that figure represent is the entrenchment of big capitalists at the expense of and to the ruin of the small business men and high waged working class people.

It is just this petty bourgeoisie and labor aristocracy which forms one of the bulwarks against revolution. The New Deal, by depleting this class is separating the population all the more sharply into clear, opposing groups. Thus while Roosevelt's "redistribution" is actually the same old concentration, the New Deal is preparing the conditions for a real redistribution through a socialist revolution.

What the Figures Show

The New York Times, in commenting on these figures, remarks that the decrease in the lower groups cannot be taken to indicate a decrease in working class wages generally. This is quite true, for as shown the figures include only the labor aristocracy.

In any case the Times is up a tree, for as a matter of fact, the A. F. of L. reported that working class wages generally did not rise noticeably during 1933. The figures for 16 chief industries rose from an average weekly wage of $20.53 at the beginning of the year, to $20.56 at the end of the year. A gain of 3c per week. And that gain of 15 per cent in wages was overwhelmed by a rise of 7 per cent in food prices and 21 per cent in clothing and furnishings!

No matter how you look at it the result is the same. The working class is worse off than ever, the labor aristocracy and the petty bourgeoisie are being ruined, and large scale capital continues to grow larger.

sires no negotiations on the united front."

The Position of Thomas

In the same column, Thomas admits that the only differences among the right wing majority was concerning the phrasing of this position. When the intransigent Waldman-Solomon group after the meeting continued to criticize the N.E.C. repudiation of united front negotiations as insufficient, Thomas a letter to the N. Y. Times of Dec. 8 and Mayor Hoan in a statement to the press (N. Y. Post, Dec. 3), accused Waldman's group of misrepresenting the N.E.C., and proceeded to compete with Waldman in denouncing any united front with Communists. Since, in line with the non-aggression pact affirmed in France, the Stalinist offer here is actually a capitulation to the Social Democratic idea of a united front as a "non-aggression pact", the N.E.C. repudiation of a united front reveals starkly the cowardice of the Militants (Krueger) and the ultra-reformism of Thomas, Krzycki & Co.

In a score of public statements the New York and Pennsylvania State Committees, controlled by the reactionaries, have openly refused to be bound by the majority decision of the referendum on the Declaration of Principles. This outright breach of party discipline was not only tacitly condoned by the N.E.C. majority, but the "true blue" leftists, Krueger, Hapgood and Daniel, did not even introduce a motion to censure this violation of party democracy.

Instead the Declaration of Principles was morally buried and the sod piled on it to the height of six feet, by the passage of a resolution designating a committee to receive proposals for restating the Declaration which won a referendum only a month ago!

Move to Expel Left Wing

The N.E.C. majority's rapprochement with the reactionaries was accompanied by an attack on the revolutionary elements who still find themselves in the Socialist Party. A resolution was passed practically reading the Revolutionary Policy Committee out of the Party. The R.P.C. is but a small segment of the left wing, and is unpopular even among revolutionaries in the Party because of its erratic career and its Lovestonist complexion. But the resolution against it, introduced by the reactionary O'Neal, makes obvious that the attack is really directed against all revolutionaries, for after mentioning the R.P.C., it says:

"The acceptance by a group of party members of doctrines which include the theory that armed insurrection is a proper Socialist method of achieving Socialist aims is viewed by the National Executive Committee as a dangerous departure from Socialist principles and tactics. It leads the workers into unnecessary dangers, exposes the Socialist movement to the intrigues of agents provocateurs, diverts the workers from the work of organization and education as the basic means of attaining power, and commits the Socialist Party to the use of methods that will delay, instead of hasten, the triumph of Socialist ideals. We hold that such doctrines are not only in conflict with the position of the Socialist Party, but are subversive of its aims and purposes."

"Shocked Beyond Words"

One is not surprised to find that not only did Thomas vote for this reactionary resolution, but orally added that he was "shocked beyond words" by the R.P.C.'s stand. But it is surprising to observe how precipitately the N.E.C.'s "left wing" of Krueger, Daniel and Hapgood retreated. They must know what the relation is between armed insurrection and the dictatorship of the proletariat which they have on previous occasions avowed. They could have pointed out, as against Thomas' accusation against the R.P.C. that "these people have arrogated to themselves the right to commit the party to a program that will endanger their own members", that the fundamental issue at stake was the essential implications of the theory of revolution. To those who have taken seriously their previous avowals, Krueger, Daniel and Hapgood owed it as a duty to openly affirm a revolutionary position, if they held it. Here, for the first time in a period of internal party confusion, the issue of reform versus revolution was sharply thrust forward. Here was the opportunity to draw the line between revolutionists and reformists. But for such a task the so-called left proved incompetent. They contented themselves with defending the R.P.C. on the grounds of the right of freedom of opinion within the party. This formless, liberal position without content, might be justified under other conditions, but certainly not at a time when the burning question to be settled in the Socialist Party is, according to the "left's" own claims, "Who shall prevail, reformist or revolutionist?"

Right Wing Presses Forward

With this mandate from the "leftist" N.E.C. at last Sunday's meeting, the New York State Committee moved to expel all members of the R.P.C. With a similar mandate from the N.E.C. calling upon all organized factions to dissolve, the N. Y. Committee made its first move, not only against revolutionaries, but to break up the Militant caucus. Undoubtedly the first use of this prohibition will be made in a right wing move to prevent the Militants from gaining further votes in the New York City central committee elections. Already the right wing is preventing the seating of newly-elected Militant delegates on various pretexts. Now they have a real excuse. One may predict that in the next few weeks delegates will be refused seats on the grounds that they were elected by illegal caucuses.

As a further gesture of good will toward the right wing extremists the N.E.C. set up a committee to move for a farmer-labor party and gave a majority on it to the die-hard right wingers. This means that the Julius Gersbers, Sarah Limbachs and James D. Grams will dominate all the future negotiations for united political action.

Aim to "Cleanse" the Party

Pressing their advantage, the right wing extremists continue to express themselves as dissatisfied with the concessions made to them. The right wingers want an end to all ambiguities: they want the S.P. unequivocally committed to classical reformism on the model of the German Social Democracy or, better still, the British Labor Party. And now, after the Boston meeting of the N.E.C., they feel confident they can get what they want. If they have pushed the Militants and the Thomas group so far, they can now unite with Thomas, Hoan & Co. against the Militants and those to the left of the Militants. To "cleanse" the S.P. of all revolutionary elements, to break up the centrist current—these are the immediate steps which the right wing proposes, and the Boston meeting shows that most of the N.E.C. will aid them in this reactionary task, while the present leadership of the Militant group is incapable of fighting back.

What perspective does this situation leave for those ex-communists who recently flopped into the S. P. on the theory that it was becoming "the party of revolutionary unity"?

Mooney May Be Pardoned

"Some such action by Mr. Merriam as a commutation thus would not be so surprising as it might appear on first thought, and it would be hailed by shrewd conservatives as a wise and clever move. It would scotch the Mooney agitation, obviously one of the greatest assets of the communists and other radicals, and it would be just the gesture for which Mr. Merriam is looking to allay the bad feeling left over from the Sinclair campaign and to back up his own liberal professions.

"There is no question that Mr. Merriam keenly resents the assumption widely prevalent during the campaign that he is a pliable agent of reactionary interests and that he would welcome an opportunity to show that he is capable of acting decisively on his own responsibility."

Here is a remarkable tribute, in a capitalist paper, to the validity of mass pressure as a working class political instrument. True, the Stalinists by their fake 1932 Mooney Congress in Chicago (since denounced by Mooney himself), managed to dissipate a great opportunity to build a real militant mass campaign. But despite the lack of organization and leadership, pro-Mooney sentiment has never died out and the working class, not only of the west coast but of the whole country, has never ceased to be intensely interested in the fate of Tom Mooney.

It is because of this attitude of the masses, and a desire to take on a liberal and reformist coat in a period when the workers are being more and more disillusioned about capitalist politicians, that Merriam is now contemplating the release of Mooney. Should he take the step, he will be owed no gratitude by the workers.

Nor will we alter our ideas of capitalist "justice". Those liberal and reformist fakers who will "feel" a "new confidence" in the working of the American boss-class system of justice, are ornery swindlers. An innocent man has been jailed for almost two decades while everybody has known that he has been innocent. To release him now, when the workers are in so angry a mood on this and a thousand other questions, is a mere maneuver. Mooney will walk out of San Quentin, if ever, as the result of the powerful effect of mass pressure, not because of "justice".

At this time more than ever, agitation must be carried on for the release of Mooney.

WORLD

Lerroux-Gil Robles on Tightrope

All is not well with the Lerroux-Gil Robles regime in Spain. With the solution of a partial cabinet crisis last month when several ministers resigned, the government still finds it necessary to maintain a treading position between the aggressive Monarchist-Rightist bloc and the masses who are already preparing to avenge the October defeat.

Although thousands have been arrested only two persons have been actually executed for activity during the uprising.

Another indication of the manner in which the government is forced to offer concessions to the masses was to be seen in a conference held by the Minister of Agriculture (the Popular Actionist—Jelencz-Fernandez) in Badajoz last week-end.

This Catholic-Fascist minister, meeting with representatives of peasant and agricultural workers organizations and representatives of the landowners, proposed to the latter that they voluntarily commence a division of the land among landless families. He went on to threaten that if the landowners did not do this he would then propose a law in the Cortes for the Government to divide the estates "at once", arranging later for indemnization.

On the other hand, the forty-eight (48) hour week in the metal-mining and smelting industries has been reestablished by decree, replacing the forty-four (44) hour week won as a result of the last summer's strike. The Asturias coal mines have at last been reopened, it being required that every miner carry an identification card issued by the authorities in return for his finger prints and one rifle. Until the Asturias mines are again functioning normally the coal companies are being allowed to use duty free British coal to fill pressing orders.

The newly constituted bloc of Monarchist and Rightist parties threatens to overshadow all of the other reactionary forces of the country. It is proposed to fuse the church and state into a single monolithic whole with the whole reorganization of the government along corporate lines. If the new bloc is successful in its purposes the stars of both Lerroux and Gil Robles will be considerably dimmed if not entirely blotted out. Every effort is being made by the present regime to check the advance of this formidable foe on the right. The censorship has prevented the publication of the first programmatic manifesto of the new combination.

Bolivia Makes Last Stand

The new regime established in Bolivia following the overthrow of the Saavedra government is making a last desperate attempt to stem the victorious advance of the British-supported Paraguayan army. Wall Street's puppets could not agree on how to run the war so Saavedra was arrested in the customary, persuasive Latin-American fashion.

Were it not for the continual injection of new blood from Chile into the veins of Bolivia's economic structure, it would have been impossible for that country to have held out as long as it has done. The last available resources of the country both in war material and man-power are now being massed for one final effort.

Unless the Chaco War spreads to other South American countries, it is very likely that the North American munitions manufacturers will be obliged to look for another arms embargo to break.

PRICES RISE IN GERMANY

HAMBURG (T.I.S.)—Prices are sky-rocketing in the New Germany. This is best shown by a comparison of wholesale prices as officially quoted on January 25, 1933 (a few days before Hitler came into power), and the end of October, 1934. Taking the average price level as 100, prices were as follows:

GERMAN ARYANS RUNNING

AMUCK

BERLIN (T.I.S.)—An all-time height of Aryan legislation has been reached by a decision of the Reich's chamber of lawyers, concerning the officially requested dissolution of a prominent German law firm. The partners in this firm are father and son, and the dissolution was ordered on the ground that the father is a non-Aryan (he has a Jewish grandmother) while his son is an Aryan, "since the Aryan rule applies only to the last three generations". It would be unthinkable to concede a partnership between the two under such circumstances, aside from the fact that such partnership between an Aryan and non-Aryan is expressly forbidden by law.

The National Unemployed League

History and Methods

(Ed. Note.—This is the first of a series of articles on the history and methods of the National Unemployed Leagues, the strongest and most substantial organizations in the unemployment field.)

By LOUIS BREIER

A brief history of the National Unemployed League necessarily involves a history of the unemployed movement as a whole. As it stands today, the N.U.L. represents the highest point in a long process of development and transition from the first, uncertain attempts of the "technically" unemployed to organize on a "Self-Help" or "Chiselling" basis in 1920 to class-conscious and militant organizations with policies of cooperation in struggles of the employed workers (and leadership, as in the case of the famous Toledo Auto-parts strike) and a trend to political consciousness.

The earliest history of the unemployed movement must be classified according to the methods used. Roughly, therefore, we may divide it as follows: a) Self-Help, b) Mass-Pressure, c) United action with the employed workers and a growing political consciousness. None of these stages should be taken as utterly distinct. They are progressive stages and the political stage, of course, combines with the Mass-Pressure stage. There are, however, Mass-Pressure groups that have failed as yet to derive political clarity from their activities. And though Self-Help organizations have largely ceased to exist, the remaining examples manage to eke out a precarious life by virtue of adding a measure of Mass-Pressure tactics to their "Barter" or "Chiselling" policies.

Furthermore it should be noted that many of the thriving organizations never went through the first or "Chiselling" stage, but were organized directly as Mass-Pressure groups. Such, for example, was the case with many of the leagues affiliated with the National Unemployed League, which were organized by the Conference for Progressive Labor Action. But on the whole, the characteristic history of an unemployed organization is its formation on a Self-Help basis, its development into a Mass-Pressure organization through realization of the futility of self-help tactics and its transition to a stage combining militant tactics with a progressive political understanding.

"Self-Help" and Barter Schemes

Three years ago, then, the greater portion of the unemployed movement was comprised of Self-Help organizations. The philosophy that called these organizations into being (and received the full support of President Hoover, the Chamber of Commerce and all the local or national organizations of conspicuous mercy) can be condensed as "Planned Economy in Garbage-picking." Unemployment was a temporary aberration on the part of capitalism, man's noblest institution, and the one purpose of these groups was to tide the unemployed over from the Crash to the Prosperity that was just around the corner. To that end they were put to work chiselling scraps of meat, bread, old clothing remnants etc. from the merchants; offering their services to farmers during harvest time in return for a share of the crop; clearing forest tracts for the privilege of burning brushwood and scrub. Later, when the patience of merchants began to wear thin and the federal government peeked at the unemployment problem and decided to handle it as the Agricultural Department handles insect pests, by charts and advice, the Barter system began to supplement Self-Help.

At this stage it was no longer supposed that Prosperity was hiding behind a curtain like an old maid stretching out the anticipation of a kiss as long as possible. Instead it was thought that Capitalism was a trifle "tired" and needed only to be primed by an artificial resumption of services and the distribution of commodities (a nice homespun metaphysics since adopted by the N.R.A.). The Barter system was guaranteed to do this, by what devious economic law does not concern us here, and elaborate systems were set-up in various parts of the country, reaching its highest stage of development in Seattle, where the Unemployed Citizens League was able to put its members to work in abandoned factories, canneries, fisheries, etc. The strong family resemblance of this scheme to Sinclair's "Epic Plan" and the government's "Ohio Plan" should be noted. Distribution of the products ranged from the simple "share and share alike" method to the use of scrip.

From "Self-Help" to Mass Pressure

The publicity given to the Self-Help and Barter movement was copious and generally friendly and called many such organizations into existence. A few of the localities and organizations involved were: Seattle, Tacoma and other parts of Washington; the California Cooperative Relief Association concentrated in the southern part of the state; the Natural Development Association of Utah which later spread into Idaho and Colorado. There were local Self-Help organizations in Philadelphia, Allentown, Dayton and a number of other cities. The Mutual Exchange with headquarters in New York was an effort to coordinate the Self-Help movement on a national scale.

While most of these groups rapidly disintegrated under the impact of objective realities or were snuffed up by enterprising old-line politicians (as was the case with the Seattle organization) others provided the base for the development of Mass-Pressure groups, going through the transition already described. Examples are Allentown and Belmont County, Ohio. In Allentown efforts were made from the very inception of the organization to substitute Mass-Pressure for Self-Help but the membership blithely continued to pick peaches on neighboring farms until by the sheer pressure of circumstance and peace juice these tactics were suddenly dropped and attention was turned to the business of stopping evictions by mass-demonstrations, buying sheriffed farms for a nickel, boosting relief schedules by invading relief offices, etc. Trucks, buildings and other paraphernalia cheerfully contributed to the Allentown league by the city government and the local civic leaders as a reward for chasing its own tail. are now used to transport pickets and demonstrators; the buildings harbor every manner of "dangerous doctrine."

C.P.L.A. Enters Field

When the Conference for Progressive Labor Action entered the unemployed field, it advocated pressure on the state and federal governments and public officials for direct and substantial relief and the unity of the unemployed and employed on the industrial front.

At the same time the Communist Party, in the field since 1929, had demonstrated its inability to organize their Unemployed Councils outside of the large, industrial cities, especially in the smaller cities and towns and in rural areas. Where Unemployed Councils were successfully organized, they demonstrated a remarkably brief span of life, due undoubtedly to the familiar C. P. policies of mechanical control and wholesale indoctrination. The National Hunger Marches of 1930 and 1931 as well as several state marches and demonstrations in the larger cities afforded the general impression that the C.P. was leading an effective fight for the unemployed and achieving an inclusive organization.

The Socialist Party, after a long period during which it regarded the unemployed with mingled friendliness and indifference, made its bid for leadership by the organization of the Chicago Workers Committee and the publication of the "Unemployed", a magazine which gave out the news that the unemployed could vote themselves out of the bread lines and which terminated publication after three issues. However, any analysis of the unemployed situation revealed the fact, that in spite of claims to the contrary, the vast majority of the unemployed remained unorganized and were not following either C.P. or S.P. leadership, or were dedicated to the various Self-Help and Self-Flagellation schemes. There was no effective national organization.

Moves for National Organization

The S.P. recognized the need for a unifying national organization even as the C.P.L.A. did. But their solution to the problem was to set up a loose federation of unemployed groups through a conference of the top leadership—a device which the S.P. seems unable to abandon and which they are attempting to use at the present time. A preliminary conference to set up a National Federation to which unemployed leaders were invited was held in Chicago in November of 1932. The formal conference was not held until the May of 1933, following the Continental Congress white elephant in Washington.

In the meantime, the C.P.L.A. was placing most of its forces into the organization of the unemployed, especially concentrating on the building of the Ohio Unemployed League. A conference of local leagues was held in Niles, Ohio on October 2, 1932 which was followed by a convention on November 6, 1932 when a temporary state organization was established. This much accomplished, an intensive organization drive was instituted which culminated in the convention in Columbus on February 27-28, 1933 when the state league was finally instituted by delegates from leagues in most of the counties, cities, villages and hamlets in Ohio.

It was this convention that determined to call a National convention of the unemployed on July 3-5. To insure the widest possible rank and file representation and to avoid another still-born aggregation of scattered groupings, the call to the national convention stipulated that 5 delegates were to be sent from each local league. The distribution of this call stimulated organization of leagues in Pennsylvania, North Carolina, West Virginia and other states. It was also sent to every established organization of the unemployed which the Ohio league could contact.

The New Militant

THE New Militant makes its appearance as the official weekly organ of the Workers Party. As such, it will not be independent or neutral but will strive in all respects to represent the aims and ideals of the party as laid down in the Declaration of Principles and to reflect its revolutionary spirit.

The vanguard political party is the highest expression of working class organization and a party organ, consequently, is the highest type of paper. Our aim, however, is not to publish a "house organ" for restricted party circles, but a political organ for the masses. We hope to popularize the New Militant without diluting its political and party character. Such a combination is what is needed to serve the aims we have in mind. If we succeed in this endeavor the New Militant will soon make a place all its own in the field of labor journalism.

The main line of the New Militant will be the attack against capitalism, the exposure of its frauds and intrigues, and the advocacy of the socialist order of society. As we see the situation, the chief recruiting ground of the new party, even in the early stages of its struggle, is among the politically unorganized but grievously oppressed and bitterly discontented masses of American workers. The main appeal of the New Militant will be directed to them.

They are the forces for the new party. They are the troops of the American revolution. They have long remained indifferent to working class politics of any kind. The political labor movement, reformist as well as revolutionary, has been a comparatively small and isolated circle. But the conditions have matured for a great and rapid transformation. The two gigantic strike waves we have seen were heralds of a mass participation in the political movement as well.

The American workers are moving now in true American style—rapidly and with militant disregard for any kind of obstructions. The New Militant will march with them, talk to them in their own language, and aid them in their struggle. To awaken the discontented workers to class consciousness and draw them toward the party in the course of their experiences in the class struggle—this will be the chief endeavor of the New Militant.

The road to the masses is through the vanguard. Our paper can become a power among the masses only if it organizes and educates the advanced workers as it goes along. The fundamental nucleus of revolutionary militants which has been assembled at the founding of the Workers Party is only a beginning. Thousands of others, scattered and disorganized by the long period of disintegration in the movement, belong with the party right now. The New Militant will help them to find their place in the party ranks. In this field quality is what counts. Every class conscious worker is important. Every honest rebel against capitalism is dear to us and we hope to make our paper their paper. To that end the New Militant will provide them with accurate information about all phases of the movement, about the activities of other labor organizations at home and abroad, and strive to illuminate all the important questions of the day with the light of Marxist principle.

We must make our revolution in America, not in some other country and not on the moon. That means, if we are to go to our work seriously, that our paper must concern itself primarily with the actualities of American life and talk to the workers in their own language. It is necessary to show that we understand them in order to make them understand us. The American people have not inherited conservatism nor the tendency to balk at revolutionary solutions. They overthrow the rule of a king and broke the institutions of chattel slavery by means that were far from polite. The history of the labor movement of the country, on the whole, is a magnificent history of militant struggle. Our paper can and should appeal to these traditions in its agitation among the masses. It can and should be distinctively American in its methods of approach and its realistic concentration on the concrete tasks at hand.

But the world we live in is a unit and the liberating workers' revolution, as our Declaration of Principles truly says, is by its very nature international in character. One cannot even begin to think straight about a national revolution unless he proceeds from this point of view. We don't believe in the dogma of "socialism in one country", for the United States or for Russia. We see our American revolution as one link in the chain of revolutions which will emancipate the world from capitalism and establish world socialism. This conception stands in the center of the system of ideas which binds us together and animates all our work on national grounds. The New Militant, in all its departments, will reflect this revolutionary internationalist point of view.

Non-Partisan Defense

THE Workers Party founding convention went on record for the idea of a militant defense organization embracing workers and sympathetic elements of diverse political views, for a united class fight for mutual defense interests. Earlier, the A.W.P. and the C.L.A. had vigorously supported this idea when it was broached by the Provisional Committee for Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

The N.P.L.D., while limited in forces, has won a good name in struggle. When the I.L.D. refused to raise a finger for four young German workers deported from Holland to Fascist Germany, the N.P.L.D. organized the protest movement in this country. The N.P.L.D. played an important part in the fight against New York police brutality which led to the resignation of Commissioner O'Ryan. It was to the fore in local protest movements against government strike-breaking moves on the Gulf Coast, in Toledo, Minneapolis and San Francisco.

Last week the N.P.L.D. was able to announce that it had saved Antonio Bellussi, militant anti-Fascist, from danger of deportation to Fascist Italy. Now comes news that a committee set up on the initiative of and led by members of the N.P.L.D., has won a signal victory in obtaining the release from Sing Sing of Harold Robins and Andrea Gras, strikers framed on a charge of beating scabs in the New York hotel strike. The two workers may have to undergo a new trial, but in any case their first conviction is reversed through the legal fight of the N.P.L.D. The superior court admitted that Robins and Gras were convicted due to the prejudiced conduct of the notorious anti-labor trial judge, Corrigan.

Revolutionary workers now in the W. P. played an important part in the united front for Robins and Gras. The N.P.L.D. was also able to draw into active work the Socialist Lawyers Association one of whose members was Robins' counsel in the appeal.

The W. P. is ready to go further in support of the N.P.L.D.'s plans. Even since June, when the N.E.C. of the S.P. gave favorable, though formal, recognition to the idea, we have urged conclusive action. Almost three months ago a draft plan was approved by representatives of the C.L.A., the A.W.P. and the S.P. Since then the S.P. representatives have taken no action. That some elements in the S.P. are opposed in principle to collaboration with revolutionaries even against the worst reactionaries, everybody knows. What rank-and-file Socialists should ask, however, is why the "militants", who claim to have a majority in the N.E.C., constantly avoid a final decision on the pressing question of setting up a broad, militant defense organization.

The history of the I.L.D. in the Dutch case; in the Bellussi case, where it sabotaged the defense because the defendant was suspected of "Trotskyism"; in the Robins-Gras case, where it refused all collaboration and constantly maneuvered to sabotage the united front committee; in Scottsboro, where its policies have jeopardized the whole cause and where it is now begging the reactionary Samuel S. Leibowitz for a united front—all these facts and many more make clear that the I.L.D. is not to be thought of as a defense instrument of the workers.

A militant, non-partisan defense organization is a crying class need today. The Workers Party has put the building of such an organization on its program. It is ready and willing to cooperate with other organizations to build it. The Socialist Party ought to give some definite answer to the N.P.L.D., or to make clear that it is unable or unwilling to carry out in action its verbal commitment of last June. The N.P.L.D., far from having confirmed the diagnosis made last April by the I.L.D.—that it "died aborning"—has grown constantly stronger. Its further work should not be jeopardized by anybody's passivity. The W. P. calls for action on this matter.

Anti-Crime War Aimed at Lone Killers - while Bankers and War Makers Get Protection

WASHINGTON—While the Senate committee investigating the munitions industry continued to unearth graft and corruption involving some of the biggest names in the country, righteous speeches were being made at the Attorney General's four-day conference on crime.

In none of these speeches, however, was reference made to the DuPonts, the Morgans or the Rockefellers. Neither was anything said about the bankers who steal their depositors' money, nor about the Wall Street manipulators who rob small investors of billions of dollars, nor about the industrial barons—the Weltons, the Mellons, the Fords—who employ armies of gunmen to shoot and terrorize their workers.

Of a Lower Order

The crime the Attorney General's conference dealt with was of a lower order. It was concerned with kidnappings, blackmail, banditry, burglaries, etc. And it was against the Dillingers, the Hauptmanns, the Baby-faced Nelsons and their kind that the speeches and the indignation were directed. It appears that criminals of this type are increasing with great rapidity, and are becoming exceedingly bold and arrogant.

"It is amazing that such a situation as now exists is possible at this stage of our civilization," declared Attorney General Cummings. "When officers of the law are forced to engage in drawn battles on public highways, in railroad stations and elsewhere, armed with the desperate implements of modern warfare, we realize the danger which is involved and the menacing character of those who thus boldly defy the powers of our government."

No Reference to Causes

Although the increase in the number of criminals and their boldness was referred to by nearly all speakers very little was said about the causes underlying this increase—with the exception of blaming it on the newspapers, the radio and the "attitude of the public".

President Roosevelt, in his speech at the opening session, did say that "crime is a symptom of social disorder" but his remedy for this disorder was a vague reference to "marshalling the assets of home, school, church, community and other social agencies to work in common purpose with our law enforcement agencies". What this purpose is, aside from more efficient shooting and capturing the pickpockets, the gunmen and other such criminals he did not say.

J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Justice Department's Bureau of Investigation, described what in his opinion was the reason more of these small criminals are not put in the morgue. "Until political pressure is removed," said Hoover, "we must regard the eradication of gangs like that of Dillinger, Floyd, Bailey and others as transitional phases of a condition which can change overnight."

"Political Pressure"

Mr. Hoover did not define the nature of this "political pressure" but what he apparently meant is that these lesser criminals are only the agents of higher-ups who by their respectable position in society are able to give them protection.

PAMPHLET PUBLICATION PROGRAM

One of the main points in the six months concentration drive of the Party is the publication of a series of popular pamphlets on the important issues confronting the American working class.

It is planned to issue one new pamphlet monthly during this period, to sell at not more than 10c. In order to finance this work, subscriptions are being accepted for the first six pamphlets which will be mailed directly to the subscriber as soon as they are off the press. The price for the series is 50c.

Every member and sympathizer of the new Party should aid in the publication of these important pamphlets by subscribing immediately and getting their friends to do likewise. Subscriptions should be sent to the PIONEER PUBLISHERS, 102 East 11th Street, New York City.

Those able to make a contribution for this purpose should specify that the money is to be applied to the Publication Fund.

Had Mr. Hoover gone a step farther he would have pointed out that one of the reasons for the growing boldness of the gangster is the open flouting of the law by the big capitalists. The examples of the bankers and industrialists and their politicians are not exactly conducive to teaching respect for the government.

However, it was not the purpose of the Attorney General's conference on crime to discuss how to deal with the big criminals. As a matter of fact, it was observed by some who attended, the real purpose of the conference seemed to be to discover how best to protect the big criminals against their hirelings and agents. Since the burglars, the kidnapers and the blackmailers do not menace, excepting in a very slight degree, the welfare of the poor people—about 90 percent of the population—it seems reasonable to conclude, therefore, that it must be the wealthy people who are so excited about the "crime wave"

An Important Question

But when millions of children are undernourished and more than a fourth of the population of the country on the verge of starvation, while the rich continue to pile up millions in profit, why should the dispossessed get excited about killing the Dillingers, the Hauptmanns, the Baileys and their kind?

This question was not asked at the Attorney General's conference on crime. But undoubtedly the growing resentment of the poverty stricken masses was in the back of the minds of those who called the conference. And it is this resentment that they really fear. It is this resentment that the bosses are attempting to label as criminal.

FASCISM AT WORK

Mr. Hjalmar Schacht, who was a big capitalist banker before Hitler took power and who remains today a big capitalist banker, is more and more consolidating his strength in Germany. Today he is the dictator behind the scenes . . . and not so far behind Hitler jumps when he cracks the whip.

The discharge of Gottfried Feder from his official post in the Nazi government is Schacht's latest victory. Feder was Under-Secretary for Economics when Hitler first became Chancellor. He has been out down a few inches each six months or so, and now his official head is off altogether.

How important this is can be appreciated when one realizes that Feder was the author of the 25 so-called "unalterable theses" of the Nazi party on economic questions. Adopted by the Nazi founding fathers more than a decade ago, they were full of confused pseudo-socialist terminology. They raved on about abolition of "slavery of interest," proposed to nationalize all banks, and promised to put a flock of chickens in every German worker's pocket.

Capitalism, the Voelkischer Beobachter (chief Hitler organ) announces, is getting another chance to prove itself. Here is a quite candid confession that Hitler Fascism is nothing but capitalism in a new and more ruthless guise. The firing of Feder, author of the demagogic slogans which the Nazis used to recruit their army of dupes and desperados, is a symbol of the end of bluff about "national socialism".

What this Hitler capitalism means to the workers of Germany is revealed anew by every report about economic conditions which comes out of Germany.

A report from Thuringia in the Deutsche, Hitler newspaper, reveals the workers of that province of Germany to be in profound misery. At Tausche a glass-blower, with the help of his wife and six children working 10 hours daily at home, earns $8 weekly. The only food of thousands of families is potatoes and salt. At Steinheld, 225 out of 250 inhabitants live on relief alone . . . and very badly. Soneberg district reports 33,000 unemployed out of 80,000 inhabitants.

A Hamburg official reports that the "steadily employed workers" get only $5 a week for the two or three days weekly work they get. He calls this a wage "which is neither sufficient to live nor to die". Prices are constantly rising while wages drop. For example, agricultural products in 1934 cost 112.2 as compared to 95.8 in 1933; meats are up from an average of 67.2 to 79.8; dairy products are up from 88 to 111.3; textiles are up from 60.3 to 80.6.

The Berlin government reports a total paid-wage increase of only 1 percent for 1934 over 1933. This reveals a terrific real decrease in the workers' earning power, since more than 2,500,000 workers unemployed in 1933 now share the work (and wages) of those who were employed before. The standard of living of all has been lowered.

Recent news from Austria indicates that the Heimwehr variety of Fascism is just as "beneficial" to the workers as the Nazi variety. During the first half of 1933 total wages paid out in Vienna were 556,000,000; during the same period this year, the total was only 518,000,000. The income of the Vienna proletariat has fallen by 24 percent.

These trends have been duplicated for years in Fascist Italy. Mussolini, Hitler, Stahmerberg . . . all birds of the same feather. What they bring about is summed up by the exploiting class as "the restoration of national unity". Furthermore, "the trains run on time". The workers' organizations have been smashed, their resistance lowered, wages are cut, profits are maintained, the sun shines! That a whole generation of workers starves does not matter to the ruling class.

Launch Six Month Program

Philadelphia, Boston and New Haven in this month. The New York district is organizing a great mass meeting. The first national tour which will take Comrades Mute and Cannon to the high spots in New York, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, West Virginia and Pennsylvania has already been projected. Details will be found on another page in this issue.

Hold Unemployment Conference. A Provisional organization of the Trade Union Department of the party under National Organizer Arne Swaback has been set up. Conferences on the unemployed work have taken place and decisions arrived at are being carried out by Arnold Johnson in Ohio and Anthony Ramaglia in the anthracite district.

By the first of January party organizers will be at work in Illinois and Ohio.

The Political Committee has appointed an Educational Committee under the chairmanship of Hugo Oehler which will map out plans for carrying out section 7 of the Program of Action.

Must Raise $5,000. While the general program of action covers the six months period, the Party Foundation Fund of $5,000 must be raised by March 1.

Consequently special attention is given to this matter elsewhere in this issue. This sum can constitute only a beginning if we are really to measure up to the job which we have undertaken. However, if we can put over the Party Foundation Campaign in the next 60 days, it will give us an impetus that will carry us forward with leaps and bounds.

Wide Interest in Party. In the meantime every day brings evidence that the merger of two important groups and the launching of the new party have aroused widespread interest among the workers and are having tremendous repercussions in other political groups, especially the C.P. and S.P. where confusion, uncertainty and disintegration prevail. All the signs indicate that the party was launched at a most opportune time. Advantage must be taken of the opportunity that has been placed within our grasp. We do not have unlimited time at our disposal to do the job. We must work—every last member of the party—work hard, resolutely, untiringly for the 100 percent realization of the six months Program of Action of the Workers Party.

REVIEWING THE NEWS

By BILL

To the Workers Party of the U. S. To the New Militant and its 10,000 readers—Greetings!

Spartacus

"For Spartacus means fire and spirit. For Spartacus means soul and heart." These words of the immortal Liebknecht best describe the first National Convention of the Spartacus Youth League held in New York, Dec. 3, 4, 5. You can take it from me that the delegations of Spartacus Youth—who by freight train, hitch-hike and auto came from California and all points east—not forgetting the fraternal delegates from Canada—have "fire and spirit" and are "soul and heart" in the revolutionary movement. There was no sign of Stalinist "made to order" thinking in the S.Y.L. convention. An old timer of 31 summers and 30 winters, who was one of the founders of the original Young Workers League and who sat with me in the visitors gallery, remarked that he had never seen anything to match the independence of thought and intelligent discussion of youth problems of the S.Y.L. convention. Profiting by the experiences of the past—intelligent, vigorous, confident, eyes front—the Spartacus Youth League marches forward.

At Last the Forgotten Man

"Driving money-changers from the temple," "For more equitable distribution of our national income"—Just call to mind a few of the New Deal slogans and then read the income figures of 1933. You'll find the "forgotten man" brought back in all his glory. Here are the headlines in the New York Times: "1,000,000 incomes rose by 24 in 1933 . . . Individual net off . . . One of 46 in higher brackets reported $5,000,000 or more against none in 1933. (That's him. That's the forgotten man.)" "Corporation profits up . . . Increased 35.3% in first New Deal year . . . Total fell mainly in lower scale."

Time-Clocks vs. Military Muster

According to a press report the Nazis have issued a decree, "Time-clocks must go and be replaced by a military muster." "Whoever heard of a regimental commander installing a time-clock at the entrance to his barracks?" asks Doctor Ley, Nazi chief. May we add that we never saw a time-clock at the entrance of a prison either. In addition to the military muster every factory manager is to "give his staff a little speech each morning and evening on Nazi ideals". And to show that the Nazi butchers are not without a satanic sense of humor the manager is to end his speech with: "Any complaints?"

Bankers and Lawyers Gyp Crippled Veterans

"Many instances" where lawyers and bankers "bilked the veterans of large sums of money" were reported by Rep. Patman, Chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Comm. "A hopelessly crippled veteran in New York drawing $30.00 a month was charged $100.00 lawyer fee for a signature"—"Bank and trust companies acting as guardians for veterans unloaded worthless securities on them." Rep. Patman's statement told of case after case, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars lost by veterans through the activities of patriotic bankers and lawyers.

Free Workers

Alfred P. Sloan Jr., President of General Motors Corp., declared that the "spell" of regimentation and planned economy had been broken and America now had a future of tremendous opportunities under a system of free enterprise. "I believe workers should be free. Their right to work should not depend upon their membership in a labor union." Anyone who has stepped into an auto factory in Detroit and watched human robots at work will understand just what Mr. Sloan means by "free workers" and a "system of free enterprise".

Voodism and the Quintuplets

Doctor Defoe who gained notoriety by being present when Mrs. Dionne gave birth to quintuplets in New York. In a speech before a large audience Dr. Defoe reported that, after the birth of the children Mrs. Dionne seemed to be in a dying condition but instead of remaining with the apparently dying woman to give what aid he could, he, Dr. Defoe, who was brought up and trained in the Voodism of the Catholic Church, travelled a distance of two and a half miles to get a priest, leaving Mrs. Dionne to the care of a backwoods midwife. In a sane society a man guilty of such an act would be punished, not praised.

Spartacus Youth Adopts Program

reports and the proposed resolutions were accepted unanimously.

Speech of Schachtman

Max Schachtman, of the former Communist League of America, then addressed the convention. He brought greetings from the comrades whose organization had sponsored and helped build the Spartacus Youth League. Pointing to the degeneration of the old guard generation, with few exceptions, he reiterated the need for the development of new leading forces for the revolutionary movement and urged that this is the most important task of the Spartacus Youth League. This is to be accomplished, he further stated, by building the S.Y.L. as a mass youth organization, politically subordinate to the Workers Party while organizationally autonomous.

The report of comrade Schachtman was greeted by the adoption of a resolution extending thanks to the comrades of the former Communist League for their aid in building the S.Y.L.

Student Problem

The next report covered the problem of the students. The discussion revolved around the question as to whether there is a need for a national student organization. The overwhelming majority of the delegates opposed such an independent organization and decided to work through the existing student clubs and organizations and Spartacus Youth fractions for winning the students to the Spartacus Youth "activist group" (cultural, committee or fraction); to stabilize Young Spartacus and begin a fund for a semi-monthly; to prepare material for a youth handbook. The program was accepted and the incoming national committee was given the task of working out the details.

Name "Spartacus" to Stand

The debate over the name of the youth organization was very spirited. After a good deal of consideration, informally and formally, the delegates decided to continue the name "Spartacus Youth". The alternative proposal was "Young Workers League". Those supporting the majority viewpoint contended that the name "Spartacus", bearing the revolutionary traditions of the leader of the ancient slave rebellion and the heroic struggles of the German group of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg had more color and meaning than the suggested alternative.

The opposition held that the name "Young Workers League" was more popular. That the content would be given by the future activities of the organization. "Spartacus" carried the day.

The program of action was then considered. This consists of a three months plan, to begin Jan 1, 1935 for the strengthening of the national center, the building of new branches, and the reorganization of the existing branches. It includes a plan to double the membership by April 1; to build a youth branch wherever a Workers Party branch exists.

New National Committee. A new national committee was elected consisting of Nathan Gould, Reva Crane, Manny Garrett, Bill Streeter, Jane Ogden, Irving Bern (Chicago), M. Slavin (Youngstown), Murray Weiss (San Francisco), Ray Sparrow (Los Angeles), James Cross (Gillespie), Francis Drake, Frank Visconti and S. Yaver were elected as alternates.

As the convention concluded with the singing of the "International", the delegates were more confident than ever in the bright future for the Spartacus Youth as the mass organization of the young workers and students.

A L A R M Signals in the Soviet Union!

By A. J. Muste & James P. Cannon

RECENT events in the Soviet Union, commencing with the assassination of Kirov and followed by secret executions totalling 103 at the present writing, cause the deepest alarm to the thinking revolutionary workers of the entire world for whom the Soviet Union is and has been since 1917 the star of hope and inspiration.

The alarm that every revolutionary worker feels at any indication of danger to the Soviet Workers' State is increased and intensified enormously by the secrecy and mystery in which the present happenings have been shrouded. For days after Kirov's assassination there was complete lack of any explanation as to the identity of the assassin or the reason for his act. Then the Soviet authorities placed the blame upon White Guards, counter-revolutionists left from the old Czarist regime. Later it was hinted that representatives of some foreign capitalist power were engaged in dastardly counter-revolutionary activities in the Soviet Union.

If the Soviet Union is in danger the advanced workers throughout the world will rally to its defense as they have always done and they will not object to drastic measures against conspirators.

The right and the duty of the proletarian state to adopt the sternest methods of repression against its class enemies is indisputable for a revolutionary worker. Lenin and Trotsky taught it. And history will applaud them for it, for the young revolution fighting for its very existence, and learning from the terrible mistakes of the Paris Commune that leniency to the class enemy ends in the bloody massacre of the workers, had to crush the resistance of the overthrown class with swift and terrible blows. But, once the power of the revolution was consolidated, after the working class had triumphed in the civil war and the wars of intervention, the prosecution of counter-revolutionists was conducted in court. From the beginning, moreover, Lenin and Trotsky always proved the necessity of their actions; they explained everything clearly, fully and honestly to the international working class as well as to the workers in the Soviet Union and were supported by them.

Workers who see the operation of the white terror in a large part of the world, the mass murder of the victims of fascism and reaction in Germany, Austria, Spain and other countries—not to speak of the killing of strikers in the "democratic" United States—will not shed tears over the fate of a few White Guards and counter-revolutionists who seek to restore the capitalist order in the Soviet Union. They need only to be convinced that the victims are really White Guards and that it is really necessary to resort to such drastic measures against them.

The revolutionary workers have nothing in common with the hypocritical outcries of anti-Soviet elements, whether they be Social Democrats or capitalist editors, who come forward now with increased aggressiveness to renew their agitation for bourgeois "democracy" as against workers' dictatorship. These critics were effectively silenced in the past, or at least deprived of all influence among the advanced workers. If methods are now employed which enable them to raise their heads again it is only another count in the indictment of those responsible for the methods.

In the Summer of 1922, more than twelve years ago, the trial of the leaders of the Social-Revolutionary Party, charged with responsibility for an organized campaign of terrorism and sabotage, took place in Moscow. It was held in open court in the one-time "Hall of the Nobles", then and now the headquarters of the Moscow trade unions. The accused, at the request of the parties and organizations of the Second International, were allowed to have foreign counsel—ironically enough one of the attorneys for the accused S.R.'s was Vandervelde, Minister of the Belgian King during the war and the present head of the Second International to whom the Comintern recently offered a "non-aggression pact". The guilt of the accused was established at the public trial beyond any doubt, in part by their own confessions. They were convicted of responsibility for and the direct organization of the assassination of Volodarsky, the attempts on the lives of Lenin and other Soviet leaders, the dynamiting of bridges and other acts of terrorism and violence against the workers' state. As a result of this open trial, conducted before the eyes of the world, the revolutionary vigilance of the Soviet Government was approved and endorsed by the international working class; the moral position of the counter-revolutionists, including the Mensheviks and the Social-Revolutionaries, was completely destroyed.

So strong was the position of the Soviet Government then, in 1922, when the country was still suffering from the devastation of civil war and famine, when industrial production was at its lowest point, far below pre-war standards, before anybody had even thought of "socialism in one country", not to speak of proclaiming its existence—so strong was the position of the victorious revolution that the Soviet Government, with the approval of the Communist International, found it possible to commute the death sentences passed on the terrorists by the proletarian court.

It was Trotsky who came before the Executive Committee of the

Muste Calls for Funds To Carry on Mass Work

The contents of this issue of the New Militant give the reason why the drive for the $5,000 Party Foundation Fund must be put over, and furnish at the same time conclusive evidence that it will be. Consider the situation: One of the founders of the Communist Party in this country, prominent leader in its trade union work, has joined the W. P. In at least two basic industries this week, automobiles and steel, the workers have again been put off with empty promises and gestures by the capitalists and the Roosevelt administration.

In automobiles, for example, one of the million and one Roosevelt commissions is holding hearings on "stabilization of employment", but refuses to listen to the testimony of workers regarding the anti-unionism of the bosses which is the root of the turmoil in the industry. Discontent mounts among the workers. "Send an experienced organizer," cry our Toledo comrades, "to get busy on this situation."

Look abroad and we witness the swift, amazing developments which have followed the assassination of Kirov in the Soviet Union and which constitute the subject of an important statement in this issue. On every hand, on the economic and the political field, in the unions and in other political parties and groups, at home in the United States and abroad, the evidence piles up that the new party was launched at the most opportune moment, that in the midst of confusion and disintegration everywhere else, our Declaration of Principles sets forth clearly and sharply the answer to the questions of the day in the revolutionary movement.

COMRADES, WE MUST NOT SHIRK OUR GREAT RESPONSIBILITIES NOW BY FAILING TO RALLY ALL OUR RESOURCES AT THIS CRITICAL MOMENT TO GET OUR REVOLUTIONARY MESSAGE TO THE MASSES.

Now every branch, every member, every sympathizer, must get busy. Bring in every dollar, every penny that can be raised. Forward money to the national office as quickly as you get it. A dollar given early in the drive will do the work of two.

Steel Truce In Deadlock At Capitol

Roosevelt's Plan is Balked
By Failure to Agree on Company Unions

WASHINGTON.—A three-point "truce" program for the steel industry ended in a conference deadlock when labor leaders, mindful of pressure from below, refused to agree to "company unions" in the industry.

The plan was submitted by President Roosevelt and Secretary of Labor Perkins as the first step in carrying out the President's personal desire, announced in October, to extend the "truce" between workers and employers throughout industry. It was submitted by the President at a special White House conference of leading steel barons and A. F. of L. leaders.

Sanctions Company Unions
The three points in the President's plan, which would have bound the steel workers for a period of six months, were:

1. The employers would bargain with all groups of employees. This proviso would have given Federal sanction to company unions in steel.

2. Both labor and employers would recognize the National Steel Relations Board as the arbitration agency of the industry.

The proviso was submitted despite the fact that the Steel Board has been unsatisfactory to labor. The Board was appointed by the President at the time of the threatened strike in steel last June and since that time has been swamped with complaints and petitions from union locals in the steel centers, but has held only one election, at a small concern, the West Virginia Rail Company, where the workers won over the company union.

3. Both sides would agree on a six months "truce", during which no elections of representatives for collective bargaining purposes would be held.

Myron Taylor, chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation, had been campaigning for several months for both the "truce", as outlined by Roosevelt, and the proposal that the employers should have clear governmental sanction of company unions.

Asks More Conferences

When it became evident that the conference had reached a deadlock, President Roosevelt asked the Steel Board to continue its "good work" and to arrange further conferences. The deadlock over the question of "majority rule" was caused mainly by the fact that Green, Tighe and other A. F. of L. representatives in the conference were being subjected to pressure from the rank and file, which is fast becoming more progressive and militant than the old-line union leaders.

What the next steps of President Roosevelt and the Steel Board will be was not announced. Unrest pointing toward a general strike is reported in steel.

Hit Sabotage In C.P. Trial

BERKELEY, Calif.—Indignation of the rank and file members of the Communist Party at the incompetence, mismanagement and outright sabotage of the defense of the 18 comrades on trial in the Criminal Syndicalism case at Sacramento has reached the point of explosion. Last week the general membership meeting of the C. P. at Berkeley adopted a resolution calling the district leadership to account in the most scathing terms and categorically demanding a radical change of policy and attitude toward the case and towards the defendants involved.

The leading defendants, among them Caroline Decker, are allowed to lie in jail for lack of bail while favorites of the C. P. clique are taken out. Nothing is done to promote a broad united front with other working class organizations in behalf of the prisoners, the case is deliberately played down in the party press and a venomous campaign of slanderous insinuation is conducted against the leading defendants in the case. The reason: they are "suspected" of deviations in the direction of the Workers Party!

MERRY CHRISTMAS-WHERE?

By DAN EASTMAN

The fifth Christmas of the depression and the third of the New Deal is a very merry one indeed—in some classes. Looking through the newspapers one finds nothing but optimism, bright hope, and reassurance. Steel is turning up, Henry Ford is reemploying, recovery is just around the corner, unprecedented Christmas boom, business and government cooperate for the common welfare, department stores show rise, and so on and so on.

Somewhat overwhelmed by all this good cheer, your reporter determined to carry the message of Christmas down to the people. In Madison Square Park he stopped to have his shoes shined, and engaged the bootblack in conversation.

His name, he said, was Bill Shields, sixty years old, born on a poor farm in upstate New York. A tall, gaunt Yankee, with a white stubble on his jaws, he was wrapped in an old army coat, and wore a ragged cap over his eyes. He kept his shoe cream bottle in an inside pocket, near the warmth of his body, to prevent its freezing.

"I make three to five dollars a week," he said, "depending on the weather. Make less in winter, barely three last week. I'd rather bootblack than go on home relief. They ask you too damn many questions, and even then you have to wait around for months before they give you anything. Of course if my health fails me, I'll have to take a different point of view."

"It's pretty tough in winter."

Joseph Zack, C.P. Leader, Joins the Workers Party

The trend of the revolutionary workers toward the new Workers Party was illustrated in the most striking manner this week by the action of Joseph Zack, one of the most prominent veterans of the American Communist movement, in withdrawing from the Communist Party and simultaneously joining the W. P.

As will be seen from the statement of comrade Zack which appears in another column he came to this decision after a thorough study of the fundamental problems which have arisen in the last decade and, in doing so, arrived at the same conclusions on all the principle questions as those outlined in the party's Declaration of Principles. The action of radical labor circles in New York where he is known to every militant who has taken active part in the movement during the past 20 years. The panic of the leaders of the C. P., signaled by their hasty announcement of his "expulsion" after his resignation from the party, is increased by the knowledge that he does not stand alone. The C. P. will have plenty of "expulsions" to announce in the near future, and the names of some of the most active and militant workers in the trade union movement will appear on the lists. Joseph Zack was a foundation member of the Communist Party. He was a member of the Central Committee in the underground days and afterward. For years he was the head of the party trade union work in the New York district and secretary of the N.Y.U.L. Later he held the same office in the Cleveland district whence he was "expelled" for the capital offense of having opinions and talking about them. Commencing next week the New Militant will publish a series of articles by comrade Zack which will be of interest to every revolutionary worker.

COMRADE ZACK'S STATEMENT
New York City
December 20, 1934

To the National Committee
Workers Party of the U.S.A.

Comrades:
I hereby present my application to join the Workers Party, having resigned from the Communist Party.

I have been a member of the C.P. U.S.A. since its inception. Before that I was a member of the Left Wing of the S. P. My differences with the leadership of the C.P. originated on the Trade Union question more than two years ago, leading up to the 1934 Party Convention held in Cleveland. As a result of my brief talk as a delegate to that convention, organizational measures were taken against me in plain and flagrant violation of inner party discipline. I was threatened with expulsion 24 hours after the convention if I did not retract the views I had expressed at the convention the day before. I was immediately removed from all party activity. As a result the whole question of the inner party regime

9 Join Party At Philly Meet

PHILADELPHIA.—A crowd of 300, including members of every political current in the world of labor—Syndicalists, Stalinists, Socialists and ex-radicals of all shades—turned out to hear A. J. Muste and James P. Cannon present the program of the new revolutionary party here on December 16. Nine new members were added and $73.50 pledged to the party building fund.

Mostly workers were present—militant trade unionists—Negro and white, many unemployed and professional people.

The speakers told of the fusion of the former American Workers Party and the Communist League on a principled basis of revolutionary Marxism to build the Workers Party of the United States. The addresses were warmly applauded and sale of the new party literature was good.

The Lehigh County Unemployed League asks that readers of the NEW MILITANT will help them build a library by sending them books, pamphlets, etc. Send them to: Ed. Moser, L. C. U. L., 341 Union Street, Allentown, Penna.

Super Lobby Seeks Wage Relief Slash

Capitalists in United Front Against Labor to Put
Screws on Congress

WASHINGTON.—The "super-lobby" set up by the capitalists who met last week at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., will lay before President Roosevelt and Congress when it convenes plans to put the unemployed on doles and to perpetuate company unions.

The united front of industry against labor was formed with the aid of members of Roosevelt's Cabinet. Ninety leading industrialists and bankers of the nation attended the conference.

Will Ask for Dole

For the unemployed, the lobby will demand that Federal relief be reduced and gradually replaced by the dole, the funds to be provided by local charity and the state through "strongly centralized bureaus".

For the workers in industry business will ask that the Administration continue the NIRA codes another year, with labor having the right, as at present, to bargain collectively with employers through organizations of their "choice", including company formed unions.

United Front

The lobby will speak for the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Manufacturers' Association, railroads, banks, utilities and the corporations which control the country's industries. Permanent headquarters have been set up in Washington. The Administration, it was said, "can no longer misinterpret the desires of industry and business."

"Let industry take the lead in recovery," was in effect the slogan adopted.

Screws on Congress

A simple analysis of the united front and preparations being made to put the screws on Congress to halt government spending and stop labor organization reveals that the capitalists have got together to slash wages and living standards all down the line. A "wild" Congress is coming in, a Congress under pressure from the "people back home" to appropriate more and more funds to relieve distress and somehow make President Roosevelt's golden political phrases and promises come to life.

The danger, as seen by the super-business lobby, is not that this can be done while they hold the reins of wealth and industry, but that the people might begin to believe it is possible and so expect "too much".

Pressure on the Administration recently forced Harry L. Hopkins, Relief Administrator, to cut relief wages below $12 a week.

The Journal of Commerce, which interprets business and political trends for Wall Street, predicted in the early fall that the Administration would soon be "forced" to reduce relief wages to help industry stabilize industrial wages at a "reasonable level".

Cats Eat Relief Meat—Live

TOLEDO, Ohio.—Toledo relief authorities have found a new way to test the fitness of meat for the bellies of unemployed workers and their children.

When unemployed workers here brought tainted relief beef to the authorities the relief agents set out to demonstrate to the workers that the meat was edible. Mice were put in the cage with some of the suspect beef, but the mice, caged and caged, turned up their pink noses at the meat. Determined to show that the meat could be eaten, some alley cats were captured and fed the meat.

The cats, noting the similarity to their regular fare, of garbage, pronounced the meat good. The nameless tabby martyrs convinced the relief authorities that the meat was fit for consumption. (a) not good for mice, (b) edible by cats, (c) perfect for unemployed workers and their children.

Wild Cat Strike Looms at Mine

JOHN L. LEWIS HOLDS ON BY STRONG-ARM METHODS

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—When the miners of mine No. 4, Panther Creek Coal Co., here made demands that the haulage way be cleaned and the wash house enlarged, they got immediate results. They issued an ultimatum that if the coal dust wasn't cleaned out of the haulage way in three days they would call a strike. So two days later the company worked a night crew to do the job.

Instead of enlarging the wash house, which is what the miners demanded, the company merely made some repairs. The wash house is dirty, cold, unventilated and dangerously unsanitary. The miners called state mining inspectors to examine the wash house as the state law was being violated. The company promised to arrange suitable washing facilities for the men and the state inspectors said they would return in three days.

Left Wing Polls Heavy Vote in P.M.A. Election

GILLESPIE, Ill. Dec. 14.—Joseph Burrell, president of local union 34, Gillespie, and former chairman of the Progressive Miners State Relief and Educational Committee, polled a good vote in the state union elections recently held, according to incomplete reports gathered here this week. Burrell was the left wing candidate for the position of secretary-treasurer of the Progressive Miners of America.

Burrell defeated Claude Pearcy, incumbent president of the union, by a vote of 106 to 63 in local union No. 77, Springfield. Burrell also polled nearly 500 votes in the large amalgamated local union at Gillespie. Unofficial reports state that Burrell also defeated the union president at Auburn, Pa., "Little Dog" mine and Local Union 12, Springfield. S. L. Jones, Sherman Stiehl and Jess Anderson were also candidates for the position.

Pearcy's candidacy for the position is an outright swindle as the recent convention of the P.M.A. as well as the first convention of 1932, stated that "no officer could succeed himself in office nor run for a lower office until he had worked two years in the mine after his tenure of office." The union president's candidacy is obviously a conspiracy for the right wing clique to perpetuate themselves in office through machine rule. Much indignation was expressed by the rank and file at Springfield, where the Progressive Miners of America have 14 local unions, seven under job control.

The six amalgamated striking local unions and local union No. 77 at Springfield voted in membership meetings to condemn the bureaucratic procedure of the union officers. Local union No. 77 also filed charges against Joe P. Goett, erstwhile Lewis tool, and now editor of the "Progressive Miner" because he refused to publish a resolution adopted by the local scoring Claude Pearcy's candidacy.

Unconfirmed reports state that a run-off is to be held for the position of secretary-treasurer since no one candidate received a decisive majority of the votes cast throughout the state.

MEMBERSHIP MEET RAISES $500 ON BUILD PARTY FUND

The program of action for the building of the Workers Party was presented to the New York membership at a general membership meeting Friday, Dec. 14, at the Stuyvesant Casino. The reporter for the National Committee, Comrade A. J. Muste, the National Secretary of the party, outlined the various points of the program of action and spoke of the enthusiasm with which the launching of the W. P. was met throughout the country.

The report of Comrade Muste was followed by a report of the New York District Organizer, Comrade Lewis, who dwelt on the concrete tasks before the New York District.

The Workers Party in this city starts out with seven branches in the various sections. All of these branches will very shortly have to be subdivided, since some of them are too bulky even now and new applications are coming in very rapidly. Over 40 applicants for membership in the party were received right after the mass meeting that followed the fusion convention.

The general membership meeting rife. A "wild cat" strike is liable to break out any time.

In Benton, Ill., on Dec. 11, the day for biennial elections of the United Mine Workers of America, local and national, the rank and file of the union was dumfounded to learn that John L. Lewis and his entire machine, with rare exceptions, were without opposition. At least, the union gangsters did not permit duly nominated rank and file candidates places on the ballot.

In the Springfield and Franklin county sub-districts of the U.M.W.A., only the perennial office-holders were allowed places on the ballot. Dictator John L., of course, took care that no one should compete for his job. He barred Bill Sloan, Westville, Ill., and other rank and file members from the ballot for the offices of president, vice president and secretary-treasurer. Sloan and his group were permitted, however, to appear on the ballot as delegates to the A. F. of L. convention.

So the Lewis machine rolls on, in spite of its tremendous unpopularity among the rank and file. One day the miners, under real leadership and organization, will destroy this infamous machine.

In St. David, Ill., where the fight between the Progressive Miners of America and the U.M.W.A. has been bitter for two years, George Stouffer, for years a gun toter and agent of the notorious Lewis-Farrington machine, and one Murray, also a former crony of the machine, are dead, victims of a gun duel. Stouffer was former sub-district president of sub-district 2, district 12 of the U.M.W.A.

Stouffer, recently proprietor of a beer tavern, shot it out with Murray; both were killed outright. Two other persons, one a woman, were wounded.

For two years, in St. David and the surrounding territory, the battle between the Lewis gunmen and the P.M.A. has resulted in much fighting. The field is now closely divided between the two unions. Neither has absolute control.

Leibowitz Plans Anti-Labor Trial for Scottsboro Boys

By HARRY STRANG

The moment approaches when the United States Supreme Court clerk will call to the bar of the highest tribunal of capitalist justice, the contestants in the historic Scottsboro case. And although the defense counsel must soon make his argument, the working class public is bewildered as to who that counsel will be.

Many weeks ago Samuel S. Leibowitz, reactionary flag waver once employed by the I.L.D., announced his claim to represent the boys. Ever since he has been mum as a clam. The I.L.D. having denounced its former ally as a traitor (because he did just what revolutionaries predicted he would do when he was hired) continues to shout that it represents the boys. . . . and to offer a united front to Leibowitz, correctly characterized by the I.L.D. as an ally of the Southern lynch-ers.

United Front With Leibowitz

Why does the I.L.D., which for years would make no united front with reformism represented by Norman Thomas, or with revolution represented by those now in the Workers Party, offer Leibowitz a united front? Can it be that the I.L.D., having lost the support of the defendants, hope by an unprincipled united front with the ally of the Southern lynchers, to get, if not a front seat, at least a back one when the case comes to court? Leibowitz is silent because he is confident. Having been told by the I.L.D. that it deserved their trust because it had enlisted Leibowitz's services, the nine defendants came to lean solely upon Leibowitz. Would it be surprising that when the I.L.D. lost its boasted asset, the boys were to leave the I.L.D.?

Leibowitz's "defense" plans include a furious attack not only on the I.L.D. and the C. P., but on all progressive elements, on all militants and advocates of working class mass action. Although the I.L.D. has not used mass pressure (substituting the opportunistic alliance with Leibowitz while he let them, and covering up with provocative stunts), Leibowitz is in a good position, thanks to the previous boosting of the I.L.D., to give the idea of mass action a black eye.

Leibowitz plans to do more than attack all shades of militancy and radicalism. He means to whitewash Alabama class justice and sing praises of the Bourbon ruling class of the south. He wants to "put the Negro in his place", and to beg mercy for the innocent victims of a vicious frame-up.

All the more reason why a mass pressure campaign is needed. Some liberal elements who regarded the I.L.D. as very clever when it hired Leibowitz (and who now naturally prefer Leibowitz to the I.L.D.), oppose further mass pressure. They say mass pressure was helpful in the past but would be harmful now. Aside from the fact that they opposed mass pressure in the period in which they now say it was useful, the fact is that mass pressure is more essential today than ever before.

Every new turn in the Scottsboro fight makes clearer the need to found a militant defense organization with genuine principles and a broad enough base to include all honest working class and progressive elements. Members of all trade unions and workers' political organizations should consider and prepare to act on this question.

Steam Shovel Dynamited

MINERS EKEING OUT EXISTENCE IN CLASH WITH COAL CO.

SHAMOKEN, Pa.—A steam shovel costing $8,000, brought here last week by the Stevens Coal Company, was blown to bits when someone planted dynamite beneath it.

Coal diggers who belong to the United Anthracite Producers, a "bootleg group" numbering 1,600 miners, would have been thrown out of work by the new machine. These miners dig coal in small quantities, by hand, a small group to each "bootleg hole", entire families, men, women and children joining in the risky work.

The Stevens Co. turned up last week with a brand new steam shovel, prepared to wipe out the miners' holdings with a stripping. The miners barricaded the road leading to the tract, and succeeded in "persuading" the truck driver, who was hauling the shovel, to turn back.

Later in the day George Jones, superintendent of the Stevens Co. turned up with the state police. The barricade was torn down, but the ill-fated shovel hadn't gone a hundred yards before it slipped on the muddy road and went into the ditch. Mr. Jones then asked for a conference with the miners.

He said that the fate of the Cameron Colliery of the Stevens Co. depended on the successful working of the Edgewood tract.

Lester Koble, replying for the miners, observed that they were completely indifferent to the success or failure of the Cameron Colliery, and were only concerned for their own means of support.

The conference was a deadlock. A few hours later someone deposited several sticks of dynamite under the shovel and blew it to pieces.

"Save the Workers From Revolution!"

U. S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BUSY

Words of Abraham Lincoln on Rights of the People To Change or Overthrow the Existing Government

One of the primary purposes of the United States Chamber of Commerce is clearly revealed in the report on "Combating Subversive Activities in the United States" which was sent out to its members for special consideration on Nov. 27.

The 29 page report defines as "subversive" all "activities of political or other bodies in the United States, having as their objective the overthrow, by force and violence, of the Federal, State and Municipal governments, and of the existing social and economic order of the United States." Mentioning anarchy as the main danger in the past, the report goes on to indict "Soviet Communism" as the real danger of the present post-war period.

Hit Working Class Violence

The authors pretend that they are not opposed to the aim of the communist movement—that is, to the replacement of the capitalist system by a new worker-controlled economic, social and political order. All they dislike is the method of violence. But do they protest equally against the Fascist murderers, to the violence breaking up of peaceful picket lines by boss thugs, corporation police and state militia? No! The Chamber of Commerce has not one single word to say about any of this, but it sets up a special committee, prints pamphlets, and urges its members to press Senators and Representatives for action against the "Communists" because they are the "leaders and agitators" of the working class.

Defending Capitalism
The truth is the C. of C. is solely interested in defending capitalism and the interests of Big Business. And it is exactly its members who are most willing to resort to the use of force and violence, to the most under-handed stool pigeon methods, in order to defend their "rights" when confronted by organized labor. In fact, it is reliably reported that the C. of C. promotes a labor espionage bureau for the use of its members involved with unions.

In contrast to the Chamber of Commerce contention that it is "American" to try to reform the present order by amending the present laws peacefully and that it is "Un-American" to try to overthrow the system by revolutionary means, it is well to recall the political philosophy of early America. Abraham Lincoln expressed it quite clearly in his First Inaugural Address as follows:

Right of Revolution
"This country, with its institutions, BELONGS TO THE PEOPLE WHO INHABIT IT. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it, OR THEIR REVOLUTIONARY RIGHT TO DISMEMBER OR OVERTHROW IT."

After maintaining that Communism is an alien movement backed and sponsored by the Soviet Government, the report goes on to list all the subversive activities of communism from 1932 on: working class discontent and rebellion in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Bolivia, Ecuador, Mexico, Guatemala, Great Britain, Belgium, Netherlands, Finland, Spain, China, Japan, Germany, Cuba and finally from coast to coast in the United States.

(Poor capitalists! But for a few thousand "communist agitators" the workers would be satisfied with this lovely world and let the rich live in luxury and peace!)

All to "Save" the Workers!
The Chamber of Commerce is going to "save" the working class from such evil influences as "communism"; therefore it recommends the following government measures of force:

1. The amending of the present seditious conspiracy law so that it would be more like the "World War Sedition Act" or the Canadian Anti-Red Law, so that stern punishment could be meted out to anyone who even dared to think that a revolution might be necessary.

2. That the U. S. mails be denied to any person or group advocating revolutionary or subversive doctrines.

3. That immigrants only be admitted on condition that their native country agrees to take them back on request of the U. S.

4. That no person believing in revolution shall be naturalized.

5. That stern penalties be provided for those persons or groups which try to spread anti-war or revolutionary propaganda among the armed forces.

6. That the Department of Justice be given authority and funds to set up a special department to investigate the activities of all persons, groups and organizations suspected of "communism" or "subversive activities" and to bring before the courts for punishment all those persons suspected of violating any of the broad measures mentioned above.

Wants Stricter Dictatorship
It is not enough for us to point out that this action of the Chamber of Commerce indicates that Big Business in this country has come to the conclusion that some strong anti-labor measures are necessary for capitalism's good and welfare. Business would like to take away from labor its right to free speech and self-organization. It wants a stricter dictatorship against labor. Therefore, it first intends to isolate and jail the radicals, the revolutionists, the militants, the fighters; then, if it succeeds, it will take the same measures against the freedom and organizations of the working class as a whole.

The aim of the Chamber of Commerce must be defeated! The working class must be aroused to the danger that threatens it! An organized mass protest of the entire labor movement can resist the attack at this time.

—A WORKER.

Why Mooney Remains in Prison

SAN FRANCISCO. — "Governor Stephens, it is my life you are dealing with."

"I demand that you revoke your commutation of my death sentence to a living death."

"I prefer a glorious death at the hands of my traducers, you included, to a living grave."

"I am innocent."

"I demand a new and fair trial or my unconditional liberty through a pardon."

These are the words Tom Mooney sent to Governor Stephens of California sixteen years ago when at the wired request of President Wilson who feared "if Mooney is executed international affairs will be greatly complicated", Stephens commuted Mooney's death sentence to life.

Tom Mooney is still in San Quentin. All the world knows that he is innocent, yet he remains in prison.

Why? The answer is plain. Tom Mooney is a fighter for the working class. That is why he is held in jail, and only that.

IN THE UNIONS

By KARL LORE

Rubber Organizes

Big Bill Haywood of the I.W.W. hit Akron, Ohio in 1913. He organized a union and led a strike of rubber workers in that year which was smashed beneath a torrent of riot sticks in the hands of police and company guards. After the war and during the boom years unionism was practically dead and the few small groups which maintained an under-cover existence were unable to challenge the rulers of the industry.

In July 1933 the workers in the Firestone plant organized a Federal union of the American Federation of Labor. Two weeks later the Goodrich Rubber employees got their charter from the Federation. A great wave of union sentiment hit the area and under the leadership of young and militant rank and file a great organizing job was begun.

Is Akron Next?

A year later it was estimated that almost 100,000 rubber workers in various parts of the country were organized. The India Tire and Rubber at Akron had recognized the union. In Los Angeles, Regional Labor Board elections went overwhelmingly in favor of the A. F. of L. A vigorous four weeks strike at the Akron plant of the General Tire and Rubber had forced the signing of a contract. In December 1933 an attempt to organize an international rubber workers union failed, but a parade of over 10,000 greeted a convention held in Akron the next June which organized the National United Rubber Council.

Six months more have passed and the rubber workers face their great test. Akron may furnish 1935's first major labor explosion.

Yellow Dog Unions

Nor were the employers asleep. Company unions were immediately installed at the large plants without letting the workers vote on the proposals. Employee representatives were bribed with extra salaries. All expenses were paid by the companies. The representation plans did not provide for general meetings of the workers nor even for regular meetings of the whole body of representatives. Elaborate machinery was set up to defeat any possibility of even these armour plated plans being used to advance labor's conditions.

Put Up or Shut Up

Now comes the showdown. The unions in the great plants of Goodrich and Firestone in Akron petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for supervised elections in order to establish their right to act as the representatives of the workers. The Board ordered such elections held. Immediately both companies started suit in Federal court to prevent the N.L.R.B. from proceeding with the vote, and the Labor Board has agreed to postpone action pending the outcome of the court proceedings. J. A. Thomas, Firestone president, issued a circular to his workers in which he declared his intention of fighting the legal battle all the way to the supreme court. Labor has answered with a special membership drive. The unions claim that over 13,500 of the 21,000 employees of the two companies are organized, and predict that 75 to 80 per cent of the workers will vote for the A. F. of

L. organization in any poll taken now.

Another Wierton???

Here we have all the makings of another Wierton case. Will the organized rubber workers allow their fate to be dragged through an endless procession of capitalist court rooms till the spirit of their organization is broken and the banner of unionism dragged in the mud? The steel barons have succeeded in playing that game all too well. Aided by a cowardly, chair-warming pack of national union officials they have stifled the fighting spirit of the steel mill men and have reestablished the company unionism that was once so thoroughly washed up. The same problem confronts the organized rubber workers. The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, for example, has maintained an employee representation plan for the past fifteen years which is strongly entrenched. Real action on the part of the United Rubber Workers Council will do much to break up Goodyear's phony union. Delay in taking real steps, weak kneed handling of the situation, will have exactly the opposite effect.

Where Are the Progressives?

The initial organization work in the rubber plants was carried on by militant rank and file members. Later an A. F. of L. organizer, well versed in all the tricks of trade union politics was sent in. The progressives followed faulty counsellors and—inexperienced as they were—made a number of bad mistakes. The Federation officialdom took over the situation.

In place of the original organization structure by which all workers in any one plant belonged to the same Federal union local, the A. F. of L. chiefs introduced a modified craft union apparatus. Craft workers joined their craft organizations which were then supposed to be united in each case by a plant council. The unskilled and production workers remained in the Federal unions which were scorn of most of their power although they represented the great majority of the employees.

Briefs

Over 1,000,000 workers have joined 1,400 local unions of the A. F. of L. in the South since NRA went into effect according to Federation Organizer George L. Googe. . . . G. E. Beers, chairman of the Southeast Portland Lumber Company local of the Loyal Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen—better known as the 4 L's—should have known better than to try to get wage raises from that company union. He was fired when he did. . . . In April 1930 several thousand members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen went out on an unauthorized strike. Officials of the B.R.T. immediately revoked the charters of the locals affected and ordered cancellation of their insurance certificates. The ousted members have been trying to recover their insurance in the courts ever since. They met on the tenth of December to try to figure out what to do next. Forget it boys. . . . About 57,000 new members have joined the International Association of Machinists and 240 new locals have been organized since July of 1933 says President A. Wharton. About 150 strikes have been conducted by the I.A. of M. in the last 15 months.

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

The Profit System and Capitalist Sabotage

No class-conscious worker will be fooled by the revelations of so-called "inefficiency" in the handling of food stuffs for relief purposes by the Federal, State and City authorities. When millions of pounds of potatoes, cabbage and veal threaten to glut the market, lower prices and decrease the profits, not of the farmer-producers but of the big commission merchants and the monopoly capitalists of the produce exchanges, the government steps in to protect the interests of the class in power. It buys up the huge food surpluses and hides its real motive for the purchases—the preservation of the profit system—by pretending that the food will go to relieve the starving unemployed. Under cover of this phraseology for deluding the masses, the various agencies of government, Federal, State and City, then cooperate in the task of destroying the food surpluses by a game of "inefficient handling".

This capitalist sabotage manifests itself everywhere and at all times when the maintaining of profits requires the destruction of wealth, whether in the form of means of production, food supplies or raw materials. The rotting of the foods so desperately needed by the hungry, penniless workers is not a New York phenomenon, it is one more revelation of the decadence and rottenness of the entire capitalist system. Vebien aptly characterized this capitalist sabotage when he spoke of it as the "conscious withdrawal of efficiency". It is indeed the brazenly cold-blooded fostering of mass hunger in order to create the demand necessary for the coining of profits in the capitalist market.

Profits and Housing

Capitalist society in the throes of crisis is faced continually with the problems of planned economy. But so long as private property and profits remain the backbone—the unbroken backbone—of the economic system, a planned economy remains like a watery mirage in the desert, something thirsting after but far-distant and unattainable. Thus it is with any real housing program of which there is so much talk in banking and industrial circles. The proper housing of the masses is linked up with a myriad of problems that remain almost totally insoluble under capitalism. There is the problem of slum clearance; the moving of large masses out of the cities; the reallocation of industries; the establishment of so-called subsistence homesteads to "solve" the unemployment problem, etc.

What the capitalists desire is that the government shall somehow set the wheels of heavy industry going once more by means of a housing program involving Federal financing and subsidizing society. Thus "city demobilization" would immediately affect land values which would in turn affect the entire taxing structure of the state. There would be a profound effect on the transportation systems built around and through the big centers of population. The entire profit structure involved in the present distribution of foodstuffs would be disturbed. The relations between town and country, between the farmer and city worker, would undergo striking changes. Clearly the need for profits stands uncompromisingly in the way of real planning of housing.

Housing and the Building Workers

This does not mean that the government will not concoct schemes for aiding the languishing heavy industries through some form of subsidized housing. In its usual fashion the government will attempt to create the illusion that its real aim is to help the unemployed building trades workers. As a matter of fact the whole scheme of starting a housing boom is being linked up with the idea of stimulating greater demand by lowering building costs in the most radical manner. The one completely satisfactory method for accomplishing this objective known to the capitalists, is to conduct a fierce and relentless onslaught on the wages and standards of living of the construction workers.

The government is moving to take the lead in this process of "deflation" of costs. If present intimations become a reality, then we may expect a direct conflict between the construction workers and the capitalist state. Far from helping the building trades workers, the Federal authorities will aim a blow at them. Already there is an effort to encourage the mass production of factory-built houses ready to assemble. This would eliminate the need for any skilled workers who would become part of the permanent reserve army of unemployed. The use of new materials and factory methods is relied upon to create a new industry for capitalist exploitation. In this way, from every aspect the government's housing program contains within it a dark threat to the livelihoods of the construction workers.

Robins-Gras Free on Bail

Harold Robins and Andre Gras, whose conviction for assaulting a scab during the hotel strike was reversed last week by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, were released Wednesday on bail of $2,000 each pending the new trial ordered by the appeal court.

Happy to be free and ready again to take their places in the labor movement, Robins and Gras were confident that a new trial would prove their innocence once for all. They pointed out that the attempt of the District Attorney to appeal the Appellate Division's decision to the Court of Appeals, an attempt which was refused by the Presiding Justice of the Court of Appeals on the grounds that the Appellate Division's decision had been unanimous, showed that the District Attorney was afraid to take the case before a jury.

The Robins-Gras Defense Committee for Non-Partisan Labor Defense, will continue the fight for the freedom of Robins and Gras from the charges against them. Abraham Abramowitz, of the Socialist Lawyers Association, and Louis Glickhouse, the volunteer lawyers whose splendid brief resulted in the reversal of the original conviction will continue to serve as attorneys.

Munitions Makers Put the Screws on Roosevelt

President Overplays His Hand In Profitless-War Plan

WASHINGTON. — Last week's take-the-profit-out-of-war campaign was a lesson in capitalist politics. War has always been one of the crucial questions for a capitalist regime, for it is in war that the bloody contradictions of the class state become most apparent. While some 50,000 young Americans were killed and 150,000 wounded on a wage of exactly one dollar a day during the last war, 181 capitalists back home, who risked nothing, even their fortunes reported incomes of one million a year or over.

New Deal and War
There can be little doubt that Roosevelt recognizes the ultimate necessity of war if the capitalist regime in this country is to continue. One need only remark that while the government handed out one billion in relief under the New Deal, it spent two billion, exactly twice as much, on armaments.

The Nye committee on armaments has barely scratched the surface. If the investigators care to follow every lead, no matter how indirect, connected with munitions, they would finish by indicting the whole capitalist state as a monstrous device for oppression, graft, and murder. As it is, the committee has blundered on to some rather startling revelations of the conduct of our super-patriot, millionaire, "dollar a year" men during the last war. On Wednesday the committee was blithely prepared to show that not only the Dupont Co. but our War and Navy departments, and by inference the whole government as well as every financier in the country were involved in the exorbitant profits from the sale of war supplies to the government, and in the sale, at a tremendous profit, of munitions of enemies or potential enemies of the United States.

Roosevelt on the Spot

There can be no doubt that President Roosevelt was put under pressure by just those financial interests that found the Nye committee so dangerous. The President responded nobly. He responded too nobly, he overplayed his hand, and for twenty four hours it looked as if he had actually laid bare the real capitalist nature of "our democracy". However, he was forced to retract his original uncompromising stand, and the fortunate intervention of a hare-brained thirty year, two hundred billion dollar recovery scheme distracted public attention.

A brief glance at the President's end-profit-in-war pronouncement reveals its source and its intent. The New York Sun said, "In announcing the afternoon conference on war profit laws, President Roosevelt declared that he hoped war would never come again, and that he was taking up the question now because there was at this time no war cloud on the horizon."

No War Clouds?

Leaving aside the asinine pieties of hoping war out of existence where did Mr. Roosevelt get the idea that there was no war cloud on the horizon? The President knows that war with Japan over the Chinese market is always imminent; that war with Great Britain over the colonial market, especially in South America, is ever possible; that the war between Germany and France, now brewing, would involve the United States very rapidly; to mention a few war clouds. As for actual war—the Chaco dispute is, as the State Department knows, a war not between Bolivia and Paraguay, but a war

W. P. AND TRADE UNIONS

By ARNE SWABECK
Secretary of Trade Union Dept. of the Workers Party.

IN THE program of action adopted at the convention giving birth to the Workers Party the central point is its trade union activities. That is a job which the party intends to tackle in earnest in order to become a factor of influence in the trade union movement.

Thoroughly realistic, this program of action sets out objectives that are within reach of a live active force. Following further in the same fashion the initial steps are now under way to organize the party itself, its members who belong to trade unions, and to cement a firm contact with the progressive elements who are eagerly awaiting a lead to chart a new course in union movement today.

A trade union department has been set up. The party trade union fractions are being organized and the first steps taken to contact the live wire progressives in the various localities. Information will be exchanged mutually between the branches and the center, taking up such questions as: How to start the trade union activities; the organization of the party fractions; the organization of local progressive groups; the problem of organizing in unorganized shops; the burning issues in the trade union movement; the essence and meaning of the party's trade union policy, etc. These are, of course, only preliminary steps to get the machinery into motion in order to take up the bigger points on the order of the day.

Basic Tasks
The program of action for the trade union work centered around two basic propositions. The first and foremost is the creation of a national progressive movement in the trade unions. The second presented the idea of selection of a couple of concentration points, the section of the textile industry in New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania and the automobile industry in and around Detroit, Toledo and Cleveland.

Insofar as the first proposition is concerned, the crying need for a national progressive movement does not have to be emphasized to militant workers. In fact it represents to them a long felt need; but the forces to actually tackle the problem were not at hand. There is today not such a national movement in existence. Excellent examples have been set of what progressive and left wing policies mean and what can be accomplished when a group of determined militants begin to act in an organized fashion. We need mention only Minneapolis and Toledo. But these examples had so far mainly a local character.

that make this the only possible interpretation. First: The President, who is supposed to be taking profit out of war, concerns himself, not with corporations, but obviously with the mobilization of human beings. Second: The anti-labor, militaristic, capitalist nature of the board makes its intent plain. Third: The overwhelming evidence of history and circumstance points toward the conclusion that equal mobilization means equally low wages for workers, and equally higher profits for capitalists.

The Lever Act

During the last war the Lever Act, as the New York Post pointed out, was intended, so far as the public was concerned, to take the profits out of war. The Lever Act was never employed against a single one of those 181 who made over a million a year during the war. Although the Secretary of War once called the Duponts "outlaws" he later signed contracts with them. The Lever Act was supposed, just as the President's end-profit-in-war laws are supposed to be employed against excessive corporation and individual profit.

Such laws, such attempts at what purports to be reform, always greeted clamorously by liberals and right wing Socialists, react inevitably to the greater advantage of capital.

Against Labor

The Lever Act was employed, just as the present proposed laws will be employed, against labor. Striking unions were held for "conspiring to make unfair profit". Many strikes were broken, even as late as 1920, two years after the war, the strike of the Pennsylvania anthracite miners was broken on the just these grounds. Thus while 181 million dollar a year incomes went scot-free, trade unionists who tried to raise their wages a dollar or two, or cut their hours from ten to eight were accused of "conspiring to make unfair profits".

The President made his intention even more plain in completely neglecting the Nye committee. Evidently he could not afford to have any blunders associated with the delicate problem of making capitalist war palatable to the people.

The President overplayed his hand on the whole end-profit-in-war business. He made it quite plain that the government must and can only represent the capitalist class, and that New Deals, labor promises, welfare governments, all sorts of so-called reforms are not only predestined failures, but worse, come to serve more and more directly just those interests they pretend to regulate.

Foundation Fund Campaign

Fusion between the former American Workers Party and the Communist League of America, is consummated. The Workers Party of the U. S. is launched. The membership of the two organizations is now functioning in united branches and the enthusiasm engendered at the mass meeting which launched the party, is taking concrete form.

The eleven points outlined in the Program of Action, printed in the first issue of the New Militant are taking on life.

Reports from the country show that new applications for membership are being received everywhere. The organization of the two coast to coast tours is under way with a short three week Cannon-Muste tour as a forerunner to begin January 13. The Party's national educational committee is functioning and its program will soon be available for the branches. Two of the Party's concentration districts have been started. A pamphlet, embodying the Declaration of Principles and the Constitution of the Party is on the press. The national Trade Union Committee is gathering its forces and the sixty-day Party Foundation Fund Campaign is swinging into action.

This covers six points in the Program of Action. There still remain five points to be acted upon.

To accomplish the Program in full we must bend all our forces and energies toward the raising of the $5,000 within sixty days. A beginning has been made in that direction.

The New York District is collecting the Foundation Fund tax from its membership. More than $400 has been pledged and about $109 has been paid in cash as reported below.

Bound Volumes of THE MILITANT For 1933 and 1934 Each $1.50 From July 1931-Dec. 1932 $2.50 PIONEER PUBLISHERS 103 East 11th Street New York, N. Y.

wing or progressive policies or organizations. For the present, however, we do not intend to enter into a discussion of these questions. They will be taken up in subsequent articles in the New Militant dealing more directly with the purposes of the projected national progressive movement in the trade unions. At this moment our first task is to get the wheels into motion and to begin the first steps in our activities. To this end we are discussing this question directly with a number of outstanding progressive trade unionists.

Concentration Points

The idea of selecting a couple of concentration points for our trade union work has to do with our initial party stage when with limited forces it would not be advisable to attempt to spread over the whole field at once.

But this is not the only reason. In the two particular concentration points mentioned issues of the most important character are accumulating and great struggles are in prospect. The issues are of course not the same character in both instances and to that extent the approach to the problems differ. In the Detroit automobile area for example the real problem is still the one of establishing a union organization. But that also is a job for the militant forces. And so, with the initial preparations on the way our party will proceed to the bigger issues confronting it.

Harlan "Law" Still Active

HARLAN, Ky. — Carl Williams and two other union miners were attacked and beaten in the Louellen Hotel here by Ben Unthank, Frank White and George Lee, three of the 75 gunmen on Sheriff Middleton's deputy sheriff force.

"They are reds," the deputies said, explaining the attack.

Middleton, who was elected by the miners' vote, has been ordered by Lieutenant Denhart, chief of the state militia, to rid his force of "gunmen." Immediately after the election of Middleton he re-hired the deputies who terrorized the miners in the big strike of 1930. The miners say they have been "sold out" again.

Gunmen are procured to "uphold" the law and to prevent the miners from organizing in the United Mine Workers. Many of them are on the payrolls of the companies and the straighter they can shoot the more they are paid.

Denhart intervened in behalf of "the good state of Kentucky," which fears a repetition of the 1930 "national scandal" when the coal operators and the Sheriff's office crushed by violence an incipient union movement.

WORLD IN REVIEW

FASCIST STATE IN PORTUGAL

The dictatorship of President Carmona has ridden rough-shod over the rights of the workers and peasants of that country for the last nine years. Labor organizations have been suppressed, their publications suspended and workers' leaders imprisoned. As a culmination of the process that has been definitely developing for some time, the ruling clique has now decided to convert Portugal into a corporative state modeled after Mussolini's Italy. The change is to take place "peacefully" through elections in which only one slate of candidates appears on the ballot. In view of the weakness of the Portuguese labor movement, and the complete lack of a revolutionary party, it appears that Carmona will encounter no serious opposition to his schemes at the present time.

CHACO WAR TOLL HEAVY

As the Paraguayan army prepares to drive the Bolivian troops from their last strongholds in the Gran Chaco, the government of that country has rejected the proposals for settlement offered by the League of Nations. Flushed with victory, the Paraguayans are now unwilling to terminate the two and a half years of open warfare, excepting on their own terms.

This conflict, having its origins in a territorial dispute involving American and British oil interests, has already cost the lives of 80,000 men, sixty per cent of which were Bolivians. Between 350,000 and 400,000 men were mobilized during the course of the struggle.

POWER BALANCE IN EUROPE

The following significant item, reporting from Paris that French policy is turning in the direction of reaching an agreement with Germany, is taken from the British New Leader, organ of the Independent Labor Party:

"In well-informed circles here it is believed that French policy has turned in the direction of reaching an agreement with Germany. Official circles are now reconciled to the Saar Plebiscite resulting in a return of the territory to Germany, and it is recognized that nothing effective can be done to prevent Germany re-arming.

"This turn in policy is likely to affect French-Soviet relations. The critics of Soviet foreign policy have always taken the view that the French capitalist government would be an unreliable ally of Soviet Russia. If an agreement with Germany can be reached, the French government will not hesitate to throw over Russia.

"Austria is also changing its attitude towards Germany. The government has issued instructions to the Press (1) not to print anything in future regarding German re-arming, and (2) to treat the Saar problem 'in a manner favorable to Germany'."

TREND IN FRANCE DOWNWARD

The general economic situation continues to go from bad to worse, according to a news dispatch from Paris in the Sunday, Dec. 15 issue of the New York Times. "Unemployment statistics just issued," says the dispatch, covering the ending last Saturday, "show a rise of 9,658 over the previous week and 115,223 over the corresponding week in 1933."

"The total was 384,841. These are registered as wholly unemployed, and it is generally agreed that the actual total is about four times the official figure. Competent observers expect unemployment to reach the 500,000 mark by the end of February.

"The industrial production index is pursuing a steady downward trend, which indicates contraction of trade. Bankruptcies have reached an all-time record. The stock market index is down, although bonds have risen slightly. Railway earnings and car loadings declined."

SECRET WAR PLANS

WASHINGTON.—Despite reports that the War Department will not permit the Senate committee investigating the munitions industry to bare to the country the secret arrangements between the government and big business for the mobilization of 1,200 peace-time and munitions factories for the production of gases, guns and explosives in the next war, Senator Gerald P. Nye, North Dakota liberal, chairman of the committee, said that the "plans" would be gone into. Nye will ask an appropriation of $50,000 from Congress to continue the committee's work.

He said the committee would keep secret the allocation of wartime procurements among plants and the details of arrangements between the government and industry in regard to kinds and quantities of war materials to be produced.

labor seeks unity with black. That was true then as now. To make secure its position it exonerated white bourgeois philanthropy and renounced all efforts of solidarity of white and black labor. They preferred and still prefer seeing black labor remain subservient to the opulent whites.

Negro Workers in the Early American Labor Movement

Fight for Social and Economic Equality Since 1869

(Ed. Note.—This is the first of a series of articles by comrade Williamson on the history and problems of Negro labor in the United States.)

By SIMON WILLIAMSON

Negro labor in America showed the tendency to unite with white labor as early as 1869. It was then that four delegates, representing the interest of the black proletariat, appeared before the national convention of the National Labor Union. This organization averred itself as a purely industrial union, having for its only objective the securing for the producer his full share of all that he produced. However, after the first convention of the new labor organization no Negro delegates seemed to have appeared at any of its succeeding representative affairs. There seems to have existed a difference of opinion among the various strata of the organization on the Negro's position as an industrial worker.

This change of attitude toward the black proletariat was, no doubt, due to the peculiar psychology that the new industrial bourgeoisie was using upon the white worker for the purpose of weakening its class understanding and rendering it impotent in the face of all attacks.

Just emerging from slavery, the black worker, especially in the south, found himself master of the crafts of his era. This made him a fierce competitor of the white proletariat who was less skilled in workmanship. The Negro was not, however, conscious of his true position as a workman. His only interest was to find the necessities of life at whatever wage was available. Low wages to white artisans were lucrative salaries to Negro artisans just emerging from chattel slavery. Thus one could easily be played against the other.

Sowing Seed of Hatred

The slave masters were responsible for the uneven development of the two workmen, and sowed the seeds of hatred and mistrust which is responsible for their disassociation until this day.

In the cities of the south, where skilled labor was needed, the bourgeoisie, the former slave masters, employed black labor because of its skill and cheapness. Thus white labor came to regard black labor as a foe rather than friend, that sought to take its means of livelihood. Whereas the black worker who experienced the arrogance of the white, developed a feeling of mistrust instead of comradeship.

Knights of Labor

The National Labor Union finally gave way to the Knights of Labor, an organization of all races and creeds, that sought to serve the needs of all who toiled. Thousands of Negro proletarians entered the struggles led by the early knights of the American labor movement in various parts of the country. It may be somewhat astonishing to many of us to know that William Sylvis, president and one of the founders of the National Labor Union, as early as 1868 made the assertion after a trip through the southern states, that:

"Careful management, and a vigorous campaign will unite the whole laboring population of the south, white and black, upon our platform. The people down here will unite on the money question, because everybody is poor."

The Years 1881-86

Sylvis was partly right, but his dream is yet to be realized. He visualized an age not his own. However, thousands of Negro and white workers lined up behind the Knights of Labor between the years 1881 and 1886. During these perilous years of crisis that followed the Civil war the militancy of the black proletariat reached superb heights. Their demands were for equal citizenship and, logically, a higher standard of living. Their demands were as piercing and effective in the struggles of organized labor of that time as any demands formulated by any section of the labor movement in America.

Development of Industry

The technical development of the United States' industry, the short-sightedness of the white proletariat, the mistrust of the Negro worker, and the betrayal of the Negro middle class are responsible for the many setbacks of the black proletariat in the United States.

The new industrial system brought with it new crafts and devices that required time and money to master. The Negro worker was possessed of neither. His precarious lot forced him to succumb in face of disaster and to return to the plantation of his former slave master. In fact but few had left the plantation. Here they were forced to lead the miserable life of tenant farmers and share croppers.

White Labor Monopoly

White labor finally organized itself into the craft unions of the American Federation of, should we say white, labor. These newly organized craft unions in many cases barred Negro labor, to insure white craftsmen of steady employment. They sought to do for their crafts what the capitalists sought to do for their wealth. They sought to gain a monopoly on their crafts. Where Negro artisans were admitted, they were placed in separate locals and given a lower wage.

Middle Class Negroes

The Negro middle class, which we shall discuss later on in detail, always despised white labor. It had made a bid for power. It can only exist on the antagonism of labor which has resulted in separation. They get their chance in such a state of affairs to become the small leeches on the backs of black labor. They become mistrustful, and afraid for their position, whenever white

Communist International, at the head of a delegation from the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, to ask approval of this commutation. He explained: We must show that we do not disregard the wishes of the social democratic workers of Europe who have asked us to show leniency. We must convince them that we do not follow a policy of revenge. And, moreover, we must show the world that we are strong and can afford to moderate our penalties against those who are completely defeated.

If the Soviet Government could act so openly and yet so firmly, could display such strength and, at the same time, such moderation in 1922, how is the present procedure—the secrecy, the hysteria and the suppression of all real information—to be explained?

How does it happen that secret trials and secret executions are necessary in the 18th year of the revolution? The capitalist opposition was smashed to bits in the civil war, and the interventionist armies were routed in battle while Lenin was yet at the helm, while Trotsky led the Red Army and Zinoviev was chairman of the Comintern and the Petrograd Soviet. The great advances of Soviet economy in the past ten years, unparalleled in the history of the world, cut the ground from beneath the feet of capitalist restorationist elements and completely shattered their morale. How does it happen that they can now suddenly rise up again and begin an aggressive campaign of terror?

If it is maintained that precisely the growing strength and invincible position of the Soviet Union have inspired some foreign capitalist State or States to despatch attack—if that is so, then it is necessary to mobilize the working class, especially the workers in the country or countries involved. And for that, not secrecy and ambiguity are needed but the plain truth plainly told. The imperialists and their diplomats work very well in the dark; for them whispers and hints suffice. Not so the toiling masses; they move in the broad daylight; they need to see and to know where they are going. If some capitalist power is attacking or preparing to attack the Soviet Union at the present time it is necessary to let the workers know the name of the enemy. It is necessary to drag the conspirators out into the open and put their agents on trial before the eyes of the world in order to inform and mobilize the workers for the defense of the Soviet Union.

This, however, is not the course being followed by Stalin, the Soviet bureaucracy, the Communist International. The Daily Worker illustrates the method which is being followed—the method of sowing confusion and demoralization in the working class by hinting one day about unnamed capitalist powers and the next day about party-political opponents of the Soviet bureaucracy and the C. I., who, as every one knows, have nothing to do with capitalist governments. Instead of reporting facts and citing proofs and appealing for a common working class front for the defense of the Soviet Union, as would be done by serious people if there were a real danger and a serious desire to meet it, the Daily Worker occupies itself with bizarre descriptions of the "united front of counter-revolution stretching all the way from the Japanese imperialists to the German fascist butchers and on down to the Russian white guards, the Trotskyites with their unholy alliance of J. P. Cannon and A. J. Muste," and so on and so forth. (Dec. 19.)

The workers of the United States have seen the Daily Worker and the so-called Communist Party pursue this tactic of throwing mud at any and every one who ventures to criticize their insane policies. The workers of the U. S. see through this tactic. It is discredited. Nobody, not even the C. P. members will believe this latest slander. Only insane demagogues could lead to the resort to it now. The inevitable effect is to deepen the distrust of the present bureaucracy of the C. I. and the Soviet Union.

We do not know the facts surrounding the assassination of Kirov. They are concealed from us as they are concealed from the whole international working class. We do not know whether he was killed by a white guard or by a worker whose antagonism to the bureaucracy led him to the anarchistic act of individual terror. There is plenty of ground for the latter assumption, since the individual responsible is reported as a former member of the party. If that is really the case, and if similar attempts have been made or planned by others, the international working class is entitled to know all the facts and is also entitled to an explanation of why such incidents, which never occurred in Lenin's time, occur now in the 18th year of the revolution. Such a movement, taking the extreme form of individual terrorism, could only arise from profound social causes and would need the inspiration of an anarchistic or social-revolutionary philosophy. If such a movement, animated by such a philosophy, really exists today in the Soviet Union it is a fearful indictment of the Soviet bureaucracy.

In any event, whether the terroristic acts were committed by capitalist agents or by demoralized and disoriented workers, the attempt to attribute the responsibility for them to party-political opponents of Stalin is a fraud on his face, and every revolutionary worker knows it. Every one in the least familiar with the history and literature of the Marxist movement knows that the Marxists always based themselves on the mass movement of the workers and opposed individual terrorism as a political weapon on the ground that it operates against the organization of the mass movement and becomes a substitute for it. Marx and Engels opposed individual terrorism. Lenin, following them, did likewise in all the years of his revolutionary activity. So did Trotsky and Zinoviev and every one of the leaders of the Russian revolution. The Communists in every country have had to explain this to reactionaries who accused them of terroristic actions. Is it necessary now to explain it to the Stalinists?

Evidently they do not dare to make the direct accusation that Zinoviev, the former chairman of the Comintern and the co-worker of Lenin, had anything to do with a terroristic group. But they have begun to whisper and insinuate it in order, at the next stage, to make a bolder and more direct accusation and then to "connect" Trotsky and his adherents and everyone else who raises a critical voice.

In the light of what has taken place in recent times, in the light, especially, of the turns in Soviet foreign policy—the recognition agreement with the United States, the entry into the League of Nations which Lenin called the "thieves kitchen of Geneva", the pacts with capitalist governments to defend the boundaries established by the Versailles Treaty—in the light of all this, the enlightened workers of all countries have the duty to probe deeply into the present situation in the Soviet Union and ask what is behind the official propaganda. Does Stalin contemplate a still further turn to the right in foreign policy, does he seek to silence it by a preventive terror? Is the talk about a capitalist attack a pretext to alarm the masses and enable Stalin to take bloody revenge on honest opponents in the revolutionary camp? Is the revolutionary opposition to the regime of Stalin growing inside the country as it is growing outside on the international arena?

We contend that the present methods of the Stalin leadership, which bears the responsibility for a chain of working class defeats throughout the world, is aiming a mortal blow at the Russian revolution itself. The Stalin group would lead the Soviet Union, as it led the German working class, blindfolded to catastrophe. The international working class is the one power in the world that can prevent this catastrophe. It must do so in its own interest, as well as in the interest of the Russian revolution, for the fate of one is bound up with the other.

The defense of the Soviet Union, its real defense by revolutionary workers, not the empty pretences of careerists, not the counterfeit defense of those who cover up and justify every crime of the bureaucracy and slander honest opponents for hire—the real defense of the Soviet Union requires a merciless criticism of the methods of the Stalin bureaucracy in the present situation, a demand for complete information produced at open trials and a mighty proletarian protest against the attempt to link the proletarian opponents of the Stalin regime with the agents of capitalist counter-revolution.

Today again, as in the first years of its existence when the imperialist bandits of the whole world surrounded it with a ring of steel, the fate of the Russian Revolution depends directly on the international working class. The task today is more complicated, but the responsibility is no less direct. The Soviet Union is the greatest conquest that has been gained by the working class in all its history. It embodies the inspiration, the hope and the example that will lead the workers to victory and emancipation throughout the world. The international working class must come to the aid of the Soviet Union now against the mortal dangers which menace it from within as, from the first, they have defended it against the external enemy.

The defense of the Soviet State requires now more than ever a merciless criticism and exposure of the usurping bureaucracy. It requires the building of a revolutionary proletarian force in the capitalist countries strong enough to put pressure on the bureaucracy and to give real aid to the working class of the Soviet Union. Above all, it requires a force that can challenge capitalism in its seats of power and overthrow it.

That means for us—

Joseph Zack Joins Workers Party

In the C. I. and the C.P.U.S.A. arose in my mind as a major issue of even greater importance than the trade union question itself.

I thought: "If I, a party member of 15 years standing, can be deprived of my rights so easily, what chance has an ordinary party member to express his opinions on any basic question?"

I soon enough realized that in order to understand what had happened to the C. P. I had to unravel a whole chain of events and problems upon which I found out that the abolition of inner democracy in the party and the Communist International had its origin with the expulsion of 14 members (co-workers of Lenin) from the Central Committee of the Russian Party, led by Trotsky, and suppression of their platform four weeks before the party convention in 1927. Following this event the same regime was established gradually in all parties of the Comintern.

Digging further I found out that the Stalin regime had revised the policy of Lenin on the colonial question and the independence of the proletarian party, affiliating the C. P. of China in 1924-27 to the Kuomintang (bourgeois party led by Chiang Kai Chek), thus becoming a partner to the betrayal of the Chinese revolution. At about the same time the C.P.U.S.A. was pursuing the policy of organizing the Farmer-Labor party and flirting with La Follette in the United States. All of this constituted a denial of the independent role and leadership of the proletariat and its party in the struggle of the masses in and outside of the colonies. The same thing was done in England through the alliance with the trade union bureaucrats that betrayed the British general strike in the top united front known as the Anglo-Russian Committee.

I had to realize that the theory of "social fascism" which then followed as the next "general line" and which represented the "left" zig-zag away from Leninism, with its exclusive policy of "united front from below", brought in its train the then "new" trade union policy of "Red unions" and our isolation from the masses, working into the hands of the labor-fakers and social democracy, a line of policy which led to the defeat of the working class everywhere and capitulation to Hitlerism in Germany. The same pseudo-left line isolated the peasantry from the working class in China, resulting in an isolated peasant war and so-called soviets without the working class.

In each case the C. I. declared that its line has been proven correct by events, that the treacheries of social democracy are to blame for the defeats in spite of the correct line of the C. I. In Bulgaria, however, the C. P. had a majority of the working class and a decisive following among the peasantry. Still the bourgeoisie defeated the working class with the greatest of ease. The C. I. has never explained yet how the social democracy was able to keep a dominating hold over the masses if the policy of the C. I. was correct. They simply assume that the masses were incapable of responding to a correct policy. In each case C. I. representatives were on the ground and the policy was shaped by them personally and by directives from Moscow; hence, the failures and defeats cannot logically be blamed on the "inexpertness" of the local leaders.

I then had to look for the root of the problem, so to say, for it cannot be possible that all this train of major defeats of the working class since Lenin died, inside and outside of the U. S., can be ascribed to everybody else, with the C. P. being always correct. I found that at the bottom of it all is the nationalist theory of Stalin of "Socialism in One Country"—a complete departure from the proletarian internationalism of Lenin. This theory lies at the root not only of the disastrous policies of the C. I., led by Stalin, but also the present unproletarian foreign policy of the Soviet government. The work of all the parties of the C. I. is thus subordinated to the exclusive aim of "building socialism in one country", a policy which is not only non-Marxist but cannot be a base for the attraction of the international proletariat and the realization of its revolution. Such a policy is bound to lead to the weakening of the Soviet power itself, a distortion of its course and its disassociation from the international revolution and hence to the weakening and defeat of the entire working class in and outside the Soviet Union.

The latest zig-zag of the C. I. under Stalin is now to the right again, showing strong signs of degeneration into menshevism and social patriotism in the face of the imminent war danger. At a time when the social democratic leaders are about to repeat their traitorous role of 1914 the C. I. signs non-aggression pacts with them (united front from the top again) which include (France) clauses not to criticize the S. P. leaders even inside of the C. P. meetings. This is a country whose government is in alliance with the Soviet government and where the S. P. bureaucracy is preparing to play a patriotic role in case of war. The same

"non-aggression" pact" was offered to the Second International as a whole.

On the trade union question, in order to do away with this "irritant" to the united front with social democracy and the labor bureaucrats, particularly in countries of prospective war alliance, the new unions, regardless of their mass basis or the will of the membership are being driven and manipulated back into the reformist Federations on any terms. The ruthless policy of "red unions" is thus giving way to a fetishism of the A. F. of L. and a policy of capitulation covered with left phrases to the labor fakers.

Thinking over these questions I found that, all and severally, they were the problems raised by the Russian opposition led by Trotsky; that these were the reasons that this opposition, the true followers of Lenin, were expelled from the Russian party and from Stalin's Comintern.

I found that in order to isolate the Communist workers from the "contaminating" influence of Trotsky's Leninist position, the discussion of these major problems is forbidden. Inner democracy is throttled in all the parties. These sterling revolutionists, who were more than anyone else working more against the stream, are branded as "counter-revolutionists", and pretense is made that their criticism of Stalin's bureaucratic regime is slander and opposition to the Soviet power.

Stalin and his bureaucratic clique of usurpers rose to power on the decline of the revolutionary wave and the tiredness of the Soviet masses after war, civil war and intervention. They suppressed Lenin's testament in which Lenin, in his last words to the party before his death, demanded Stalin's removal as a menace to the party and the working class. They introduced a system of double-bookkeeping in the Communist movement. They did not dare to print the Bolshevik program of the Russian Opposition. The Stalin clique, when polemizing with opponents, introduces false quotations that have nothing in common with the actual point of view spoken or written by them. They imprison and exile proletarian critics of their disastrous adventurist and opportunist policy. They introduced the alien concept of Napoleonic "big shots" and papal infallibility into the proletarian movement. These, in brief, are the reasons why they cannot hold the adherence of serious, honest revolutionists. These are the reasons for the decay and decline of the C. P., its enormous turnover in membership, mass flight of the workers from it.

I therefore join with those international revolutionists in the Workers Party of the U. S. and throughout the world who continue to represent in theory and practice the best traditions of Leninism and the international working class movement.

To those still remaining in the C. P. I say: Workers, remember Lenin's word that "anyone who does not acquaint himself truly with both sides of the controversy before deciding is an idiot". I have been guilty of such idleness for a number of years, but no more.

Comradely,
JOSEPH ZACK.

P.S. In a series of articles to follow, I will explain in a manner undeniable by any one the actual situation in the C.P.U.S.A., both as to the trade union question and inner regime.

Merry Christmas - For Whom?

lot of mild insanity, induced by hardship and old age.

As I walked down the street one man accosted me.

Waiting

"I've been waiting for you," he said, "I've been waiting right here ever since Monday."

I told him he was mistaken.

"Don't tell me, I know your tricks. Didn't you promise me you'd be coming down?"

I pointed out that we had never met.

"No," he mumbled, "We never met; but just the same you can't fool me, you said you were going to meet me here."

Further on I leaned up against the wall opposite the dirty grey lodging house. A continuous line on crutches issued from the door marked MEN. I guessed that those who were crippled were fed inside, instead of at the ward.

An old six-footer with an expression of good humor started to swing across the street. One of his crutch points slipped into a crack in a manhole cover. The crutch shattered and he fell to the pavement. He didn't want to be picked up, and managed to right himself with the remaining crutch. With some trouble he hobbled over and leaned against the wall near me.

He was embarrassed, although no one had paid any attention to his fall. He shouted and mumbled every time anyone passing saw the broken crutch lying in the street.

"It's a violation of the municipal ordinance," he yelled to no one in particular, "There is a state law against it, there ought to be a railing."

He was silent and then began to shout again. He liked to use long words and pretend he was making a serious political or religious oration.

I asked if I couldn't get him another crutch.

"Crutch, crutch?" he said, "Where are you going to get one. This is a fifty-six inch crutch; they don't make many that long."

I went across the street and interviewed one of the clerks.

Gale Christmas

"Yes," he said, "They get an extra dinner Christmas. Chicken, mashed turnips and potatoes; same as they had Thanksgiving. We'll have a tree for them. The police band comes up and the police glee club sings. Then they all get Tootsie Rolls to take home with them."

"We're getting more and more every day, feeding about twenty thousand at this station right now. More and more white collar people too. They hang on as long as they can; but finally get tired of living on relatives, and take it on the chin."

I went back and reassured the six-footer that some one would be over with a crutch.

On the way out I fell in step behind a well dressed young man. When I asked him for a story he was suspicious.

"You ain't a phony," he asked, "A detective or something?"

No I wasn't a detective.

"What do you want my story for? It's just like all the rest. You can see what it's all about, can't you?"

A Place to Stay

I insisted.

"Well," suddenly, "I'll tell you, but I won't tell you my name. I don't want anybody to know I'm coming here."

"I'm an Irishman, born in the old country twenty-four years ago. I've been in America sixteen years. I've been a member of the union, local sixty, for seven years. A mechanic, a plasterer I am. I lost my last job about eight months ago. I haven't been able to get a scrap of work since. What the hell, a fella can't starve, so after three months I started coming down here. I gotta place to stay all right, but I gotta eat."

I said goodbye to the Irish plasterer, and went on down town to Corleas Hook on the East River. There, beside the river, fronting on a bare, municipal, waterfront park, is the empty Gold Dust factory building.

The Gold Dust Lodge

The tugs chugging up and down the East River whistle mournfully.

The Gold Dust factory has been lent to the Salvation Army. The machinery has been cleared out, and row upon row of dingy cots have taken its place. There is only one small entrance to the massive building, a door at the dark end of the loading platform.

Men kept coming out the door, turning up their collars, and drifting across the bare cement of the park. I discovered that the memorial Greek temple in the center of the park housed a public toilet in its base. The men drifted over to the temple, went in, reappeared and drifted back, hardly stopping, never looking around, never speaking, drifted back and disappeared into the tiny doorway of the factory.

I stopped one, a blond man dressed in a new pair of pants and a leather jacket.

"Story? You want a story?" He laughed apologetically and spoke with a thick accent. "There is no story. I am a chauffeur, a chauffeur for private cars; people don't keep chauffeurs any longer."

"I am Swedish; I have been back and forth many times. The last in 1930, now I wish I had not come."

Any family?

"A wife and a child in Sweden. They are all right, I thank God for it; my wife is working."

I asked why he didn't get himself sent back.

"I can't do that," he said, "I must have money when I go back. If I do not buy my own ticket and have five or six hundred dollars when I arrive they will think I am a failure. In Sweden they think there is still prosperity in America. If I come back poor they will not give me work."

I asked how long he had been at the Gold Dust.

"Just two months this winter. I am always trying to get work. In summer I usually manage all right. Last summer I worked in a restaurant. They do not pay enough, only your meals; and I must make money to get back to Sweden."

"Maybe it will be better this summer. Who can tell?"

I asked what he thought of the New Deal.

"The New Deal? It is nothing new. What is the difference if you get all the unemployed together, like this, or leave them all alone; there is nothing new either way."

"Christmas? I suppose we'll get the same thing we had Thanksgiving. Chicken or something. There's a Joker in that though. I missed the Thanksgiving dinner, and all they had that night was fried potatoes and coffee."

What They Told

They told of a speed-up system so great the men can't take time out for hygienic needs, so great that older men are forced out of employment.

They told of the Ford welfare plan, whereby employees may get out of a $4 wage, $1 in cash and the rest in credit for relief supplies, so that most of them are unable to check on exactly what they are getting.

And they told of a spy system so effective that when Smith lost the minutes of a meeting of the M.E. S.A., he got a copy from the files of the Motor Products Co.

They described how Ford had movies taken of a mass demonstration, then fired all his employees who could be identified. He even fired men who tried to take up a collection for flowers for four men, killed last year in the demonstration at the River Rouge plant.

These and many other things, the workers told Roosevelt's deputies.

In Toledo the M.E.S.A. and the A. F. of L. union prepared to the board. The Toledo branch of the Workers Party, which has been active in the automobile field, planned to have a speaker to show the impossibility of stabilization in the automotive industry (or any other industry) under the profit system. Using a factual survey of the Toledo automotive industry, the plan is to expose the automobile labor board and the entire NRA machinery.

Theatre Benefit

A theatre benefit of "Sailors of Cattaro", the new play of the Theatre Union, will be given by the Workers Party Thursday, Feb. 7, at the Civic Repertory Theatre. The play, which follows "Stevord" at the theatre, is the third presentation of the Theatre Union. It has been receiving very favorable criticisms.

Tickets for the benefit will be sold at the regular theatre prices, 30 cents to $1.50. They may be obtained by members of the party from their branch secretaries, and by sympathizers at the party's national headquarters, Room 702, 112 East 19th Street, N. Y. C.

operation between the editorial and the composing and printing rooms. Unfortunately, the press group has not yet taken a firm stand. Privately the leaders are for the strike. But to come out publicly would put their membership on the spot when their contract expired. So they have hedged.

Newark Typographical Union 103, for example, after directing the president to appoint a committee to draw up a resolution endorsing the strike, but "in no way to interfere with our contractual relations with the Ledger", never received a report from the committee. Finally, after the Allied Council had passed its resolution of endorsement, the committee voted to ask the executive committee whether a separate resolution for the typographical local was still wanted. They are still afraid of offending the publisher.

No Arbitration

The Newark Newspaper Guild, on the other hand, has drawn a clear "no arbitration" policy and has made history by fighting a white collar strike on trade union lines. Within four hours after the strike was called, at 4 in the morning, 42 of the staff of 53 had walked out. The strike was an answer to Publisher Russell, who, when the guild repeatedly requested him to meet representatives to consider establishing contractual relations, fired eight guild members.

Scab-Law or No Law

The strike was well organized at once. A sound truck for the duration of the strike was donated by Motion Picture Operators' Union 306 of New York. The men on the truck were instructed not to use the word "scabs" which is considered libelous in New Jersey, and not to ask people not to buy the Ledger. That was boycott and against the law. Today, with a new law making its operation illegal, the truck rides past the Ledger office, blaring the word "scabs".

The changing attitude of the strikers is illustrated by the story of one girl reporter. A month ago, when the strike was new, she volunteered to broadcast from a radio station. "I'd rather do anything than picket," she said.

The other day a mass picket squad came into the headquarters. As the others piled their picket signs on the table, one girl left hers on. "I think I'll go out for another hour or so in a few minutes," she said. "I think the scab who is working my job will be coming out."

It was the same girl who had not wanted to picket. Thus do workers—even white collar workers—learn how the bosses treat their loyal workers when they begin fighting for themselves and their rights.

Hits C. P. Sabotage
In Trial of Cal. Militants

The resolution of the Berkeley membership meeting does not merely words in its condemnation of this whole procedure. It says, "the conduct of the District Office in conjunction with that of the International Labor Defense in this case is one of sabotage." Publicity is described as "misleading" and the lack of a united front "criminal".

Protest is made at the failure to raise bail for the politically important comrades, especially Decker, and the demand is made that it be furnished at once in order that it may be used for propaganda purposes in the raising of bail for the others.

The demands presented in the membership resolution included: The formation of a united front defense movement to include all working class political parties and the trade unions on the basis of a fight for elementary working class rights; non-sectarian methods; a united campaign of mass meetings and demonstrations; real publicity for the case; a real campaign to raise funds on a broad basis for bail and trial and appeal expenses.

(Ed. Note.—Next week we hope to have a comprehensive news report about the extremely important Sacramento case.)

Prepare for a Year of Determined Struggle!

To the American Working Class:

The resources of this continent on which we live are almost boundless. The productive machinery built up by the workers, farmers and technicians of this country can turn out goods in unsurpassed abundance. The working class is trained and equipped to operate and perfect this machinery. Under these circumstances every family, every person in the land, might today have food and clothing in abundance, a comfortable home, adequate medical care, abundant opportunity for education and recreation, security against accident, sickness, unemployment and old age, and the assurance of rapid and speedy improvement in the standard of living.

This we might have.

What we actually do have is far different. Seventeen million men, women and children are living off relief. Many million more are forced to live below what even conservative government departments call a decent standard of living. Fifteen million are unemployed. The threat of losing his job hangs like a sword over every worker, technician and professional. Homes acquired with hard-earned savings are sold over their owners' heads. Families are evicted from their houses and thrown on the streets. Poor farmers are put off the land and thrown on the labor market to compete with the workers. Farmers who still nominally own their own land are loaded down with a growing burden of mortgages and debts and are less and less able to make a living from the sale of their produce. Millions of young men and women are unable to obtain jobs even at starvation wages. The aged are thrown on the scrap-heap without assurance of so much as a bare subsistence. This is the real picture of America as it faces the new year.

CONDITIONS GET WORSE, NOT BETTER

The economic system under which we live—capitalism—is responsible for these conditions. Under this system, the resources of the nation, the factories, mines, railroads, are owned and controlled by private individuals or corporations. The capitalists use these resources and operate this machinery not for fulfilling the needs of the masses but in order to make profits for themselves. The masses are left without the means to purchase the goods which they have themselves produced. Under this system, which is now everywhere in decline and decay, the workers cannot find deliverance. Even for individuals the possibility of personal improvement every day becomes narrower. For the masses, so long as capitalism endures, conditions will grow fundamentally and rapidly worse.

This has been proved before our own eyes by recent developments in Germany and elsewhere in Europe.

New Year's Manifesto of the Workers Party

In this period of the decline of capitalism, the industrialists and financiers cannot maintain their profits without pushing the standards of the people lower and lower. Resistance to this process they crush by any and every means. Where the workers themselves do not act in time, a brutal Fascist dictatorship is set up. All democratic rights are suppressed, all the forms of democracy are abandoned. The trade unions, the cooperatives, all the independent organizations of the workers and farmers are smashed. The right to strike is abrogated. Open terror is exercised against any one who dares to raise his voice against this capitalist dictatorship. Women are driven back into medieval subjection. The intellectuals are persecuted. The basest racial and national prejudices are called into play. At the behest of the same capitalist interests struggling for markets, raw materials, outlets for investment, the nations pile up armaments. Inevitably war results. The masses who, under capitalism, are machine-fodder in time of peace, become cannon-fodder to be slaughtered by millions in time of war. Humanity sinks back into the Dark Ages. Fascism and War—that is the only "way out" capitalism can offer. Trying to "save capitalism" can have no other result, whether in the U. S. or elsewhere.

THE "NEW DEAL" SWINDLE

Yet it is now as plain as day that this is just what Roosevelt is trying to do—"save capitalism".

The New Deal is the same old Raw Deal for the masses. The unemployed have not been put back to work. Relief standards are being beaten down and capitalists again talk openly of throwing the jobless back on the mercies of private charity. The minimum wage set in NRA codes have become the maximum. On the other hand, the number of millionaires has increased under Roosevelt, and corporation profits have gone up. The employers have been encouraged by the government to organize one hundred per cent. Monopoly capitalists, the "big fellows" as against the "little fellows", have been strengthened. The right of the workers to organize and bargain collectively, supposedly guaranteed in section 7a of the NRA, has not, however, been enforced. On the contrary, company unions have been encouraged. Roosevelt himself wrote the infamous "proportional representation" clause into the automobile code. Strikes have been sabotaged. The use of militia against striking workers has gone unrehearsed. "Liberal" members of the Roosevelt administration helped to whip up the "red scare" against the striking marine workers of the Pacific coast. The same administration acts openly in Cuba and elsewhere as the direct agent of American imperialists and is carrying out the greatest naval building program in all the peace time history of this nation. The warning is clear: here in the U. S. also, no matter how "liberal" may be the pretensions or even the motives of individuals, the attempt to "save capitalism" can end only in the horrors of Fascism and War.

THE ONLY WAY OUT

There is only one way for the masses to avoid this catastrophe and to achieve for themselves and their children plenty, security, freedom and peace. That is to abolish the present economic system—to take the productive plant and the agencies of distribution and ownership and control of the natural resources, the communication out of the hands of private individuals and corporations, to use and operate them for the fulfillment of human needs and not for private profit, to build a socialist society.

This can be accomplished only by the revolutionary action of the working class. The poor farmers, the doubly exploited and persecuted Negro people, and the impoverished middle class can find no salvation except by supporting the workers' revolution. The capitalists will resort to any means in order to retain their power and their profits. The government serves as their agent. Unless, therefore, the masses are to yield supinely to their enemies and be plunged into the horrors of Fascism and War, they must take control of their own destiny. Having "grown weary of existing government" they must exercise "their revolutionary right to overthrow it".

CAPITALISM CANNOT BE "REFORMED"

Reforms and half-measures offer no way out of the misery, insecurity and chaos of capitalism. Advocates of such solutions only confuse and mislead the workers. The New Dealers, the Huey Longs, the Bilbos, the Father Coughlins, and the various cheap American imitations of European Fascists—they all fawn upon the "under-dog" and the "little man" and profess to "have the interest of the workers at heart", but they sabotage strikes, oppose militant unionism and bitterly attack the revolutionary movement through which alone the masses can gain their freedom. Whatever their demagogic protestations or their motives, therefore, they serve the capitalists and prepare the way for Fascism. The Upton Sinclairs, the Social Democrats and the Farmer-Laborites tell the masses that by "civilized", "peaceful", "democratic", "gradual" methods, by "voting for the right party", they can use the apparatus of capitalist government to bring in Utopia for the workers. Here also experience sounds a warning. These methods used by the Social Democrats of Europe have led only to Fascism, to the open, brutal, war-like dictatorship of finance capitalists who have abolished all the forms of "democracy" and plunged whole nations into barbarism.

To the professional, technical, and agricultural workers—to the farmers—to the Negro people and all oppressed races—to the small shopkeepers—to all exploited groups, we say: Only by the complete abolition of capitalism can you gain freedom from insecurity, discrimination, exploitation and tyranny. The solution of the industrial workers, a socialist society, is the only solution for your problems also. The one road to the socialist society is the road of the revolutionary seizure of power by the working class and its allies. Refuse, therefore, to heed those who seek to discredit or to attack the workers' revolutionary movement and to organize you in or around any other social movement. Under whatever guise they may appear, they are the agents of capitalism and they prepare the way for Fascism.

THE NEED OF A REVOLUTIONARY PARTY

In order that the daily struggle against the lowering of the standard of living may be carried on effectively and in order that as speedily as possible the workers may take power in order to establish plenty and security, it is necessary that the advanced workers be organized in a revolutionary political party. Not "just another political party" seeking to elect somebody to office under the capitalist system, but the vanguard section of the working class itself, organized for leadership in revolutionary action.

Both the Socialist Party and the Communist Party, the Second International and the Third International, have in recent years demonstrated that they are utterly incapable, whether in the United States or in other countries, of organizing the workers for effective defense against the offensive of capital, much less of leading them to victory and the new social order.

WORKERS PARTY OF THE U. S.

For this a new party was needed. The Workers Party of the U. S. was established on December 1, 1934 by the merger of the American Workers Party and the Communist League of America. Workers who had played a leading part in the great strike struggles in Toledo, Minneapolis and other places, founders of the Unemployed League movement, together with founders and former leading members of the Commu-

Big Meeting Hears Muste And Cannon on WP Program

Adopts Resolution on Situation in Soviet Union

Irving Plaza was jammed to standing room when A. J. Muste and James P. Cannon addressed a meeting last Sunday night on the Workers Party and its Program. The entire audience, with the exception of seven members of the Communist Party greeted the speakers with enthusiasm. In the course of their speeches they referred to the present executions and arrests in Russia. A resolution, appended below, was introduced at the conclusion, and passed by a standing vote, censuring the secret nature of the trials, and demanding that the persecution of party opponents, old Bolsheviks, such as Zinoviev, Kamenev, and Yevdokimov cease. The vote on the resolution was everybody for, seven against.

The Resolution

The resolution, to be presented to the Soviet consulate, follows: "We, the workers of New York, in mass meeting assembled under the auspices of the Workers Party of the U. S. on this 23rd day of December, 1934, declare our unswerving allegiance to the Soviet Union, the workers' state, which is and has been since 1917 the star of hope and inspiration to the revolutionary workers of the entire world.

"We condemn terroristic actions, such as the assassination of Kirov, and pledge ourselves anew to the defense of the Soviet Union against external or internal enemies. We shall raise no objection to drastic measures against any who conspire to overthrow the workers' state. The right and the duty of the proletarian state to adopt the sternest methods of repression against its class enemies is indisputable for the revolutionary workers. We condemn the hypocritical outcries of anti-Soviet elements, whether they be social democrats or capitalist editors who now come forward to renew their agitation for bogus bourgeois "democracy" and seek to identify the workers' dictatorship with Fascist dictatorship. We who have witnessed from after the mass murder of the victims of Fascism and reaction in Germany, Austria, Spain, and have seen with our own eyes the murder of strikers

TOUR DATES

Following is the schedule of the appearances of A. J. Muste and James P. Cannon, who on January 13 will open the first national speaking tour of the Workers Party, to extend to February 9, and covering 21 cities and industrial centers:

Buffalo, N. Y.—January 13-14.
Youngstown, Ohio.—January 15.
Newcastle, Pa.—January 16.
Cleveland, Ohio.—January 16.
Toledo, Ohio.—January 17.
Detroit, Mich.—January 18.
Chicago, Ill.—January 19-20-21.
Waukegan, Ill.—January 22.
Madison, Wis.—January 22.
Minneapolis-St. Paul, Minn.—Jan. 23-24-25-26-27.
Kansas City—Jan. 27-28-29-30.
Des Moines, Ia.—January 28.
Davenport, Ia.—January 29.
St. Louis, Mo.—January 30-31.
Illinois Mine Fields, Staunton, Gillespie, Springfield, Feb. 1-2-3.
Columbus, Ohio.—February 4-5.
Charleston, W. Va.—February 6.
Pittsburgh, Pa.—February 7-8.
New York City—February 10.

All comrades and sympathizers are urged to get busy at once arranging meetings, conferences, etc., on the dates indicated and to keep the National Secretary informed of the progress of the arrangements.

On the basis of Labor Department reports and federal income tax figures, the monthly survey of business of the American Federation of Labor has compiled a table showing the inequalities which have contributed to present conditions. It summarizes this table as follows:

"In 1933 corporations increased their total income by $554,000,000, made excess profits (over 121%) of $125,000,000 and decreased their deficit by $1,900,000,000. Incomes of persons receiving over $25,000 a year increased by $128,000,000. Workers' incomes on the other hand decreased by nearly $500,000,000 (in reporting industries alone). Our total national income was 42% below 1929, workers' income was 49% lower."

Prospects of improvement in employment are pretty slim, according to the A. F. of L. survey.

ORDER W. P. PAMPHLETS NOW.

(Dec. 23, 1933-Jan. 3, 1934)

WASHINGTON.—Its ends accomplished, the Roosevelt "revolution" is over, the president told Congress in his message to that body. The evils which brought about the smashup of the capitalist machine in the past four years have been abolished, he stated. Among evils ended is the "ruthless exploitation of all labor". How this had been accomplished was not specified.

NEW YORK.—"Our army happens to be the only branch of the government which is already organized and available not only to defend our territory but also to cope with social and economic problems in an emergency," Assistant Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring wrote in an article in Liberty magazine. The C.O.C. camps were "the first real test of the army's

Norris, S.P. Leader Joins Workers Party

The campaign of the Workers Party to unite the revolutionary workers under its banner gets a big push forward this week by the statement of W. W. Norris in which he announces his withdrawal from the Socialist Party and entrance into the W. P. The application of Comrade Norris has been accepted by the National Committee on the recommendation of the Minneapolis Branch with which he is in direct contact.

Was Minnesota Secretary W. W. Norris was the state secretary of the Socialist Party in Minnesota and was a delegate from that state to the Detroit convention of the S. P. He was connected with the Revolutionary Policy Committee and was elected to the National Executive Committee of this group at the Detroit conference plans for war mobilization under the National Defense Act," he stated.

HARRISBURG, Pa.—"Work-relief" is nothing more than forced labor, Executive Director Eric Bidde of the Pennsylvania Emergency Relief Board stated in his annual report to Gov. Pinchot.

WASHINGTON.—Unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor were called upon by President William Green to "take such steps as seem necessary to make the boycott of German goods and German services effective". The boycott had been ordered by the Washington convention of the A. F. of L. last fall.

JOIN THE WORKERS PARTY.

of the Revolutionary Policy Committee.

The action of Comrade Norris is the first positive answer of the revolutionary wing of the party to the arrogant attacks of the right wing since the Detroit convention and the capitulatory attitude of the "Militants" and the R.P.C. The Workers Party expects in the near future to announce the applications of other revolutionary Socialists who are coming to the same conclusions as those of Comrade Norris. His statement follows:

Statement of W. W. Norris

Minneapolis, Minn.
To the National Committee
Workers Party of U. S.

Comrades: After full deliberation I have definitely and finally come to the conclusion that the Socialist Party has no revolutionary future and that the place for every revolutionary socialist is in the ranks of the Workers Party. Accordingly, I have withdrawn from the S. P. and present herewith my application for membership in the W. P.

Like every other revolutionary socialist I have been in conflict with the principles and policies of the Socialist Party for some time. But up till recently I had the hope that it might be revolutionized from within. As a delegate to the Detroit convention and a member of the National Executive Committee of the Revolutionary Policy Committee, I looked forward to the transformation of the S. P. into a revolutionary party. Developments since the Detroit convention have caused me to change my mind about the prospects of the S. P. and to join the W. P.

Contrary to the hopes of many members, the leftward drift of the S. P. has been sharply arrested.

Red Frame-Up Is Mask For Drive against Unions

Victims Were Leaders of Agricultural Laborers

One of the most vicious anti-labor trials in years is now in full swing in Sacramento, California. The District Attorney, on behalf of the Industrial Association, is trying to send 18 militants workers to the State Penitentiary at San Quentin for the "crime" of organizing to get higher wages, an activity described by the capitalist legal system of California as "Criminal Syndicalism". The defendants were the leaders and active militants of the Agricultural and Cannery Workers' Union. Masked as an "anti-red" crusade, the trial is aimed primarily at this organization, the most active and effective of any of the unions under C. P. leadership in California.

At this writing, the jury is being picked which will be asked to convict these workers, some of them members of the Communist Party, and others without political affiliation.

MUSTE DINNER

On Wednesday, January 9, a testimonial dinner will be given for A. J. Muste, National Secretary of the Workers Party, at Irving Plaza, New York City. The dinner is to commemorate his fiftieth birthday, and the fiftieth year of his invaluable service in the revolutionary labor movement.

Comrade Muste was one time executive secretary of the American Federation of Textile Operatives, a New England textile union; served, at one time, as vice president of the American Federation of Teachers; was the founder of Brookwood Labor College; and one of the founders of the American Workers Party.

Among the many sponsors of the dinner are Roger Baldwin, Ernest Sutherland Bates, James P. Cannon, Stuart Chase, George S. Counts, Margaret De Silver, Max Eastman, Arthur Garfield Hays, John Haynes Holmes, Sydney Hook, Freda Kirchwey, Ludwig Lore, Robert Mores Lovett, Reinhold Niebuhr, Robert Paddock, James R. Tully, George Soule, Carlo Tresca, Stephen Wise, and Oswald Garrison Villard.

The dinner will be served at the Irving Plaza, Irving Place and 15th Street at 7 o'clock. All friends and sympathizers are invited to attend.

The prisoners were arrested in connection with a raid on the Workers School of Sacramento during the anti-Red drive growing out of the collapse of the San Francisco general strike. In this "anti-Red" setting a blow is being aimed at militant unionism.

It has for years been a systematic practice of the bosses' police to arrest known militants among the agricultural and cannery workers of Sacramento Valley in the late summer. They are thrown in jail on vagrancy charges, held with or without trial for some weeks, and turned loose after the harvest is in. The purpose is to smash or prevent possible strikes at harvest time so that there need be no raise in the slave-wages paid to the workers of the Valley.

Penalty Is 84 Years

This year the anti-Red drive gave the authorities an opportunity to strike at the union and to prosecute the leaders on the more serious charge of criminal syndicalism. If convicted on all counts, each of the accused can get as much as 84 years in San Quentin.

The defendants were arrested during the week of July 18 and tried for vagrancy, nine being convicted. These cases are being appealed. During the vagrancy trials

FROM THE FIRING LINE

Three Leagues Built in Week

LEHIGH COUNTY ADDS 600

ALLENTOWN, Pa.—Three new branches, Coplay, Ormrod and South Whitehall, totalling more than 600 members, have been added to the Lehigh County Unemployed League during the past week. Two of the leagues, Coplay and Ormrod, grew out of the demand of unemployed youths for work on relief projects.

Many cement workers in this region work only two days per week earning $7.50. Relief officials have consistently refused to place on relief projects adult members of the families of these workers.

Draw Up Plans

The Coplay League has drawn up plans for a municipal swimming pool and town hall which it will push through in order to provide work for the unemployed of the town. The Ormrod League hopes to force the authorities to approve a project for a community center. The league at South Whitehall was formed when workers realized their united power through a spontaneous strike called to reinstate a worker who had been arbitrarily fired by the boss. The workers on the project are organized practically 100% and have elected committees to carry on collective bargaining with the bosses and relief officials.

Organize in Palmerton

A new League has also been formed in Palmerton, in Carbon County, a company town of the New Jersey Zinc Company. Weston Kelsey, administrator of relief for this area was formerly manager of this company and draws a huge pension from it.

Conditions in Palmerton are unbelievably bad. One family with nine children was found sleeping on the floor, with no mattresses and few covers. Children were found who had no clothing but had underwear, many others who had underwear but no clothing. Company houses that it is almost impossible to heat them. Plaster has almost entirely disappeared from many. A weather vane placed on the tangle of one of the "homes" indicated the direction of the wind! Some months ago when a League was formed in Palmerton the leading members were evicted from company property for their activities. The new League is so strong, however, that the Zinc Co. officials dare not interfere. Already it has forced the relief administration to set up an office in Palmerton. Formerly the unemployed had to walk 8 miles to the nearest relief station.

Mayor McNair Has a Flair FOR SINGLE TAX AND SCABS

PITTSBURGH.—William M. McNair, Pittsburgh's Single Tax mayor, continues to play the role of Allegheny County's leading strike-breaker. Recently in the strike of the A. & P. haulers, McNair rode a truck beside the police and a scab driver to assure the safe delivery of supplies to A. & P. stores. When the strikers persisted in following the truck McNair got off and lead the police in an attack on the strikers and ordered their arrest.

McNair first became infamous as a potential strike-breaker when he announced last June that he would support the employers if there was a steel strike.

After being on the losing end for twenty-five years McNair became mayor last fall in a New Deal landslide. His hobbies are apple eating and "ground rent". He vetoed an ordinance of the city council which provided $500,000 out of a bond issue for unemployed relief. When a delegation from the Pittsburgh Unemployed League visited the mayor to protest against the veto, he told the committee that they should get behind the bill.

The Party at Work

PITTSBURGH.—The branches of the Communist League of America and the American Workers Party have come together and formed the Pittsburgh Branch of the Workers Party of the U. S. The merger meeting was held December 14. John Sullivan was elected chairman; Solov, vice chairman; Irvin Oklin, secretary; Mary Belton, treasurer; Hopton Howell, education; James Sifakis, trade union fraction; Ben Cooper, P.U.L. fraction. These officers make up the branch executive committee.

The branch is preparing to hold a social affair for January 11 to which it is planned to invite sympathizers and other interested persons when the program of the new party will be discussed.

The branch has also selected a committee to work up a mass meet-which he had in council which provided for taking the ground rent that was now going to Europeans owning land in Pittsburgh.

He also told the delegation that "every mayor should take up housing." He then invited the committee outside to have their pictures taken with him in front of some advertising benches which a furniture company had sent for the unemployed to sit on while they were waiting for food orders. The committee declined to accept the honor.

The mayor is such good copy for the local Hearst paper that an officer of the Workers Party was told by this paper that if the party wanted publicity for any of its meetings they should get the mayor to speak.

Holstein Freed In Minneapolis

ONE FRAME-UP REMAINS

MINNEAPOLIS.—The Hennepin County Grand Jury has voted a no-bill in the case of Emanuel Holstein, leading militant of Drivers Local 574, whom the Citizens Alliance and Police Chief Bloody Mike Johannes have been attempting to frame for the murder of a millionaire special deputy who died during the May strike. The clearing of Holstein is a direct result of the fight staged by the Minneapolis trade union movement led by the militant fighters of Local 574. Minneapolis unionists are wild with enthusiasm at this new blow to the Citizens Alliance, which had hoped to terrorize labor by railroad Holstein to death. A few weeks ago the attempt to frame the Machinists Brotherhood business agent was also smashed by mass pressure.

One more Citizens Alliance frame-up remains to be defeated: the charge against Phillip Scott for the same murder which the labor-haters failed to pin on Holstein. The County Attorney, has been moving heaven and earth to get Scott before a jury as quickly as possible, hoping to railroad him before the defense could get organized.

The defense movement got going faster than the prosecutor, however, and now the latter has begun to stall. He claims to have discovered a new material witness, and wants to postpone the trial. Meanwhile, the defense campaign goes forward with great speed. The Auditorium has been hired for New Year's Eve and the labor movement will stage a big party for the benefit of the Scott Defense. Local 574 has requested Herbert Solow, formerly Managing Editor of its daily strike bulletin, to solicit funds in the east for the support of the defense movement. Other Minnesota unions are also being asked to bring the fight. The prospects are promising and it looks as though the Citizens Alliance is due for another trimming.

Relief Wood Strike Looms

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Dec. 19.—Intensifying their fight against relief officials because of their notorious system of distributing wood while thousands of miners of this city are idle, the Illinois Workers Alliance is preparing for a strike at all wood yards of this territory. A strike committee, with Joe Angelo, Workers Party member, as secretary was elected at the last meeting of the alliance. Workers Party and Socialist workers are leading the fight which is quickly spreading in all circles of the local labor movement.

Independent Printing Employees Win 5 Day Altum Press Strike

A.F. of L. Printing Unions Urged to Help Organize Industry

A striking success has come out of the first strike conducted by the Independent Printing Employees of New York. Despite an empty treasury, sabotage by government officials supposed by law to be impartial and the organized resistance of the boss printers, the workers in Altum Press, 156 William St., after a five-day struggle are back on the job under conditions that set a high mark for shops not organized by the A. F. of L.

Last week's strike was the culmination of a ten-months struggle led by the Altum workers under the I.P.E.'s leadership. Altum Press brazenly ignored the Graphic Arts Code, which is supposed to guarantee the workers certain conditions. The I.P.E. fought before the NRA boards so ably and vigorously that the boards could not evade giving a decision in favor of the workers.

The NRA, as usual, did nothing to enforce its own "decisions", and finally the workers struck. The boss printers tried to make this a test case. The workers held out on the picket-line, however, aided by volunteer pickets from the Workers Party. On request of the I.P.E., the A. F. of L. Printing Pressmen's Union 51 notified all its chapters not to scab. Finally the boss had to back down.

Altum Press negotiated with a committee headed by Sam Gordon, president of the I.P.E. Matthew Levy, member of the Socialist Lawyers Association, advised the I.P.E. committee on legal aspects of the final settlement, which has been signed by the boss and all the workers of the shop. This settlement included:

1. Re hiring all strikers and firing of the one scab.
2. An immediate wage raise of $5 pending revision upward by further negotiations.

W.P. to Open Training School; In Fight Against Capitalism

The International Workers School, to show workers how capitalism exploits and keeps the masses in poverty, but better still, what to do about it, will open a district school in New York within the next two weeks, to be followed by the opening of other schools in keeping with the growth and expansion of the Workers Party, Hugo Oehler, National Educational Director of the Party, announced for the National Educational Committee of the W.P.

In addition to the International Workers School, the plans of the committee include a National Training School to train Party members. The training school will be in New York.

Party to Train Workers
"The Party through its branches and districts will select comrades throughout the country who will be sent to the National Training School for a period of training," Oehler said.

They will be trained to organize Unemployed Leagues and fight for relief, to fight for progressive measures in trade unions, to recruit advanced workers into the Workers Party and to build the Party through mass action in the working class struggle against capitalist poverty and exploitation. The aim of the Party and its schools is a workers' government with the machinery of production in the hands of those who work, producing things in abundance and making the masses politically and economically free.

Class Outlines
Branch and district schools of the International Workers School will be opened as rapidly as possible and outlines for classes will be ready within a week, Oehler stated. The first outlines will deal with "Workers Party Fundamentals", "Organizational Principles", "ABC's of Marxism", "Trade Union Tactics and Strategy", "History of the American Labor Movement", "The International Revolutionary Movement" and "Marxian Economics".

Form Research Department
Plans are being worked out for Circuit Schools and Summer Schools in different parts of the country. A Research Department, consisting of a staff of capable research workers, is being formed in conjunction with the school program.

The National Educational Committee consists of A. J. Muste, J. Borkeson, Oliver Carlson, Jack Weber and Hugo Oehler. Comrade Oehler was elected National Direc-

Facts Are Facts For Coal Miners

ILLINOIS "EXPOSURE" EXPOSED

Allard Cites P.M. of A. Records Against Article by Ralph Shaw In Labor Unity

By GERRY ALLARD

In the October issue of Labor Unity, Ralph Shaw, it is announced, begins a series of articles in which he hopes to "expose" the Musteite-Trotskyite elements in the coal fields of southern Illinois. Now it is common knowledge in the radical movement that truth and accuracy are held as "bourgeois prejudices" by the Stalinists. Shaw's mixture of indictments, 'charges' and insinuations are written in characteristic "Labor Unity" prose: he quotes people, but consistently fails to tell the reader where the quotations can be found.

Taken as a whole his article simmers down to precisely one thing: a clear example and admission that the Communist party is no longer an important force in the Illinois coal fields.

Shaw's article is long and cumbersome. It is not necessary to answer his allegations in detail, save from one paragraph. I quote from Shaw, page 18, Labor Unity, Oct. 1934:

"Facts Are Facts"
"The Musteites and S. P. elements helped put over the infamous 'we must accept the same scale as Lewis has with Peabody.' Here is how it was done: The willing Operators' Ass'n. was willing to give $5.70 to settle the strike (a reduction of 40 cents from the original contract). Pearey and Keck did not accept or reject this but came to the convention declaring 'we want the same scale as Peabody has, no more, no less.' (Peabody scale was lower, U.M.W.A.) The Musteites now try to disclaim responsibility for this act of betrayal but facts are facts and undeniable."

We admit that facts are facts and they are not deniable. We will therefore let the facts speak. I quote from the proceedings of the first constitutional convention of the Progressive Miners of America held at Gillespie, Ill., October 3 through October 8, 1932. On page 1 of the proceedings, Wed., Oct. 5, 1932, night session beginning at 7 P.M.:

From the Record
"Scale Committee's report given: 'Pearey: The operators said that they had to have a scale that was competitive. We had a group of mechanized operators represented and out of that group one representative of the Southern Coal Co. They stated that they could not pay the $8.10 scale and compete with with other operators in southern Illinois. Then they brought in a proposal. They wanted us to allow their mines to operate next morning on this proposal until this convention gave their approval or rejected the scale. We said that if the mines went to work in the morning they would have to pay the $6.10 temporary agreement. This group only represents a small group of operators. The largest operators say that if we would take this scale not only them but other large operators would sign it."

"Keck: ... The question is what are going to be our demands from now on. The mechanized operators told us very frankly that it would not be possible for them to pay any relief, to fight for progressive measures in trade unions, to recruit advanced workers into the Workers Party and to build the Party through mass action in the working class struggle against capitalist poverty and exploitation. The aim of the Party and its schools is a workers' government with the machinery of production in the hands of those who work, producing things in abundance and making the masses politically and economically free."

Class Outlines
Branch and district schools of the International Workers School will be opened as rapidly as possible and outlines for classes will be ready within a week, Oehler stated. The first outlines will deal with "Workers Party Fundamentals", "Organizational Principles", "ABC's of Marxism", "Trade Union Tactics and Strategy", "History of the American Labor Movement", "The International Revolutionary Movement" and "Marxian Economics".

Form Research Department
Plans are being worked out for Circuit Schools and Summer Schools in different parts of the country. A Research Department, consisting of a staff of capable research workers, is being formed in conjunction with the school program.

The National Educational Committee consists of A. J. Muste, J. Borkeson, Oliver Carlson, Jack Weber and Hugo Oehler. Comrade Oehler was elected National Director. Shaw states, "Pearey and Keck did not accept or reject this but came to the convention declaring we want the same scale as Peabody has, no more no less."

The facts are that Pearey, Keck and Lieutenants fought and voted to have the wage cut ratified. They will not deny this, claiming that this policy put the P.M. of A. over the shadow of Pearey and Keck. He does this unconsciously, of course, but no shrewd Stalinist gymnast would care to be quoted on such a careless faux pas.

Now try to disclaim the responsibility for this act of betrayal but facts are facts and undeniable."

it we must make a wage scale that will catch most of the operators at this time in that part of the country where we hold most of our membership. The operators say they can't pay a higher wage scale than Franklin county and compete with them.

"Douglas: I think this convention should work out a differential. I think that in placing a 12c differential as you go on north you can render the situation satisfactory."

Allard Opposes Retreat

"Allard: I realize that in the first place I speak under a handicap at this convention because I am from Franklin county and my mine is working under the $5.00 scale. There are one of two courses to pursue. One course is to retreat and the other is to retreat the strike movement. Here is where we incur lots of difficulties. The retreat proposed by the scale committee I don't believe is very well timed. There is not a section of the state that has expressed a desire to retreat. The spirit of the membership is still on the upward."

After considerable discussion a motion was then made to accept the scale committee's recommendation, which was to stand pat on the $6.10 temporary agreement. McGill, Springfield board member and right wing adherent moved an amendment as follows:

"McGill: Amend that they be instructed to return back and make an agreement identical in wages to this agreement in effect in southern Illinois."

50 Opposition Votes

The amendment was carried by a vote of 112 to 50. After Allard had led the opposition against the cut the fifty opposition votes consisted of the solid left wing vote in the convention which included Corbridge, Steed, Fraser, Allard, Burrell, Battuello, Ansbury, Tracy, Bernard, Latteque, Scramin, etc.

In a last desperate effort to outmaneuver the right wing Allard moved the following according to the proceedings:

"Allard: Motion made that a referendum be held within two weeks."

"Motion to table. Carried 90 to 46."

From the above one can see that the debate and opposition of the left wing was vigorous. Heated discussion took place as the lefts and rights crossed swords. The left wing fought to the end trying to refer the matter for a referendum vote of the rank and file. Three Stalinists, all speakers, did not voice a single word during the debate according to the official record.

Shaw's Nightmare

Now let us compare the above facts with the nightmare in Shaw's article.

1. Shaw states, "the Musteites and S. P. elements helped to put over the infamous slogan 'we must accept as Lewis has with Peabody.'" The convention proceedings (as Shaw says, "facts are facts") disprove this in no uncertain terms.

2. Shaw states, "the Independent Operators' Ass'n. was willing to give $5.70 to settle the strike (a reduction of 40 cents from the original contract)."

The truth is that the original wage scale for this classification of labor, conveyors, was $8.04, a reduction of $1.34. Facts are facts, but Shaw is not sufficiently conversant with details to know what he is talking about.

3. Shaw states, "Pearey and Keck did not accept or reject this but came to the convention declaring we want the same scale as Peabody has, no more no less."

The facts are that Pearey, Keck and Lieutenants fought and voted to have the wage cut ratified. They will not deny this, claiming that this policy put the P.M. of A. over the shadow of Pearey and Keck. He does this unconsciously, of course, but no shrewd Stalinist gymnast would care to be quoted on such a careless faux pas.

Now try to disclaim the responsibility for this act of betrayal but facts are facts and undeniable."

Made Supreme Sacrifice
Moreover, in freshly dug graves repose the prematurely dead bodies of miners, some of them Left wing members who made the supreme sacrifice for the wage cut and for a union of the rank and file. Let it never be said by a responsible person that the remaining Left wingers abrogated the principles of the fighting Illinois miners. It simply can't be proven even by fantastic minds of unconscionable jackals of the Stalinist camp.

By KARL LORE

The Labor Racket

The Chicago's unions still fight the labor racketeer. The cancer which made its way into the labor movement of that city has not yet been eradicated. The agents of Murray Humphries and of the late George (Red) Barker still have influence in the workers' organizations.

The Federation News, organ of the Chicago Federation of Labor reports the efforts of the Joint Council of the International Teamsters Union to oust "Lefty" Lynch, secretary treasurer and business agent of Local 704—the coal teamsters organization. The local was originally known as the Chicago Coal Teamsters Union and was one of the locals of an independent organization, racketeer controlled. In February 1934 it affiliated to the teamsters union of the A. F. of L. and in the elections Lefty, a former officer of the old organization, was placed in the saddle again.

"It turned out," says the Federation News, "that Lynch could not forget the tactics employed by the Chicago Teamsters and it was not long before he thought that he was a new Mussolini. One of his first actions after taking office was to get out a book for which he solicited advertisement from coal merchants and others costing from $25 to $100."

He transferred the union headquarters to his own home, miles away from the center of town where it was impossible for the membership to attend meetings or to take any active part in union affairs. Special assessments were levied against the membership at meetings with only a handful of the 3,000 members present. No accounting was made on the union books of his disbursement of organization money and the President and vice president of the union were summarily expelled when they opposed him.

Union Receivership

Charges were preferred against Lynch in the Joint Council and that worthy was expelled. The local itself has been placed in the control of a receiver by the International, elections have been held and it is hoped that another step has been taken in blasting the racketeer out of the labor movement.

It is unfortunate, however, that labor organizations generally seem to believe that the cure for a dictator is another dictator. The practice of putting the affairs of local unions under the full control of receivers has been a curse in many national unions. The racketeers had the doors opened to them in the first case by the trade union bureaucracy. The denial of the fullest trade union democracy is bound to breed the rats who fatten on the organized workers.

The classic example of this fact is, of course, the case of the New York electrical workers. H. H. Broach was sent in by the International to clean out a nest of corruption in Local No. 3. He did so and then set up a dictatorial regime of his own to "keep out the gangsters". Under the era of "enlightened dictatorship" that Broach inaugurated the same mess came into being all over again. The only guarantee of clean unionism is full democracy in the organizations of labor.

Unions and Government
Radicals and progressives have always warned against the tendency on the part of many union leaders to involve the trade union movement closely with the machinery of government. There can be no doubt that the relations of the two have been increasingly intertwined and that the tendency of the NRA labor machinery has been to tie labor's hands more and more in the exercise of its elementary rights. It is almost inevitable that this should happen.

A recent decision of the National Labor Relations Board illustrates how the process works and how almost by accident—the precedents are established by which later labor's rights may be curtailed. Four workers brought a complaint against the Bennett Shoe Company of Marlboro, Mass. The company had entered into a closed shop agreement with the independent United Shoe and Leather Workers Union of which the complainants had been members. Sometime later these complainants were expelled from the union because they violated a provision of its constitution that no member could belong to any other organization in the trade (the Shoe Workers Protective Union in this case). The union demanded that the employer discharge the four, which he did in accordance with for provisions of the union contract. The freed workers appealed to the N.L.R.B.

Dangerous Precedents

The Labor Board upheld the right of the boss to discharge workers under these conditions. It ruled that "by joining the United the complainants ratified . . . the closed shop agreement . . . By requesting and accepting membership in the United at a time when that union had already adopted the constitution they assented to it and it must therefore . . . be assumed to be . . . binding on them."

If we take such a ruling away from its setting in this particular case, it may easily be seen what a tremendous repressive effect it can have on minority groups in unions, or on insurgent groups which revolt against their leadership and strike out on an independent organizational path. In substance it makes it possible for national union officials to get together with manufacturers, to impose anything on a local union and to make them like it. A local in this situation could not revolt, would find it impossible to withdraw from under its national leadership and would have to accept its command unquestioningly.

Briefs

The growth of company unions in the past year is reflected in a recent report of the National Industrial Conference Board, employers' statistical organization, which shows that, of the companies studied 126 have company affairs while only 17 have agreements with unions. Under the New Deal 42 new company unions have been started with twelve more in process of formation. Only nine more companies signed union agreements however. . . . Another survey of 697 public utility companies shows that of the 580,000 employees covered in the survey, only twelve percent dealt with their companies through organized labor unions. In the railroad industry the figure is radically different, 75% of the 700,000 workers covered dealing through regular unions. . . . Be happy Tom Mooney. The workers of the San Francisco Market Street Railway Company—the outfit which framed you when you tried to organize their employees—has had to come to terms with the labor unions. Shorter hours, higher wages and union recognition were awarded following the general strike. . .

History in the Making

THAT the revolutionary party is to play one of the most important roles in American labor history is no longer a question of doubt. At this critical moment, when the Socialist Party is moving faster and more determinedly to the right, and when the Communist Party is definitely failing the leftward moving workers, there remains only one force capable of giving correct leadership in the class struggle—the Workers Party of the U. S.

The class conscious workers are giving concrete manifestations of their willingness and readiness to struggle. Witness the general strike in California; the Toledo and Minneapolis historic battles; the textile workers and numerous other instances. What is lacking is a revolutionary mass party. To fill that need becomes the paramount duty of the Workers Party. This imposes enormous tasks upon us.

The united forces of the two organizations which merged to form the new party contain sufficient material with which to carry out this obligation. All that is necessary is a determined, obstinate struggle for its achievement. Every party member, every sympathizer, every friend must make a little sacrifice and success is assured.

THE URGENT NEED

The first need of the new Party, weak as yet compared to the great tasks ahead, is a fund to enable us to carry out the plans of the Program of Action.

First and foremost we must rush capable organizers into the field, build and maintain Party districts in the industrial concentration areas, and organize the coast to coast tours. This will bring immediate results in membership increase; it will help double the circulation of our paper and lay the foundation for a national Left-progressive wing in the trade union movement.

U.S. Role In Making Bosses' War Shown

WORKERS DIED FOR MORGAN LOANS

Six years before the outbreak of the World War—wherein millions of workers dressed in uniforms were torn to bits—the Colt Patent Firearms Company, the duPont Nemours & Company and the "Government" of the United States knew that it was going to happen. And they set about secretly arming the nations for the conflict.

Nothing could give one a better insight into the nature of the American capitalist government—government by the capitalists—than this: The illusion that the "Government belongs to everybody" is swept away. The words of Karl Marx, who some 80 years ago wrote that a capitalist government is just the "executive committee" of the capitalists themselves, are brought to mind.

Why America Entered War
The facts unearthed by the Senate Committee investigating the munitions industry show up clearly the interlocking alliance between the financial and political "rulers" of the United States, between the capitalists and the Government.

On March 5, 1917, Woodrow Wilson, who had just been returned to the White House by an overwhelming majority "because he kept us out of war," received a cable from Walter Hines Page, then U. S. Ambassador in London. The cable, made public by the Nye Committee, said in part:

"The pressure of this approaching crisis, I am certain, has gone beyond the ability of the Morgan financial interests. . . . It is not improbable that the only way of maintaining our present pre-eminent trade position and averting a panic is by declaring war on Germany."

At that moment, according to the Committee's experts, the British government was being pressed by the Morgan bank and other American financial institutions to pay back $100,000,000 which had been advanced in war credits. The British government was unable to repay the loans, and the loans were in danger.

Woodrow Wilson and Congress declared war on Germany immediately thereafter; and not only did the banks collect their loans, but the "Government" footed the bill—and while the doughboys were being sent over and slaughtered to the tune of $1 a day, more than 500 American capitalists were drawing down a minimum of $1,000,000 a year each, and some were "getting" as high as $15,000 per day throughout the war.

The "Japs" Are Discovered
When the war was over, a new enemy had to be found, and if not found, then made.

The Wall Street financiers, the munitions makers and the country's big corporations, including the U. S. War Department, got busy. And soon poor dumb guys at crossroads and on street corners across the country were talking about the "Japs" and the "Yellow Peril". Plenty money was spent to get that result; newspapers were subsidized by the big interests—the "invisible government"—and Congress began appropriating millions for "national defense" in the next war.

And at that moment in 1923 when the "Jap" scare was being whipped up in earnest, and loudly drummed into the people through the newspapers and into the children through school text-books, the U. S. War Department began helping the duPont Company of Wilmington, Delaware, sell munitions to Japan.

The American government agreed to turn over to the duPonts a part of the U. S. reserve supply of cartridges to be shipped to Japan. Since then both the War Department and the State Department have aided the American munition makers in arming Japan, Germany and other so-called "enemy" countries, at the same time preparing at home a psychology of fear and hatred, and building up a modern "war machine".

None of this is new, of course. Since the industrialists constitute the real government of the nation, nothing less could be expected. The game has been going along all the time. The Nye Committee has rendered a real service, however, by giving the public a peep behind the scenes.

The "Government" is like the infamous Bruce Barton. Mr. Barton wrote a book about Jesus and a book about the Bible, then he wrote a terrific article in the American Magazine against war, entitled "Let's Advertise this Hell", and he then donated several full-page ads against war in the popular magazines for World Peaceways. But all this while he was serving (at a big salary) as advertising agent for the Remington Arms Company, the Standard Oil Company, the Chase National Bank and the duPont Nemours & Company, equipping armies in Europe, Asia and South America.

In the same way, this capitalistic "Government" dupes the masses and serves the interests of the financiers and industrialists.

Saar Basin Is Pawn Of Imperialist Rivals

PLEBISCITE MASKS REAL AIMS

In the Saar today, there is involved much more than the fate of the Saar or even all Europe.

The tiny Saar district, packed with almost 900,000 people, the majority miners, has become a pawn in the hands of practically every great imperialist rival in the struggle for hegemony in Europe. The question to be decided now is this:

Is it possible for Germany and French imperialism, bound sooner or later to come to grips over the question of continental hegemony, to reach a temporary understanding which would break up the present alliance between France and Soviet Russia, thereby allowing British imperialism to weld all Europe for a short time into a powerful bloc directed against the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A.?

At the moment of achieving such an agreement, a new world war would become an imminent danger in a far more immediate sense than hitherto. Thus far the antagonism between French and German imperialism has been the main stumbling block to England's persistent attempts to realize its dream of an all-European anti-Soviet bloc with Hitler-Germany as its spearhead. Such a bloc seems almost indispensable if British imperialism together with its Japanese ally is to fight with a chance of success against both the Soviet Union and the U.S.A. Every move on the part of the U. S. (itself anxious to prevent England from solidifying its European position lest that ruin American plans for a bloody re-division of the world on its own terms), is designed to prevent it. Naturally, American diplomacy makes its constant moves against England under cover of a desire "to ensure European peace".

Today England seems closer to its goal than ever before. The "understanding" between German and French imperialism as to the future of the Saar mines is, in the main, England's work. Powerful capitalist groups in Germany and France which fear a premature showdown between the two, and which therefore favor an alliance under British overlordship against the Soviet Union (and the U.S.), seem to be gaining the upper hand. The German and French press have toned down mutual attacks, a fact gratifying to the petty-bourgeois "pacifist" who sees here a victory for the "cause of peace", but very alarming to the Marxist who understands that this agreement really smooths the way towards the outbreak of another world war.

The Saar has become the key to the war question, in the sense that the negotiations around the plebiscite are being utilized for the purpose of breaking up the present alliance between French imperialism and the Soviet Union.

For England the plan of an "Eastern Locarno" was, in the final analysis, but a threat whereby to pound Germany into line. The real settlement of the question of "European peace" under British wing is to come out of the negotiations around the Saar. Once the ascendancy of groupings favoring a German-French understanding has been assured in England, France and Germany (and that day seems not far off), no more mention will be made of the "Eastern Locarno". Soviet Russia's isolation will be greater than it has been for a long time past. The French Russo-German alliance will be, at most, a scrap of paper. All the concessions made to French imperialism by the Soviet bureaucracy will have been in vain.

Thus far this stage has not been reached, but this has been the trend of developments. On all sides regroupments and preparations for the new situation are taking place. Both in the German Reichswehr and in the Red Army, those groups advocating a renewal of the former Russo-German alliance as an alternative to both the present Franco-Russian alliance and the proposed Franco-German alliance, again raise their heads. It is conceivable that American imperialism, to counteract England's plans (of which a Franco-German understanding is the cornerstone), will use its still great influence in Germany and its growing influence in Soviet Russia in favor of a new Russo-German "understanding" as a temporary expedient. Actual events in the Soviet Union, aiming at eliminating certain groupings actually or supposedly involved in the Kirov assassination, may be related to this struggle between orientations on foreign policy and accompanying differences as to the inner Soviet regime. The new "purging" in Hitler Germany is undoubtedly aimed at preventing opposition Nazi groups from staging any provocative anti-French demonstrations which might interfere with plans of the Hitler clique to come to an understanding with France against Russia.

To the contending imperialist robbers the plebiscite itself is one of the least important aspects of the Saar question. What matters to them is the use of this issue to further larger ends, all leading up to a single one: the best possible line-up for the coming war.

But to the unfortunate people of the Saar the plebiscite has enormous importance. True, if the majority votes for the continuation of the status quo (under the League of Nations), the question will simply be laid over for a while, giving the workers of the Saar a chance to make of the Saar, instead of a source of triumph for Hitler and a step towards war, a stepping stone towards the proletarian reconquest of Germany and an ally of the fighting French proletariat. But if as a result of the Nazi terror, the bargain between French and German imperialists, and the lack of the active solidarity of workers of other countries, the Saar majority votes for return to Germany, then the plebiscite will hand over to the torture chambers and firing squads of the Nazis the flower of a proletariat whose militant traditions rank with those of our fighting miners of West Virginia, Illinois and Pennsylvania.

The workers of the Saar see to the east a country in which their brethren, having suffered a cruel defeat, are incapable of lending them any help. To the west they see a proletariat hardly able to hold its own in a deadly struggle with reaction and fascism. The workers of the Saar seem to have been left almost completely in the lurch, facing the most cruel and powerful enemies the working class has ever known.

THE METHODS OF STALINISM

By JOSEPH ZACK

(Ed. Note: This is the first of a series of articles by Joseph Zack, a former leader of the Communist Party who recently resigned and joined the Workers Party. In this article Comrade Zack paints an unforgettable picture of the methods of Stalinism as he saw them in Moscow. Next week he will describe the working of these methods in the American C.P.)

There is a crisis developing in the C. P. Only here and there are external manifestations of it but its burrowings are deep.

This crisis manifests itself: 1) In the decline of the party's influence particularly in the trade union field, both in independent unions and in the A. F. of L., and in the decline of the unions controlled by the party itself; 2) The increased turnover of party membership. According to Browder's report (Nov. Communist) the C. P. membership declined from 24,000 at the time of the party convention (April 1934) to below 20,000, this in spite of a recruitment of 17,000 new members in that period. According to these figures more than 21,000 members dropped out of the party within six months since the Cleveland convention.

Outwardly, the crisis thus far manifests itself in the withdrawal of groups of independent unions (Building Trades) and A. F. of L. minority groups (Local 3 Electrical Workers) from the party's control, as well as the going over to the opposition or "expulsion" of groups of active party members who are joining the W. P.

Were such a thing as inner democracy in existence in the C. P. this crisis would of course take other forms than disintegration. The background to the present crisis is far more complex, however, than the average party member suspects. Essentially the crisis is due to the fact that while officially Lenin's teachings are supposed to be the official guide of the party, Leninism in fact has been abolished or substituted by the mediocrity of Stalinism. This double bookkeeping is at the root of the present situation in the C. P. and the whole Comintern.

However, in order not to anticipate too much and in order to relate things against the background of American events I will tell my own story, for this is the story of many others still in the party. My own experience brought me to the same conclusions as those stated in the Workers Party Declaration of Principles. I am deeply convinced that many others will take the same road.

Back Stage Methods

Even while Stalin was combined with the Right wing in Russia itself (Bucharin, Rykov and Co.) in order to fight the Left (Trotsky, Zinoviev, etc.) he at the same time was intriguing against his Russian allies (Bucharin was then in charge of the Comintern) in the foreign parties by encouraging the development of "Left" factions against Bucharin. That is, it appeared that way; in reality Stalin was not afraid of Bucharin at all. What he was aiming at was to isolate his main enemy, Trotsky, from the Left in the foreign parties.

This he did by diverting the fight away from Stalin, using Bucharin as the punching bag and bugaboo and thus annexing the Left element to himself, diverting it away from Trotsky.

Against the background of the then declining revolutionary wave in Europe and the tiredness of the Russian masses themselves this strategy worked wonderfully both outside and even to a large extent inside of Russia. This is how I, as well as many others of the Left in the C. P. got hooked to Stalin's kite. Thus the so-called "right on two fronts—against Right and Left"—really was a fight mainly against the Left as subsequent events have proved amply.

Stalin, initiator or partner in all the policies he blamed Bucharin for, took for his main guiding line the question of possessing himself of the party apparatus in and outside of the Soviet Union. To achieve this end he played both ends against the middle. Thus he became the arbiter, the potentate, of the party apparatus, veering right and left against the background of the opportunist theory and practice of "socialism in one country".

The Game of Make-Believe

It took me a long time to find out the inside track of Stalin's politics in those days. His game of make-believe, of pretending to do one thing in order to do the exact opposite—a method used between enemies and developed into a fine art in the class struggle of the Orient—was now introduced into the Communist movement by Stalin.

I cannot pride myself on having understood it then. But I did smell a rat in 1929 when Stalin in the American Commission to Judge the Lovestonites spoke about principles, about the Tammany Hall methods of the Lovestonites. This speech was reprinted in pamphlet form in this country. Stalin pretended not to have favored any of the factions. I, knowing the details, knew he was lying unscrupulously and preparing to cover up his tracks at the same time. This was done by dispersing the leaders of the American Left, sending them to various countries. This was done to "prove" that Stalin did not favor the minority faction. Stalin, then in full power, was preparing to forbid all factions. Not only that, there was to be a "monolithic" party, a party of one thought, the thought of Stalin, and no controversial discussions. It would not do, therefore, to have proofs that Stalin had been organizing factions for years before. Differences were outlawed as "Left Social-Fascist" (Lovestone) or "counter-revolutionary" (Trotsky).

Explaining" the Opposition

Trotsky's position, according to these "quotations" and commentaries which purported to "explain" the opposition's point of view, was as follows: 1) A split with the peasantry. 2) Preparation of a war against capitalist nations. 3) Loosening of the foreign trade monopoly. 4) Building up a war industry but neglect of the rest of economy. 5) Socialism cannot be built in a peasant country, hence the proletariat has to exploit the peasantry to prepare for the International Revolution, war, etc.

Such was the peppery dish prepared against the opposition. Needless to say we foreigners were thus finally convinced that Trotsky's position was all wrong, condemned it as "left" phrase-mongering, "objectively" leading to a counter-revolutionary position. Later this was further simplified to read: "The counter-revolutionary platform of Trotskyism" or "Trotskyism, the Vanguard of International Counter-Revolution."

Just about the time that we were pretty well convinced of the counter-revolutionary nature of Trotskyism, occurred the Chinese debacle. Those who follow events in the movement will remember that, contrary to the fundamental teachings of Lenin, Stalin caused few more such things and I could see Stalinism as it is. I never could admire Stalin or boost him with "quotations" and I was feeling less and less sure of myself when talking about Trotsky. Of course ever since I objected to the resolution I was on the blacklist. This I found out later.

The Moscow Rumor Factory

While in Moscow in 1927 many rumors kept on percolating through to us foreigners about the internal situation in the Russian party. One of them was about Lenin's testament. It was said that this testament was very bad for Stalin and good for Trotsky, but the informers would add: "Lenin in his last days was losing his senses, hence the Central Committee decided to disregard his testament".

Stalin's caucus in those days was a regular rumor factory. Anyone slated for disfavor or elimination would first be subjected to this form of blackmail. As to Trotsky, the rumors were: 1. That he was breaking discipline and organizing a new party. 2. That the Trotskyists were hooking up with counter-revolutionary elements (White Guards). 3. That they were organizing a separate demonstration for May Day and that Trotsky attempted individually to address the demonstration and incite the masses against the party.

When Trotsky was being exiled to Alma Ata it was said that he took along with him a dozen peddler hunting dogs, hunting rifles, servants, lots of furniture, fine clothes and a whole library, all the comforts of a big bourgeois intellectual. The vilification of the opposition in the official Russian press must have been colossal, but we foreigners could not read it. We were supplied, however, with "quotations" from Trotsky's and Zinoviev's writings and plenty of analysis of these quotations, but we never saw an actual textual exposition of the opposition leaders' position written by themselves!

Trotsky's position, according to these "quotations" and commentaries which purported to "explain" the opposition's point of view, was as follows: 1) A split with the peasantry. 2) Preparation of a war against capitalist nations. 3) Loosening of the foreign trade monopoly. 4) Building up a war industry but neglect of the rest of economy. 5) Socialism cannot be built in a peasant country, hence the proletariat has to exploit the peasantry to prepare for the International Revolution, war, etc.

Such was the peppery dish prepared against the opposition. Needless to say we foreigners were thus finally convinced that Trotsky's position was all wrong, condemned it as "left" phrase-mongering, "objectively" leading to a counter-revolutionary position. Later this was further simplified to read: "The counter-revolutionary platform of Trotskyism" or "Trotskyism, the Vanguard of International Counter-Revolution."

Just about the time that we were pretty well convinced of the counter-revolutionary nature of Trotskyism, occurred the Chinese debacle. Those who follow events in the movement will remember that, contrary to the fundamental teachings of Lenin, Stalin caused the affiliation of the Chinese C. P. to the Kuomintang, the Chinese bourgeois party of Chiang-Kai-Chek. The C. P. submitted to the discipline of the Kuomintang and did not even have its own press. In order to keep up this reactionary stew all kinds of fancy but completely deceitful and anti-Leninist theories were invented by Stalin and his clique. The peasant masses of China, who were already then in a rising mood, were not only not encouraged but restrained from revolutionary action by the C. P. in order, as the thesis read, to maintain the alliance with the Chinese national bourgeoisie against imperialism.

The Chinese Debacle

Then one nice day, like thunder from a clear sky, came the news—circulated by rumors—that Chiang-Kai-Chek, head of the Kuomintang and commander of the Nationalist armies, had ordered a pogrom on the Communists only a few days after Stalin had made a speech praising Chiang-Kai-Chek as a "loyal ally". Through a Chinese comrade, whom I happened to know personally, I found out the facts, and also that Trotsky was opposed to the whole line of Stalin in China. The apparatus control of the C. P. by Stalin, however, was so strong even then, that in spite of all these facts and the disastrous defeat of the proletariat in China resulting from Stalin's policies, the C. P. then assembled in a Plenum stated: "Events have verified the correctness of the line", etc., etc. This thing dumfounded me. Although unable to properly assemble all these things in my mind a sort of uncanny distrust took hold of me. Somehow Stalin appeared in my consciousness as a dark force and I could hardly get rid of that feeling ever after.

How the Lefts Were Fooled

The fact, however, that Stalin supported the Left in the American and other parties as against Brandler, Lovestone and Bucharin threw me off the track and prevented me from drawing any further conclusions then and thinking the matter over subsequently. The audacity of the slander against the Trotsky position as counter-revolutionary was another factor, for none of us could fathom that the responsible leaders of the Russian C. P. could have possibly sunk so low as to commit such a falsification. Hence I and many others did not bother to find out the actual facts even after we were out of Russia. We took it more or less for granted that Trotsky had become what the C. I. said.

The present new turn to the right, this time executed officially by Stalin himself, had to occur in order to stir up the memory of things of the past against the background of present events. Now I know, of course, that all and severally the alleged deeds and views of the opposition led by Trotsky, as stated by Stalin and his clique, are outright fabrications. I know now that the whole thing is a tissue of lies. The whole Stalinist system is an unscrupulous system of slander and blackmail that will condemn its authors forever.

In the next issue I will point out how things proceeded in the American C. P. on the basis of these methods and policies.

Vol. 1 SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1934 No. 3

The Real Issues in the Soviet Union

THESE are times which impose upon all revolutionary workers an attitude of the greatest responsibility and the most sober judgment in regard to the Soviet Union. Those who have seen the Russian revolution, and its product the Soviet State, as the star of hope and inspiration of the international working class must in no case allow their vision to be obscured by the happenings of the recent days. It is necessary now to hold fast to fundamental conceptions and to view all the happenings in their light. The greatest danger of all is that the sympathetic and partly sympathetic masses will be alienated from the Soviet Union itself by the things taking place now. It is the duty of the conscientious revolutionists to counteract this trend. The indignant protest against the Stalinist frame-up of Trotsky, Zinoviev and other working class critics—which is voiced instinctively by every honest revolutionist—has to be combined at all times with the defense of the Soviet State against its class enemies and an unqualified condemnation of all terrorist acts and tendencies which can only facilitate the eventual downfall of the Soviet State.

The idea that the Soviet State is immune from this danger is a profound illusion. As long as the Soviet Union is surrounded by a capitalist world it is never free from the danger of a counter-revolutionary overthrow. Lenin and all the Bolsheviks who made the revolution always said this, and that is why they looked for the final solution of the difficulties and contradictions of the Soviet Union on the arena of the international revolution. The theory and practice of "Socialism in the Soviet Union alone" could work only to isolate the Soviet Union from its chief aid, and in the final analysis, its only real source of reinforcement, the international working class movement. The "Opposition", treacherously described as "counter-revolutionary" and now even branded as "terrorist", was animated from the first by this internationalist and fundamentally revolutionary conception. The purpose was to save the Soviet Union by spreading the revolution to other countries.

The accusation that the oppositionist political groups which originated in the Communist Party are responsible for the assassination of Kirov, or any other acts of terrorism, is a monstrous and fantastic slander. Such accusations hurled at the Marxist opponents of Stalin are not believed anywhere, least of all in the circles of the advanced and class-conscious workers. The uncompromising hostility of the Marxists to the methods of terrorism is too well known. The chief result of this infamous attempt to foist the assassination of Kirov onto the oppositionists is to sow confusion and demoralization in the ranks of the working class supporters of the Soviet State and thereby to weaken its position internally and externally. By resorting to such methods the Stalin bureaucracy testifies to the weakness of its position and the fear of proletarian criticism. The suspicion inevitably grows that further steps to the right in the field of foreign policy are contemplated, and that the aim is to silence criticism and smash proletarian opposition in advance. The bureaucracy can derive political and factional profit from the use of such methods only at the expense of the Soviet Union itself. Therein lies their condemnation.

We know nothing of the details surrounding the latest incidents—and neither does anybody else except the official circle which keeps it secret. We do not know what the political position of Zinoviev, for example, is at the present time and consequently cannot take any responsibility for it. But we do know that the attempt to "connect" Trotsky and his adherents with White Guards and with the assassination of Kirov is a transparent frame-up. We know that secrecy serves such ends, not the exposure and defeat of class enemies. For these reasons we demand open trials and full information. Opposition to this demand in the present circumstances is a confession of guilt. The working class of the world must be armed with the truth for the effective defense of the Workers' State.

Sacramento Trials Aimed at Labor

criminal syndicalism charges were entered.

All defendants are charged with "wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously, by spoken and written words and personal conduct" advocating criminal syndicalism and "crime, sabotage, violence and unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing a change in industrial ownership and control and effecting political change by advocating violence and picketing and by particularly advocating the overthrow of the government of the U. S. by . . . violence and force."

They are also charged with "justifying criminal syndicalism," and with printing, publishing, circulating, etc., matter advocating criminal syndicalism. Among the documents on which this charge is based are the Communist Manifesto by Marx and Engels, Lenin's On the Road to October, the Program of the Communist International, and various publications of the Communist Party, the T.U.U.L., the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union, and numerous speeches, theses, etc. of the Stalinist Party.

Finally, they are charged with "drilling as students and becoming members of a class of students and engaging in the act or acts of performing and executing military drills with intent . . . to effect a political change."

The prisoners are in the main leaders and members of the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union. Pat Chambers is its District Organizer, and was C. P. Senatorial candidate in the last election. Caroline Decker is District Secretary of the Union. Jack Warnick is the director of the Sacramento Workers School. Norman Mini is an instructor in the school. Martin Wilson is section organizer of the I.L.D. Nora Conklin, a member of the Unemployed Council, is a direct descendant of one of the signers of the American Declaration of Independence. Albert Hongard, C. P. Congressional candidate, is Sacramento organizer of the C.P. Jack Crane is a member of the Workers Ex-Servicemen's League. Lorine Norman is secretary of the Sacramento I.L.D. Donald Bigham is Y.C.L. organizer. The other defendants are Fred Kirkwood, Lee Hung (a Chinese worker), A. G. Ford, Luther Miney, W. H. Huffine, Harry Collett, Mike Piesch, and John Fisher.

Two Out on Bail

In all these cases the bail under the criminal syndicalism charges is set at $3,000 cash or $6,000 bond. Those convicted of vagrancy or still under the charge would also have to provide bail on this charge, totalling $1,000 each in cash or twice as much in bond. This includes Chambers, Wilson, Decker, Warnick, Norman, Kirkwood, Hung, Ford, Collett and Bigham.

Of all these only two have been bailed out. One is Albert Hongard, whose bail was provided by the I.L.D. and the Conference for Labor's Civil Rights, an organization of liberals headed by Bishop Francis J. McConnell. The other is Norman Mini, bailed out by friends. Norman Mini is being defended by Judge Charles O. Busick, a conservative Republican who, when a Judge several years ago issued the notorious "Busick injunction" against the I.W.W. movement in California. Busick is reported to have subsequently changed his views and is now a critic of the criminal syndicalism law. The remaining defendants are represented by Leo Gallagher, retained by the I.L.D.

The prisoners have been miserably treated in jail. Among other things, Sheriff Cox has refused to deliver to them literature and newspapers sent by friends although such censorship is illegal.

Prosecution is Crooked

It has already been made clear that the prosecution will be run on Sacco-Vanzetti lines: an outright attempt to bulldoze and hoodwink the jury by playing upon its prejudices. District Attorney Neil McAllister has already begun his rough stuff. He got the wife of one juror, Mrs. R. B. Nix, to state that she had been threatened by Reds. An investigation disclosed that the claim was a fake.

On the other hand, it was revealed that the Assistant D. A. is quite palmy with one of the jurors, a Mrs. Rose. Mrs. Rose likes this district attorney well enough to present him with a brace of ducks . . . but she will give an impartial verdict, of course.

The Communist Party is legal in California and even appears on the ballot. These defendants, however, are charged with the "crime" of distributing Communist literature, published by a legal party! Even those who are not party members are being attacked for Communism, although the real objective is to smash the entire militant labor movement of Sacramento Valley and the state.

Prisoners are Fighting

The prisoners are making a good fight themselves. Despite the misery of all these months in jail, they are on their toes in the court, putting questions to the jurors which anticipate the district attorney's plans to wave the American flag as his chief trial tactic. Caroline Decker makes a practice of asking prospective jurors the following question:

"Should the district attorney use such invectives when referring to us as 'Reds', 'agents of Moscow', 'rats', 'alien agitators', 'sedition radicals', 'free lovers', or 'godless people', would that prejudice you against me, and make it impossible for you to decide my case entirely on the basis of the evidence presented?"

Jack Warnick asks this one:

"If you should conclude from the evidence that I believe that every young person should be given an opportunity to work at the task for which he is best fitted . . . and if you should conclude that such a system ought to be changed radically . . . would that prejudice you against me?"

Martin Wilson:

"If you should conclude from the evidence that I believe that the essential meaning of democracy is majority rule, and that I believe

Issue New International, Party Organ

With the December issue, the New International appears for the last time as an unofficial organ.

The historic importance of this last issue is great. The articles by A. J. Muste and James P. Cannon on the Foundation of the Workers Party contain a survey of the past history of the revolutionary movement and perspectives for the future.

Sydney Hook, in his article on Marx and Hess presents a significant analysis of the evolution of Marxist thought. Ruben Gotesky starts the first round of a battle. In his article on Sydney Hook's book "Towards the Understanding of Karl Marx". His chief criticism is based on Hook's contention 1) That Marxism is not a science, 2) That socialism is not inevitable. Hook will answer Gotesky in the next issue. Arne Swabeck writes on a current problem—the significance of the November elections. Among the special features will be another "Archive of the Revolution" and several book reviews on religion, art, science, etc.

Beginning with January, the New International will embark on its new career. According to its editors:

"It will not only be the theoretic organ of the Workers Party dealing with socio-economic and historical problems but will also contain articles of a scientific and technical nature—articles on science, medicine, industrial technique, housing, literature and the arts. From time to time non-party writers will be asked to contribute on these technical subjects, or to engage in open polemics with party writers. The fullest freedom of discussion within the broad party lines will be encouraged between party members. Thus, qualitatively and quantitatively the New International will be the foremost theoretic revolutionary journal in the English-speaking world."

that when our economic system fails to satisfy the minimum needs of the majority, the little minority who profit from that unworkable system will attempt to maintain themselves in power against the will of the majority by force, and that I believe that the majority have a right to act in their own interest and to follow militant leadership in establishing a government which does represent the interests of the majority, who are workers and small farmers, and that I believe it would be my duty to that majority of which I am a part to help establish that government by force, would that prejudice you against me?"

Need of United Defense Movement

The Sacramento case has the utmost importance for the labor movement, especially for its progressive and radical section, on a national scale. It is obvious that the defendants are bearing the brunt of a reactionary attack aimed at the working class movement as a whole. Up till now the publicity given to the case has been entirely inadequate, in view of its importance, and the absence of a strong national defense movement greatly endangers the prisoners. The fact that only two of them have been taken out on bail is a striking illustration of the weakness of the defense movement.

The Sacramento case calls for the cooperation of all forces in the advanced labor movement as the first necessary step toward the organization of a broad movement in the trade unions.

Next week we hope to have a detailed news story from Sacramento by our own correspondent.

CLEVELAND. — The American Newspaper Guild made another advance toward organization of newspaper editorial writers with the signing of a 1-year contract by the Cleveland News. A minimum of $40 a week is set for editorial workers with four years' experience. A 5-day, 40-hour week is established.

Glass Faces Ten Years
On Syndicalist Charge

W. Va. Unemployed League Aid Defense

Stanley Glass, Socialist and active worker in the West Virginia Unemployed League, is facing a ten-year sentence for "conspiracy to overthrow the government" for daring to revive a strike against the Baldwin Shovel Plant, a subsidiary of the notorious Weirton Steel Co.

Last August at the request of the strikers Glass revived the strike at the Parkersburg plant after it seemed to have been broken; reorganized the picket lines; and held several successful meetings outside the plant. At one of these meetings on August 29 Glass was threatened by a scab armed with a pitchfork, who later appeared with a shotgun and fired ten times at the picket line, wounding five persons. Although brought to trial for this atrocity, the case against the scab was immediately dismissed.

At the instigation of the company, state troopers began a search for Glass with machine guns, and Mrs. Glass was told by troopers of their intention to murder Glass, whom they knew solely as a "red-headed agitator". Strikers concealed ed Glass and he was not apprehended until October 25, on a warrant dated August 27—a day before the speech for which he was supposedly arrested.

Glass's room was searched and his wife's papers confiscated without a search warrant. He was secretly taken to Parkersburg, the scene of the strike, and brutally third-degreed for two days and nights by the police. Finally his friends learned of his whereabouts and secured his release on Nov. 3 in $2,000 bail.

On January 4 the state will call for his indictment under the Redman Act, West Virginia's version of the criminal syndicalism law.

The West Virginia Unemployed League at its state convention held November 10-11 in Charleston adopted a resolution pledging solidarity to Glass. A local Glass Defense Committee has been organized at Charleston to take charge of the case. The Workers' Party calls upon its membership to support the activities of this committee. Contributions can be sent to J. Gordon, Chairman, 14 Capitol Street, Charleston, W. Va.

Hearst Red-Baiting in School System
Vehemently Protested by Educators

That noted scholar, William Randolph Hearst, who failed to obtain his degree when he was a student at Harvard, has recently been conducting an anti-red campaign directed at American schools and colleges. Mr. Hearst's only educational qualification is an honorary LL.B. from Oglethorpe, a jerkwater college in the south, a degree which he received in 1927 some thirty years after his unsuccessful career at Harvard had been forgotten.

When Professor George S. Counts of Teachers College in New York, received a badly written letter last week asking for "The inside stuff on Socialism, Capitalism, and Communism," he was forewarned. The same crude provocateur's trick had been employed by the Hearst press at Syracuse University. The author of the letter, a Hearst reporter, came into Professor Counts' office on his red-baiting mission to find a stenographer, ready to register every word of the interview.

Cooking Up a Red Scare
"Mr. Hearst," said the reporter after some prompting, "is at present engaged in conducting a 'red scare'. Personally I am not in sympathy with that sort of thing, in fact, quite the opposite. But Mr. Hearst wants material along this line."

Asked if he was ashamed of himself the reporter said, "Not of myself, but of the situation that makes it necessary for me to do this to keep alive."

A stenographic report of the whole interview was forwarded to the Dickstein Committee on Un-American activities, together with a petition signed by twenty-two New York professors, members of the National Educational Association, that Mr. Hearst be investigated.

Said Professor Counts:
"If W. R. Hearst succeeds in his efforts American schools and universities will be reduced to the ignominious condition of Germany."

in the "democratic" United States, will not shed tears over the fate of a few White Guards and counter-revolutionists who would restore the capitalist order in the Soviet Union.

"Since the revolutionary workers of the world must know the facts about white guards and foreign agents who may threaten the Soviet state in order to be adequately prepared for its own defense, we protest against the secrecy and mystery in which the Soviet Government has shrouded recent happenings in the 'democratic' United States, will not shed tears over the fate of a few White Guards and counter-revolutionists who would restore the capitalist order in the Soviet Union. Imperialists and their diplomats work in the dark. Not so the toiling masses; they need to see and know where they are going, especially in this crisis when the threat of war hangs like a sword over the workers of all lands.

"We earnestly protest, furthermore, against sowing confusion and division at this time in the minds of workers everywhere, as the Soviet Government does when it lumps together as counter-revolutionists, White Guards, Japanese imperialists, German Fascist butchers, and revolutionists who are party opponents of the officials of the Soviet Government. We declare that only distrust can arise from laying the charge of conspiring to assassinate Kirov against revolutionists who, as Marxists, have always bitterly opposed individual terrorism.

"We demand, therefore, that persecution of party opponents of the officials of the Soviet Government cease immediately; that the Soviet Government desist from attempts to link proletarian opponents of the present Soviet regime, who stand on the principle of the proletarian dictatorship, with White Guards or with the agents of capitalist governments; and that open trials be held for all charged with conspiracy against the Soviet Union and the widest publicity given to these trials in order that the advanced workers of the world may be armed with the truth about the dangers which threaten the Soviet Union and the machinations of capitalist governments."

W. Norris Joins

Oppositionist reaction is now clearly on the offensive in the party, and gaining ground. The reactionary Right wing, led by the New York "Old Guard"—in reality a conservative gang which has nothing in common with the ideas and spirit of socialism—pushes forward. The weak-kneed and unprincipled "Militants" retreat before them all along the line.

As for the Revolutionary Policy Committee, it has forfeited the possibility of playing a serious role by allowing itself to be converted into an agency of the Lovestone faction and consequently, of degenerate and discredited Stalinism.

I know the history and background of the two organizations which came together to found the Workers Party of the U. S. I have read the Declaration of Principles very carefully and fully agree with it. I am convinced that the future belongs to this party. In my opinion, every sincere revolutionary socialist will have to make the same decision.

Fraternally yours,
W. W. NORRIS.

New Year's Manifesto of the Workers Party

nist and Socialist Parties, are among its charter members. The Workers Party of the U. S. is founded on the great principles of revolutionary theory and practice stated by Marx and Lenin and tested by the experience of the workers in the class struggle on an international scale, above all in the Russian revolution of 1917. Proceeding from these principles the Workers Party of the U. S. utilizes the revolutionary possibilities of American tradition and history, including the militant strike tradition of the American workers, and adapts its tactics to the concrete realities and needs of the American masses today.

The revolutionary movement is necessarily international in outlook and character. The establishment of the new revolutionary party in the U. S. therefore means for us that we stand ready to cooperate with all groups, organizations and parties in other countries which stand on the same fundamental program as our own for the speediest possible establishment of the new, Fourth, International.

The formation of the Workers Party is a great step forward. After more than a decade of splits and disintegration in the revolutionary labor movement, an example of unity has been given. A center has been built to which the now unattached working class fighters as well as the fighting elements in other parties and groups may rally. A party has been formed which is revolutionary, international, and at the same time rooted in the American working class and adapted to the conditions existing in the U. S. today!

THE ROAD OF STRUGGLE

The road ahead for the new year must be the road of determined and militant struggle. This is the New Year's message of the Workers Party. Though plenty is today within our reach, every struggle of the workers against wage cuts or reductions in relief is met with bitter resistance by employers and government. Every attempt of the workers to organize in order that they may have power to enforce their demands is likewise violently opposed. Why? Because in this period of the decline of capitalism every gain made by the workers and farmers is at the expense of capitalist profits. By the same token, the workers must fight against every cut in wages or relief, must fight for a higher standard with every means and weapon at their disposal. To yield an inch now, to give up the fight for a single moment means to give the capitalists a chance to rally their forces for a new onslaught, to be pushed nearer to the starvation level, nearer to the smashing of all the workers' organizations, nearer to the horrors of Fascism and War.

For the workers of the U. S. in 1935, therefore, the slogans are—Organize — build the Unions and Unemployed Leagues!

Fight out the battle for union recognition in steel, automobiles, rubber, public utilities, all the basic industries. Fight it out on the picket line. Union recognition cannot be won in capitalist legislatures or courts. Strike! Strike militantly!

Organize the left-progressive wing, the honest fighting elements, in all the unions and on a national scale. Wrest the leadership of the unions from those who preach and practice cooperation with the bosses or the capitalist politicians. Put the leadership into the hands of those who preach and practice irreconcilable struggle against the bosses and their government.

Clean out the corruption, racketeering, gangsterism and autocracy which prevent the growth of militant unionism!

Demand insurance against unemployment, accident, sickness, old age—at the cost of capitalist profits.

Unite regardless of racial, religious, political or any other differences in order to resist all attacks upon the civil and political rights of workers and farmers. Oppose all preparations for capitalist wars!

Combat all capitalist attacks on the workers regime in the Soviet Union!

Fight every form of discrimination against the Negroes.

Remember that today the struggle for bread, for security, for a free and decent life, is the struggle to overthrow capitalism, that the only "way out" for the workers is the revolutionary way.

Organize and prepare, therefore, to establish the rule of the workers!

Plenty, security, leisure, freedom, peace for ourselves and our children, are within our reach. A crumbling, insane, unjust economic order stands in the way. We will sweep it aside. Reactionary forces will try to oppose and divide us. We must tear them down.

American capitalists and profiteers would lead the world to degradation, war, chaos. American workers will join the workers of the world in the creation of a new society, a world federation of workers' republics.

Wall Street Cracks Whip on Congress

Efforts to Save Capitalism to Continue-New Deal
In 1934 Raised Prices, Profits-Put New Millions on Relief

By GEO. CLARKE

Flushed with its recent electoral victory the Democratic Congress opens in Washington once again to do the bidding of the master. The master is not Roosevelt or the so-called sovereign people. The guiding spirits of the nation sit not in Washington but many miles to the north, in the man-made canyons of New York. It is the interests of Wall Street the legislators will serve.

The entire history of the New Deal is alive with instances proving the old maxim that the government is but the "executive committee of the ruling class". Roosevelt and a willing Congress took hold of the political reins of American capitalism, just as it was being steered into the ditch, and brought it back onto a safe highway. An unofficial spokesman for the administration, Raymond Moley, says flat-footedly: "Basically the New Deal was an effort to save capitalism."

Ungrateful Wall Street

Big Business may appear ungrateful to Roosevelt for the helping hand he gave it when in need. But if Wall Street has been grudging in its compliments, this is no indication that Roosevelt and his congressional majority have stinted in their grants. The actions of the President when the banks were on the verge of collapse and the six billion dollar blood injection into the prostrate financial and industrial institutions of American capitalism speak louder than compliments.

Capitalism has reaped a lucrative harvest under the benign administration of Mr. Roosevelt. The Journal of Commerce reports that over six billion dollars in the form of corporate interests and dividends have flowed into its coffers for the year 1934.

These fabulous profits have not been gained in an era of well being and prosperity for all. The economy of scarcity amid abundance is as striking a fact under Roosevelt as under Hoover.

Promises

The promises of Roosevelt to the stricken working class groaning under the full weight of the mounting years of economic crisis have been remarkably prolific. But even as these promises gained in ozone volume they receded in real substance. The talk of recovery has yielded little to the workers. Unemployment, according to the notoriously conservative A. F. of L. figures, shows an increase of 550,000 from October 1933 when the number of jobless stood at the figure of 10,122,000 to October 1934 when it has risen to 10,672,000. The past year has seen an increase of over one million families on relief. Richberg himself estimates that by February 1935 more than 5,000,000 families or over 22,000,000 persons will live on relief pittance.

"No one shall starve," said Roosevelt, and his Democratic Congress cheered him to the echo. The meaning of that promise is now clear. It has meant that death from starvation should be avoided to avert an explosion of discontent stored up for more than five years. Its corollary, however, has been that wages and relief levels must keep the masses on the border of starvation. The recent decree of relief administrator, Harry Hopkins, slashing work relief wages from 40 to 30 cents an hour is a veritable dynamite cure for those suffering from New Deal promises.

Employed Workers

Employed workers have fared no better than those on relief doles. The process of leveling the wages of skilled workers has been a high point of accomplishment under Rooseveltian codes. Its counterpart has been a standard of minimum wages slightly above the government handouts. And these standards have rarely been enforced. How significant is the fact that thousands of Detroit automobile workers, ostensibly living under a paradise of capitalist paternalism, would rather depend on relief checks than on the abominable wage of General Motors or Henry Ford!

On the other hand food prices have risen 28 percent over the figure for April 28, 1933. But payrolls have actually dropped 5.2 percent for the third quarter of 1934. When the working class tried to bridge this yawning gap, the New Deal has thrust its elbow in the way. Strikes have either been prevented or, once under way, pulverized by a multitude of arbitration boards. And now, the crowning stroke, is the so-called true proclaimed by Roosevelt with the direct collusion of William Green and the manufacturers. With the help of its Judas leaders labor has been crucified on the cross of the

Auto Body Told System Is Doomed

Workers Shun Hearing Held to Stabilize Industry

TOLEDO, Ohio.—"The workers no longer trust the Government. That is why more workers have not come to testify at this hearing."

The NRA committee investigating labor conditions in the automobile industry heard this from Art Preis, speaking for the Workers Party of the United States. The committee, which has been gathering data in Detroit, Flint, Pontiac, Toledo and other auto centers, was unable to understand why more workers did not come forward.

"Testimony has been taken secretly and good union men are afraid to expose themselves at this hearing," Preis told the committee. "This fact speaks eloquently of labor's position in this country. The workers know that the Government is in the hands of the industrialists. If they victimize themselves here, the Government will not protect them."

Whispered Testimony

Preis's statement came as a climax to many hours of whispered testimony by members of the Federal Auto Workers Union in which they told of acts of discrimination against militant workers, speed-up, sordid working conditions, irregular employment and low wages. "The hearing was largely a farce. Workers were not permitted to express opinions on the National Auto Labor Board, or on Section 7a of the NRA. Data on how to stabilize the auto industry under the profit system was what the committee wanted."

Preis Produces Facts

Refusing to speak from this basis, the Workers Party representative launched into a documented report on developments in the auto industry, showing the increasing rationalization and monopoly control under the NRA. Competition between the remaining major auto corporations is becoming sharper, he said. Facts and figures on unemployment, wages and hours were submitted to show that conditions in the industry would continue to become worse.

"This committee wants to know how to stabilize the industry," Preis continued. "The truth is, as members of the committee well know, the automobile industry cannot be stabilized. The economic system has to be stabilized. And capitalism cannot be stabilized. The profit system is undoubtedly doomed. We must look to a system

Robber Baron Goes Free

The Insull brothers are free again. The above picture shows Martin Insull being escorted by police after his acquittal on a $350,000 embezzlement charge. The Insull public utilities companies have taken millions from investors.

Another story on this page tells about 18 workers in California who face long prison sentences on charges of attempting to overthrow the government. Their actual crime is that they had the guts and decency to organize agricultural workers to fight against starvation wages.

Yet there are some workers who believe there are no classes in America! Who believe that the rich are treated the same as the poor!

Huey Long Is Tammany Hall Rising in South

A Clever Politician, Accustomed to Corruption, Graft

(This is the first of a series of articles on the would-be fascist leaders in the United States.)

By DAN EASTMAN

Part I

Huey Long is no depression baby; unlike Upton Sinclair, Dr. Townsend, and Father Coughlin, he has been in politics for many years. In 1920 he started his career as a member of the Louisiana Public Service Commission. In 1924 he ran up an astonishing vote for governor, and in 1928, at the very height of prosperity, he was elected.

Long is no kind-hearted socialist muckraker, no misguided visionary doctor, nor fulminating Catholic, but a clever and experienced politician accustomed to the ruthless corruption of capitalist politics. He is Tammany Hall brought up to date.

It is a mistake to underestimate the Louisiana Kingfish. If there had been no depression his antics would be confined to the always poverty stricken state of Louisiana. But with the whole country plunged into poverty and insecurity, the political measures that broke the government of Louisiana are now potentially effective throughout the nation.

Long's Following

On September 1 of this year, Huey Long was able to claim, if not prove, some 1,400,000 members of his Share the Wealth Clubs throughout America. In New York City alone, if we are to believe his supporters, there are already 200 Share the Wealth Clubs ready to follow Huey wherever he may lead.

The stronghold of Longism is, of course, Louisiana, where there are literally thousands of Share the Wealth Clubs, and where Huey has a deadlock on every apparatus of government. He controls the executive directly through his stooge, Governor O. K. Allen. He has such influence in the legislature that, in the last session, it passed some forty-four bills so rapidly that none of the members ever found out what they were voting. And with so little formality, that it was months before the exact nature of the bills passed was known either to the legislature or to the people.

He controls the judiciary; after some fancy political maneuvering he succeeded in getting five of the eight members of the Supreme Court of Louisiana. Huey himself is one of the senators from the state, and the other, Senator Overton, is a Long man. Two of the representatives to the lower house are Long men.

In Arkansas, which ranks second in the number of Share the Wealth Clubs, Long is reported to have assisted and influenced the election of Senator Hattie Caraway, widow of the late lamented Senator Caraway.

In Mississippi, third in the number of Share the Wealth Clubs, Long is reported to have assisted and influenced the election of Senator Bilbo.

STEEL ELECTION CALLED

Carnegie Corporation Will Rely on Government
And Courts

By ARNE SWABECK

The National Steel Labor Relations Board has ordered—"reluctantly and after long hesitation"—that an election be held in the plants of the Carnegie Steel Company, subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation. Almost a year ago such an election was ordered by the National Labor Board in the Weirton steel mills, but the Weirton magnates snapped their fingers at this decision. They had previously held an election in their own way—making sure in advance that the returns would show an overwhelming indorsement for the company union.

Of course, the Weirton steel workers, who had amply proven by their strike in September 1933 that they were in favor of a union of their own and ready to fight for it, got nothing out of the sham maneuvers between the labor boards and the owners of the industry. It is reported that the workers in the Carnegie mills had asked the Wagner National Labor Board last February for an election and on May 2 it was ruled that such an election should be held. Nothing happened.

It is reported also that the Carnegie Corporation had expressed a willingness to bargain with the steel workers union as a concession to them but remained adamant in its demand to negotiate similarly with other groups, meaning the company union through which it feels sure of its powers of coercion and intimidation to control the men in the mills.

It has already been strongly intimated that the corporation will refuse to furnish its payroll for the elections ordered and carry the case up to the United States Supreme Court. A fight in this manner is a fight on the corporation's own front. It knows how to deal with the courts and how to make the influence of its money powers bear fruit. The steel corporation does not mind spending a little time with the courts for it knows it can rely on any branch of the capitalist government to carry out its wishes. In this sense it relies on its own powers, a lesson that the steel workers union has not yet learned.

These are so far the results of the demoralizing practices instituted by the proposals of William Green and Mike Tighe at the steel workers union convention in Pittsburgh last June when it faced the momentous question of striking the mills to compel recognition of the union.

Green asked for the creation of the National Steel Labor Relations Board and got it. The workers paid the price of the resulting disintegrating influence just at a time when an aggressive policy of organization and action was required. Green and Tighe on the other hand are pursuing their victory and forging ahead for an industrial truce of no strikes with monopoly capital.

To challenge the steel corporation to a plant election to determine the sentiment of the workers may have had its time. Now that is not the issue and in view of the special powers of coercion in the hands of the corporation in such a procedure it will result only in disorganization of the workers' ranks. Actual union organization means to fight it out.

Prospects for organization were excellent last summer. The Amalgamated Association of Iron Steel Workers, a pseudopatriotic pseudounion, was the only organization to

Eighteen on Trial Need Labor Defense

California Fruit Growers Push Prosecution of Union Leaders in Red Drive-Workers
Move to Obtain Bail

(Press Service of Non-Partisan Labor Defense)

SACRAMENTO, Cal.—Confronted by a proposal originating with the California growers' associations that District Attorney McAllister, who was defeated in the last election and goes out of office January 5, be hired at a fat fee as special prosecutor in the pending criminal syndicalism cases, the Sacramento County Board of Supervisors is showing signs of fright.

Despite the lack of a serious organized defense movement of the 18 workers shortly to be tried for the crime of organizing to win decent wages, the Board hesitates to hire McAllister. At a special meeting Monday morning, several members expressed doubts of their authority "to spend the taxpayers' money" on a special prosecutor. Underneath a flood of legalistic jabber was this consciousness:

Imperialists Enter New Naval Phase

Japan Ends Treaty -- U.S.
Fleet to Mass
In Pacific

The Japanese denunciation of the Washington Naval Treaty at the close of 1934 was a bold stroke to overcome the obstacles placed in her way by American and British imperialism. The struggle for the markets and raw materials of the Orient, especially China, is of primary importance to these three powers. At the present juncture this struggle revolves around the question of the naval strength of the Big Three. With the rejection of the 5-5-3 ratio a new naval race begins. It will go a long way in determining who is to control the gateway to the Chinese waters.

If Japan succeeds with her naval policy a gigantic step forward in the further penetration of China is assured. But the United States will not concede (nor will Britain. Already we hear that the President plans to recommend increased naval and military appropriations. At the same time a big Pacific maneuver of the entire navy, the largest ever assembled, is planned with a gigantic squad of airships.

Japan's aim is naval supremacy in the eastern area.

To accomplish this it was necessary to reject the renewal of the 5-5-3 ratio and instead demand parity. Japan, however, does not want parity at a 5-5-5 ratio. Japan is in no financial condition to build such a navy. The United States is the only nation that could weather such financial hardships. But even if Japan could allot funds for this purpose, such a large navy ratio would strengthen the Anglo-American imperialists and defeat the aims of Japan. Japan demands "disarmament"—that all "offensive" ships (battleships, airships, submarines) shall be discarded and a new ratio of 3-3-3.

The purpose of Japan is to eliminate ships with a long cruising range. If the Anglo-American capitalists are to protect their Pounds and Dollars in the Orient they must have all types of ships that can travel long distances for combat and return to fueling bases. If these are eliminated the Japanese imperialists can easily master the Asiatic area against either of the two main contenders, and possibly both if necessary.

A new armament race has begun another step toward war has been taken. Let the workers of the world be on guard for their own interests.

1934 - Labor's Story - Hope, Trust, Betrayal, Militancy - 1935

American labor starts 1935 in a militant mood. A year ago workers put their trust in Roosevelt and the New Deal. That trust betrayed by one event after another during 1934, they enter 1935 aware that they must fight if they are to win.

The blood of 52 workers killed in strikes, many shot in the back, stains the old year's record. During the first nine months of 1934, incomplete returns show 1,104 strikes—more than in any year since 1921—involving 1,500,000 workers.

Unemployed Help

Significant was the increasing cooperation between employed and unemployed workers in strikes.

Toledo set the pace last spring.

In the Auto-Lite strike. Barricades were erected in the streets. Two workers were killed by National Guardsmen.

The strikers, with the Unemployed League giving leadership, won a 5 per cent increase and union recognition.

The Minneapolis teamsters' strike was marked by the intelligent way in which it was organized, the strikers' refusal to accept less than victory, and the fact that farmers supplied food to the strikers.

After settlement of the strike in May, it flared again in summer when the bosses broke the agreement. In the bosses' effort to break the strike two workers were killed, and 60 were wounded. The workers won a guaranteed wage scale, the right to represent inside as well as outside workers.

For 16 Workers—Death

The largest strike occurred in September, when 600,000 textile workers walked out. Sixteen workers gave their lives as 40,000 troops were called out to break the strike.

With the strikers still fighting, the leaders of the United Textile Workers "sold" the strike for a Roosevelt promise—investigation of the stretchout and other evils. The workers are still waiting for better conditions.

On the west coast, the year's most spectacular strike tied up every port as longshoremen walked out. The strike reached its climax in San Francisco, in a three-day general strike. Police killed two workers. In Seattle Mayor Smith led mounted police into the strikers' ranks.

The National Longshoremen's Board was set up. Arbitration gave the strikers a 30-hour week, 96 cents an hour, partial control of hiring halls. In San Francisco the Market Street Railway Company, Tom Mooney's old enemy, was unionized.

This strike was used as the excuse for the "red" baiting and union smashing campaign in California.

Victory—For Bosses

Two of the basic industries, steel and automobiles, called off threatened strikes when President Roosevelt "arbitrated". The settlements included recognition of Company unions, in automobiles the retention of the infamous merit clause". As the new year starts, auto workers are again getting ready to fight.

America's first newspaper strike came in Newark, N. J., where 40 out of 52 editorial room workers of the Newark Leader walked out in November for union recognition. They are still out, helped by the Young American Newspaper Guild.

Strikes by relief workers and workers on government projects marked the year, as did walkouts by store clerks and white collar workers.

Agricultural strikes occurred all over the country. Like the industrial strikes, they were significant for their growing militancy and the help given by the unemployed.

Millions of workers start the new year with their eyes opened.

The defendants, who include leaders both of the Communist Party and of the union, are not yet getting the broad organized backing to which they are entitled. Should such a movement get on foot within the next week or so, to include large sections of the trade union movement, McAllister may yet be driven out of the case and the whole frame-up smashed. An important aspect is that the defendants be bailed out so that they may move about freely and rally support for the fight. The court has its ear to the ground, and if the defendants get going in time, the 18 defendants will be saved and the growers' associations will take a licking.

Clothing Workers Fight Suspension

Eight members of Local 4, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, have been given a suspended sentence on charges of belonging to an opposition group in the local. Expulsion is threatened if they take further part in the activities of this group. Some members of the group declared themselves to be members of the Rank and File Committee which is not confined to Local 4 but is a general left wing organization working for a left wing progressive program throughout the entire Amalgamated Union. Only in this one local, Cutters Local No. 4 of New York has the right of members to belong to any group been challenged. The A. C. W., which was founded in a struggle against a bureaucratic machine has prided itself on its democratic and progressive policies and procedure. Nevertheless, this Local administration takes upon itself to discipline members for exercising a right long recognized and practiced in all progressive or democratic unions, that is the right of members to organize groups around such policies as they consider fitted for their union.

We wish to publicly protest against the following violation of elementary democratic rights of union members within their own organization. (1) The suspended sentences and threats of expulsion for belonging to the Rank and File Committee and the barring of members from belonging to organized groups within the union, who loyally support the union and whose aim is to make it a more effective instrument for their struggles. (2) The violation of the constitutional rights of the eight members who were never given copies of the charges against them and who were also refused the constitutional rights of being represented by any member designated by them at the trial. At a time like this when organized labor, both in this and other countries, is battling for the right to organize into unions of their own choice, etc., it should be the bounden duty of all organized workers to see to it that the widest democracy prevails in their own and other unions.

We hope that this protest of a group of members of a trade union, which has always paraded as a progressive and democratic union, will draw the attention of all honest and truly progressive workers and secure their sympathy and support in our struggle against the violation of elementary democratic rights and against the intimidation of a suspended sentence and the threat of expulsion that hangs over the heads of our eight members.

MEMBERS OF LOCAL 4.

Allard Elected

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Dec. 19.—Gerry Allard, member of the Workers Party, was overwhelmingly elected to the pit committee of his local union in recent elections held in the Progressive Miners of America. Fred Schmidt and Walter Repasky, young militant coal diggers, were elected as co-members of the committee. The local union has 437 members. It is a working local with job control under the jurisdiction of the new Illinois miners union.

Officers elected for the incoming year are: James Peyton, president; Cap Hollensack, vice-president; Fred Farrand, recording secretary; John Beamer, financial secretary; Chas. Peyton, treasurer; Louis Cooke, door keeper; Mike Mayerhoffer, Jim Burgess and Ed Donaldson, sick committee; Gerry Allard, Fred Schmidt and Walter Repasky, pit committee.

Relief Head Aids Cops, League Finds

ALLENTOWN, Pa. Dec. 31.—The grievance committee of the Lehigh County Unemployed League recently disclosed that relief officials were working hand in hand with the Allentown Police Department. The facts are as follows:

M. Harisko, father of a 16 year old boy wanted as the alleged murderer of a night watchman, was cut from his job on a relief project shortly after the shooting occurred on Nov. 15. The son has successfully eluded the police since.

Although Harisko has a family dependent upon him, all relief was stopped and he received neither food, clothing nor coal. Reduced to extreme destitution and misery he applied time and again in vain to various relief officials. After a month of suffering, Harisko was approached by the police with the infamous proposition that if he would turn the son over to them he would be given immediately the relief due him.

Appeals to League

Angered, Harisko brought the case to the attention of the Unemployed League. When it was presented to Mrs. Maomi Sheema, local supervisor of relief, she vehemently denied collaboration with the police. However, when she opened the folder containing the records of the Harisko case, what should appear but numerous clippings and a police photograph of the boy.

The committee demanded to know the meaning of this and Mrs. Sheema blushing replied: "As social workers we are interested in the welfare of the boy. We want to see that no harm befalls him."

Due to the efforts of the League the family is again receiving relief. The police department and relief officials are in an embarrassing predicament.

United Fronting In Pittsburgh

PENNSYLVANIA LEAGUES TRY AGAIN

But Councils and S. P. Group Forget to Tell The Rank and File What It's All About

By E. R. McKINNEY

PITTSBURGH.—Once again the Communist Party and its Unemployed Councils have demonstrated themselves to be ineffectual instruments for promoting the united front with other unemployed organizations. For different reasons the same criticism can be directed against the Socialist Party and the Unemployed Citizens League in Pittsburgh.

The story begins about two months ago when the Allegheny County Emergency Relief Board decided to set up a central complaint bureau to be called the "Public Relations Office" (P.R.O.). The A.C.E.R.B. ruled that relations of the unemployed organizations should be with the P.R.O. only and that in the future no unemployed committees would be admitted to the relief stations.

Before the Public Relations Office had been publicly announced, the Relief Board called for a meeting of the unemployed organizations. The Pennsylvania Unemployed League (P.U.L.) in Pittsburgh, had information that this meeting was called for the purpose of telling the unemployed leagues of the board's intention to establish the P.R.O. The P.U.L. immediately sent a letter to the Unemployed Citizens League (U.C.L.) which is led by the Socialist Party, suggesting that the U.C.L. and the P.U.L. get together before the meeting with the board and lay plans for meeting with the P.R.O. The U.C.L. did not reply to this letter and each unemployed organization went individually into the meeting with the A.C.E.R.B. At a subsequent meeting the P.U.L. presented a counter-plan to the P.R.O. and was the only organization to make definite and concrete counter-proposals.

About one week after the first meeting with the board Robert Lieberman, S. P. leader of the U.C.L., sent out a letter to all unemployed organizations suggesting a meeting at U.C.L. headquarters to organize a united front against the P.R.O. When Lieberman was asked why he had not replied to the P.U.L. letter his reply was to ask: "How did you know what was going to be discussed at the Board meeting?"

On the Line

The P.U.L. decided to go into the united front called by Lieberman and the U.C.L., along with the Unemployed Councils, and the Rank and File Veterans. We insisted that our united action must not be directed against the P.R.O. as such but must be a demand for the admission of unemployed league committees to the relief units.

The P.U.L. began to picket relief stations in support of this demand. At the East Liberty relief station the pickets were arrested. The police contended that there could be no strike of the unemployed and that therefore they had no right to picket. Furthermore, the police took the position that the picket line of about fifteen was a "parade" for which a permit was necessary.

Not a Parade

Despite the arrests the picketing was kept up. At the time the hearing for those arrested was in progress the picket line was still on duty. At the hearing, despite urging from the police, the magistrate decided that a picket line was not a "parade" and that the unemployed could not be stopped from using this form of protest and demonstration. Thus the P.U.L. established the right of its members to be on the sidewalk in front of a relief station.

While the P.U.L. was leading this militant action the Unemployed Councils in the united front committee were advocating a county-wide demonstration to be conducted both inside and outside the relief stations. Some of the unemployed were to demonstrate outside while others were to lay siege to the inside. Out of its experience the P.U.L. knew that such methods would prove futile and defeatist on a county-wide scale. We had tried them and knew that other tactics were more effective. The U. C., the U.C.L. and the Rank and File Veterans voted to ignore this experience. The P.U.L. decided not to participate in the demonstration.

And It Failed

The demonstration was called and was a failure. At only two stations was there any action worth while. There are 10 stations inside the city. At the South Side station about 200 workers turned out but no leader or speaker either from the U.C. or the U.C.L. showed up. At the time these South Side workers—most of whom belonged to the Unemployed Councils—were looking around the relief station waiting for the "speakers" to come, the two Unemployed Council leaders who had advocated laying siege to the relief stations, were busy resting in the headquarters of the U.C.L. over one mile away.

Forgot Rank and File

At a meeting of the Unemployed Council the next day, one leader made the statement that the demonstration was a failure because the P.U.L. had refused to participate.

After a five week's effort the P.U.L. discovered that the rank and file of the U.C.L. and the U.C. had never been informed what the united front was all about.

What Councils Wanted

There was plenty of evidence for the conclusion that the U. C. was only interested in putting Lieberman "on the spot" and to push their everlasting schemes for forcing merger on the other organizations.

The P.U.L. decided to discontinue participation in such tomfoolery and sent a committee to notify the next united front meeting. In this meeting the P.U.L. delegates were surprised to discover that rank and file members of the U.C.L. and U.C. also had come to the conclusion that it was not a genuine united front. Speaker after speaker from the U. C. charged that the rank and file did not know what was going on, that their leaders had given no information or directions to the membership and that they were finding it very difficult to get the members to demonstrate. Collins, the best militant in the U.C.L., charged that the U.C. leaders only showed up on Sunday at the committee meeting.

After these speeches E. R. McKinney delivered the decision of the P.U.L. When he had finished a U.C. member made a motion that a leaflet be distributed exposing him before the workers.

U. C. Hatchet Men

Then one of the U. C. hatchetmen took the floor and made a provocative speech in which McKinney was called a "scab" and likened to a "strike-breaker". This speaker contended that the P.U.L. was composed of "honest workers" and that they must be taken away from the P.U.L. leaders.

After this speech the Unemployed Council speakers who had severely criticized their leaders and called the united front a "fake" decided that not only were their leaders OK but that the failure of the united front could be laid solely at the door of the P.U.L. Not the "honest workers" in the P.U.L., of course, but their leaders.

The P.U.L. is going ahead with the work of organizing and fighting for relief. They are catching up on ground lost while the united front was being attempted. Three concentration points in the city have been established in which large and strong locals are being built.

By KARL LORE

Local 802 A.F.M.

One of the most encouraging features of the growth of trade unionism in the last year and a half has been the development of organization spirit among the white collar and professional groups. The existing unions in the field—the teachers, office workers, etc.—have made gains while in various cities throughout the country librarians, artists, auto salesmen, drug clerks and innumerable other similar groups have become part of the labor movement.

There are those who look to this development to cure many of the evils of racketeering and gangsterism that exist in the unions at present. The ladies and gentlemen of the white collar class, so the argument runs, won't put up with the things that the overall stiff is too dumb to kick against. They may be an influence in that direction. But glance for a moment at a few pages from the history of the American Federation of Musicians which tell of the fight of Local 802 in New York for the right of self government.

13 Years Hard Luck

The A. F. of M. and its president Joseph Weber have always been notorious in the labor movement for the hard boiled bureaucracy which they exercised over the membership. It was one of the first unions to go in for union reformation in a big way. Locals were summarily suspended and all their functions placed in the hands of a Weber appointee. In 1921 the rights of the 15,000 members of the New York local were thus taken away. One flare of revolt after the other has taken place in those thirteen years of dictator rule but it is only recently that the membership has begun to win back its rights. Early in 1934 the membership took up the fight again. The local was being milked of $250,000 a year in dues and fines without even a hint as to its use. Financial reports were never made. Thugs were used against them. Seven Weber appointees sat on the local government board of 13 while the membership was graciously permitted to elect the remaining minority. Edward Canavan, president of 802 was paid $10,000 a year for ruling a membership who had him crammed down their throats. Weber himself as the big chief, rakes in a salary of $25,000 per annum plus $3,000 for personal expenses, $5 for every day he spends out of New York and additional "general expenses".

A membership vote taken in the local last March approved by 3,728 to 127 the demand for self government and the establishment of such rights as other locals of the Musicians Union enjoy under the constitution. The practically unanimous opposition of his N. Y. membership had its effect even on the rhinoceros hide of Brother Weber. At the union convention held a few months later, a decision handed down by the National Executive Board granted self government in all particulars with one exception—Canavan was to remain local president for the next two years at his regular ten thousand a year salary.

But the fight was not over. Fifteen of the active oppositionists were tried by the governing board of the local, found guilty and fined $300 each. On their refusal to pay they were expelled from the organization.

Labor In Court

It is bad for labor progressives to fight their union officialdom in the courts. The cards are generally stacked against them by the alliances that so often exist between the district attorney and the union leadership. More important, however, is the need to settle the problems of labor within the movement and without recourse to the courts of capitalism. But there are times when it cannot be avoided. This was one of them and by legal injunction the ousted members were reinstated in the union ranks.

Administration Out

In the elections held in local 802 a few weeks ago the administration got a licking. A clean sweep eliminated every old official with the exception of Canavan who has his two years to go by special dispensation.

While New York thus makes progress, the situation of the national organization is not a happy one. Its total membership is 101,115 musicians, a loss of 45,215 within five years. A resolution introduced at the June convention calling for the reduction of initiation fees ($50 at present) in order to make it possible to carry on organization work was turned down cold.

To get back to my original point: the fight for democracy is just as sharp and severe within the unions of the white collar groups as in the organizations of coal miners and longshoremen. They are not immune from the evils which plague the movement generally.

Building Trades

Some weeks ago in this column I discussed the scrap in the building trades and the dilemma of the executive board of the American Federation of Labor in handling the serious split that has developed in the Building Trades Department. Latest news indicates that the differences are growing worse with no settlement in sight. The effort to get the books of the department away from the officials of the "out-law" group has not succeeded but the insurgents have been evicted from their offices in the A. F. of L. Building in Washington and have set up shop across the street. And the combatants on both sides, we regret to note, are not behaving with anything like the dignity and the restraint we have a right to expect from the responsible leaders of the very respectable American Federation of Labor.

Nevertheless, it is still very doubtful whether a final showdown will see either group withdrawing from the Federation fold. The consequences in the way of jurisdictional fights would be too horrible to even consider. It is significant that the fight has not yet been brought into the local and state building trades councils but is restricted for the present to the highest body. A complete breakdown of all negotiations between the warring groups would mean the dismemberment of every subordinate council in the country.

AGED MAN JAILED FOR SNARING RABBITS

ALLENTOWN, Pa. Dec. 31.—Following a four day (day and night) vigil by game wardens, John Hontz, age 76, resident of an improvised shack of pasteboard and scrap tin, was arrested when he came to remove a rabbit from a snare. Hontz, who is not on relief but makes a living the best he can doing odd jobs, was committed to the Lehigh County Jail on the charge of "illegal trapping".

Contract for Paterson ---- What a Contract!

Silk Workers Must Tear It Up and Fling It at the Bosses

By FELIX GIORDANO

After some six weeks of negotiations, between the Paterson District of the American Federation of Silk Workers and the Silk Manufacturers Association of Paterson, the terms of the proposed contract for the plain goods department have finally been made public.

Since the end of the national textile strike last September the silk workers of Paterson have been working under conditions which were becoming daily more intolerable. The bosses declared the old contract no longer in effect and proceeded without any action on the part of the union to chisel and slash wages, discriminate against militants, and all that goes with the dear old racket.

The union officialdom, meanwhile was busy... watching and waiting. This policy has now brought its ripe fruit: A CONTRACT. And what a contract!

"No More Strikes"

The Paterson News summarized its essence in a front page cartoon which portrayed the silk worker shaking hands with the boss under the title of "NO MORE STRIKES FOR TWO YEARS". On this point the contract is specific.

Wages are left for arbitration. "Grievances" are left to an "Impartial" Grievance Board. Ample provision is made for any and all decisions, and recommendations, and rulings by any and all government boards, "official or agency on the subject of MACHINE OR WORK-LOAD PER WORKER TOGETHER WITH CHANGES IN RATES OF PAY when the machine load is changed, whether the said decision, ruling or recommendation is made to apply generally to the industry at large or to individual cases". But not the question of strikes. Strikes are out!

Are the workers to have any say on the subject of work-load, or "changes" in pay? Not on your life! Not while this contract can keep them down! The bosses have appointed the National Textile Relations Board, the Work Assignments Board and so forth and so on for this very purpose. All that is left for the workers is to accept the contract that binds them hand and foot to accept all decisions of all bosses' boards for the next two years.

Perpetuates 40-Hour Week

The Paterson yellow press and the bosses can very well rub their hands and chuckle, for the workers will be bound for two years to the same and worse conditions in their industry. The contract perpetuates the 40-hour week; it binds them to accept as conclusive any decision on wages and work load that the bosses' boards may hand them.

There are 29 articles in the contract, each article a link in the chain that binds the workers and the union to the wheels of the government arbitration machinery. The only article without a joker in the contract is article 24 which reads: "This agreement is intended to comply in all respects with Section 7a of the National Recovery Act and with the interpretations and construction thereof."

You bet! Here is collective bargaining in all its glory. It's the bosses' bargain, with the bosses collecting the profits and the workers collectively getting it in the neck.

But, if they have any grievances, they can bring them to the Grievance Committee. The contract provides for everything. Even the bosses relatives, who shall be entitled to be employed at all times, whether they were previously employed or not. There are plenty of scab agencies to provide the bosses with all the second cousins, uncles and other relatives the bosses may need to add to their family tree. "In other respects, members of the union will be given preference in retaining their jobs." (1)

"Trial Period" Joker

To make assurance doubly sure, Art. 20 sets a trial period, averaging 4 weeks, in which time the worker is no regular employee and is not "governed by this agreement." In other words for a full month the bosses have ample opportunity to discover whether or not he can cut undercover, chisel and bamboozle to his heart's desire. And if he can't get his way as in the past he can fire, or hire a new hatch, or call upon the family tree.

Such is the contract which the official organ of the silk and dye workers hails as "THE END OF STRIFE". The December 21 issue of the Silk & Dye Worker, official organ of the A.P.S.W., has the gall to state that this contract is based upon the contract recently won by the dyers, in which the dyers gained not only a substantial wage increase but also the 36-hour week. The only comparison between the two contracts is that the worst features are in both, but none of the gains won by militant struggle are contained in the contract arrived at through "peaceful negotiations and collaboration". Worse yet, the leading article of this official organ boasts that "the union maintains its right to strike"

"The Right Strike"

This right to strike is very well taken care of with a few big IF's. Here they are:

IF the workers have a grievance or a dispute, they must submit it to the Grievance Committee. The Committee has five days in which to rule. IF the Committee rules that this grievance or dispute is a violation of the agreement, and IF it passes a decision which the bosses or the workers do not comply with, THEN the Relations Board has two days in which to rule that "the decision has not or is not being complied with". IF and WHEN the Relations Board does so rule, THEN "and thereafter the LOCKOUT or strike may be resorted to for purposes of discipline in the mill in question."

There is this boasted "right to strike", such as it actually is in the contract.

To be sure, this agreement can be modified if notice in writing is served in 30 days. But one thing cannot be modified, and it is exactly the "right to strike". "Paragraph 17 of this agreement may not... be modified or altered in any respect."

There are no two ways open for the silk workers of Paterson, as regards the proposed contract: tear it up and fling it in the faces of the bosses. The militant traditions of Paterson, the long years of struggle of the silk workers, the splendid record of the recent dyers' strike have been flouted by the very proposal of such a contract. The shameful contract must be rejected.

Richberg Smokes Peace Pipe As He Exonerates the Poor

WASHINGTON. — Donald R. Richberg was furious when he learned that General Hugh S. Johnson, retired, had written a series of articles in which he, Richberg himself, was "exposed". Lolling in his easy-chair, his bald forehead glistening, his broad nose twitching, his heavy underlip between his teeth, lawyer Richberg wrote a letter threatening "legal action"

Said the General, "The ants of conscience are crawling in Richberg's pants!"

Thanks to friends, the day has been saved. Christmas found the NRA moguls, past and present, smoking the pipe of peace, and there will be no "exposures". Good old Santa Claus.

Richberg has undergone a strange liberal sea-change since coming to Washington.

When President Roosevelt elevated him from a big Chicago labor lawyer to Position Number 1 in the Washington regime, liberals hailed him as a Godsend, a wonderful man, in fact a liberal. But when the Chamber of Commerce people clapped hands and took him in tow the liberals slunk away, looking sheepish.

First National League Convention Stormy Test of 'American Approach'

This is the second of a series of articles on the history of the National Unemployed League.

By LOUIS BREIER

The convention that founded the National Unemployed League is worth considering in some detail not only because its results were far-reaching and lasting, but also because its stormy and colorful sessions revealed the dangers threatening the movement then, as they do now. Fascism, totalitarianism, jingoism and a horde of crack-pot political schemes, any one of which was sufficient to wreck the convention and the movement itself, combined into a desperate onslaught against the building of a militant, nation-wide organization of the unemployed.

Backgrounds

The beginnings of the widely discussed and much more widely slandered "American Approach" are probably to be found in the C.P.A. conception of unemployed activity. It represented a definite and realistic manner of directing and participating in the work of the leagues, of carrying on the day by day struggles, of raising the political level of the workers and of building a solid and progressive basis for the ultimate conflict—against unemployment and all other problems confronting the working masses. It was this which distinguished C.P.A. practice and insured the steady growth of the Leagues.

How Others Work

Some mention has already been made of the methods favored by the Communist and Socialist parties. In their direction of the Unemployed Councils the C. P. made few concessions to the regular "party line." Mechanical control of the organizations and wholesale indoctrination of the members while they "stick" is characteristic

PERKINS' DAUGHTER ENTERS SOCIETY

Miss Susanna Wilson made her debut to society the other day, at the Hotel Pierre, one of New York's swankiest hotels, where thousands of dollars are spent to launch a girl into society.

What of it? Only this: Susanna Wilson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Caldwell Wilson. And Mrs. Paul Caldwell Wilson is Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, who feels so sorry for the workers, in public.

The Party Fund

THE campaign for the Party Fund is now under way. Returns are beginning to come in though not yet as fast or as numerous as they should. Reports from the branches are still slow, but indications are that the membership is getting behind this drive wholeheartedly. Los Angeles branch writes "We are sure the Fund will go over big here." A definite pledge of $26 was made and more to come from absent members. Allentown members pledged $88. Boston has already met more than half of its quota. The New York District which received a quota of $1,500 is hard at work meeting it and Philadelphia has pledged $75 thus far.

THE CHALLENGE

As reported in the last issue of the New Militant, Mrs. M. of New York pledged to contribute $200 for every $200 we collect from other friends. R. S. was the first to send a $200 check which was promptly met by Mrs. M. Today R. S. sent another $100.

The tactics of the Socialists differ from those of the Communist Party only by the addition of their usual smugness and the myth of their superior regard for "Democracy." Because of this, mechanical control as practiced by the S. P. exceeds anything that even Amter or Benjamin ever hoped to get away with.

Appearing before the executive committee of the NUL last August to present the case for a "new national organization" David Lasser, president of the Socialist-controlled Workers Unemployed Union, stated frankly that he does not believe in rank and file conventions even for the purpose of resolving so important a problem as the formation of a new national unemployed organization, but prefers conferences of the top leadership because "they get more work done with less fuss."

The "American Approach"

Although their tactics placed them in the position of an artist attempting to portray the moon with a pipe, the C. P. conception of the purpose of work among the unemployed on the part of a revolutionary party was always sound. It is the business of the class-conscious, revolutionary elements in these organizations to make them militant, effective instruments for struggle against all forms of immediate repression, and to turn the faces of the unemployed toward the larger battle. This was always the philosophy underlying the work of the C.P.A.

But philosophy as such never meant anything to the C.P.A. Philosophy had to be confirmed in action and there had to be mass organizations before there could be any action.

In a series of articles written for Labor Age in 1931 Louis Budenz, who popularized the term "American Approach," laid down the program for unemployed organization. Leagues, he said, must be mass organizations in the fullest sense of the term. C.P.A. elements in these organizations must not repeat the doctrinaire and factional mistakes of the C.P.—and the S.P. They were to work to increase the effectiveness of the Leagues in their daily battles for immediate demands and, on the strength of their superior leadership and political realism, raise the political level of the masses, reveal the class-struggle, and lay a firm basis for their participation in the coming struggle for a workers' world. During the first national convention of the Leagues, when Fascist elements seemed to have gained complete control and it was necessary to pronounce the name of Marx in very soft tones and with a great deal of head pivoting, several of the leaders of the Unemployed Councils who were present blamed the "American Approach" for it. The C.P.A., they said, had substituted flag-waving for Marxism and those roaring patriots in the convention were only a natural consequence of social-fascism.

But these derisives of the true faith were wide of the mark. It was not the "American Approach" that was at fault; it was America. As we have shown, the unemployed leagues were all-inclusive. The only restrictions on membership were against old party politicians and bosses of any category. These restrictions, however, could not exclude stool pigeons, provocateurs,

A Farewell to Bureaucracy

By JOSEPH ZACK

In the previous article I spoke about the system of falsification and trickery used by the Stalin faction in the ideological struggle against the Opposition in the Russian Communist Party. This system naturally expressed itself also in the field of party organization. The false line could be put through only by crushing out party democracy and setting up the uncontrolled rule of a bureaucratic clique. This was done in the Russian party, and then the completed system was mechanically imposed on all the parties of the Communist International.

We in the American movement had to pay for the defeat of Leninist principles and methods in the Russian party. The degeneration of the American C. P. can never be understood until it is traced to this source. The internal regime of the C. P. in this country is only an expression of the Stalinist system which has become universal in the C. I.

Suppressing the Opposition

They began in Russia by suppressing the platform of the Opposition instead of abiding by party statutes and allowing its publication as a document for discussion. Next, they expelled the 14 members of the minority to the Central Committee before the party congress! Meanwhile all their followers were expelled from the party.

The result was that when the party congress finally convened it was a mere assemblage of Stalin's caucus. Later on, all those adhering to the Opposition were arrested and exiled to Siberia or imprisoned. Thus the Opposition was "disposed of." Thereafter anyone voicing its ideas was dealt with as a "counter-revolutionist," picked up at night by the G.P.U. and shipped somewhere—sometimes, as in the case of Blumkin, even executed. Now it appears this sort of thing is to be carried out on a wholesale scale.

This is the background of the present terror regime in the Soviet party and the parties in capitalist countries, including the U. S. This regime constitutes a fundamental departure from Lenin's conception of the party and its functions; it is a basically new system that has nothing to do with Leninism. It is of course foolish to think, and I was such a fool, that by complaining about it or appealing against one or another bad spot or ulcer in this system to the E.C.C.I., a sub-committee of Stalin, any remedy can be obtained.

The Stalin Regime

The party regime introduced by Stalin throughout the Communist International is as follows:

1. Centralism, minus inner democracy.
2. Hierarchical method of selecting the leading personnel from the top down.
The method of putting this across with a semblance of "democracy" and greasing the workings of it is: a) To permit discussion of the execution of the general line set from the top; b) a system of "ratification" from below to confirm the selection from the top.
Since those who might have any principled objection to this system as a whole are either eliminated or drop out of the movement beforehand, there is very little or no trouble in getting things "ratified" or "approved" in that form.

The theory to justify the whole system and make it appealing is: (1) Solid iron Bolshevik unity of our party; (2) we are a party that thinks and acts alike; (3) only a monolithic party can be mobile, ready to act at a moment's notice, etc.

As good as this sounds, it is all false, because the democratic processes essential to arrive at such results are eliminated. Once the basic principal line of a revolutionary party—dictatorship of the proletariat, overthrow of capitalism versus social democratic peaceful, gradual transformation of capitalism into socialism—is set, many opinions of major importance may arise from time to time as to how to achieve it. There cannot be such a thing as "people that think alike" on spies, fascist agents, etc. They came in and did their work among the members until they were exposed or until the growing political consciousness of members themselves made them impervious to this poison.

It was the latter condition for which the C.P.A. worked. In the leagues, as in the general American scene, the effectiveness of a revolutionary organization is based on its ability to win the confidence and leadership of the masses as against the misleadership of the demagogues and fascists. The C.P.A. was not afraid to face this fact. It did not want another radical tea club. It wanted a mass organization. And it was willing to stake everything on the correctness of its tactics and its ability to lead the workers. The national convention was the test, not only of the courage and integrity of the C.P.A. but also on a minor scale of the ability and promise of the new party which has emerged from the combined experiences of the C.P.A. and the Communist League.

Next week we will see what happened at the first national convention of the Leagues.

Naval Race Forebodes War of the Pacific

By JACK WEBER

The first international imperialist struggle in the building of naval armaments has come to its predestined end. Theoretically it will remain in force till 1936; practically the powers are already at work to start off anew in the race for capitalist domination of the world. Lasting for a decade, the Washington Naval Pact, affording a breathing spell to the nations just emerged from war into a critical economic and political period that necessitated the most far-reaching changes and adjustments among the imperialist robber nations. In the war Europe, victors and vanquished alike, had lost, America had won. Germany was badly shaken and her world position so much weakened that she could no longer demand and enforce by might of arms complete supremacy on the seas. America had captured the world's trade, had become a creditor nation on a par with the foremost foreign investor, England. This victory, American capitalism meant not only to retain but to extend at the expense of all other capitalist rivals until it would command that imperialist hegemony of the world that it felt essential to give full and proper play to its advanced technique. To signalize its newly gained strength, America started afresh, on the very eve of the peace conference, a naval plan that "stunned the world!"

The Imperialist Naval Race

It was the "peace" President Wilson, who proposed the 1916 naval plan that was to give America the largest fleet in the world. He proposed to construct in three years the most powerful dreadnoughts afloat, that would render obsolete all the navies in the world. This program was interrupted by the entrance of the U. S. into the war but at its conclusion, just before Wilson sailed for Paris, he said to Congress: "I take it for granted that the Congress will carry out the naval program which was undertaken before we entered the war."

In the new 1919 program it was then proposed that in three years America should build sixteen capital ships, besides a large number of cruisers and destroyers. Although England then possessed a bigger navy than all the rest of the world combined, this ambitious program would have placed the U. S. in first place on account of the size of post-Jutland super-dreadnoughts to be built, their weight of armor and guns. The armament race was on!

The new war was to be a decisive battle for supremacy in the Pacific, a conflict for the complete control of the only market still undivided among the imperialist free-booters—China. Primarily this meant a ruthless struggle between America and Japan. Hence Japanese imperialism, despite its relative poverty in money and resources, was forced as a matter of its national capitalist life to respond by starting the construction of even bigger ships with heavier armament and guns than those proposed by America. Nor was England to be outdone, for she too began the laying down of vessels to be the largest in the world.

How The Middle Class Led "Freed" Negroes After Civil War "The Republican Party Is the Ship and All Else Is the Sea," Leader Told Them

This is the second of a series of articles on Negro Labor in the United States.

By SIMON WILLIAMSON

It was but natural that the Negro middle class should become the first spokesman and leader of the newly "freed" Negroes during the early post-Civil War period. It represented whatever culture and influence the race then possessed. It was cognizant of this fact and was not long in taking advantage of its new opportunity.

Even during the antebellum days this middle class was composed of servants and freedmen. The freedmen had either bought their freedom or won it through some act of benevolence to their masters and in some instances they were the proud owners of Negro slaves. The servants and this class were artisans who had been given long periods of apprenticeship under master craftsmen. They were the craftsmen of their masters. This class represented, then, the most militant spirits of the Negro slaves, and they despised the poor whites since many of the latter had been employed as overseers and, moreover, it was they who were used to catch runaway slaves. The white master class, even then, was shrewd enough to play one against the other.

Frederick Douglass

Shortly after the emancipation of the American Negroes from chattel slavery Frederick Douglass, the most outstanding Negro in the abolitionist movement and the most towering figure that black America has yet produced—the last of his type that the Negro bourgeoisie will ever produce—discovered that the white ruling class kept both white and black in subjection by playing one against the other. In an interview, heading a committee of Negroes, with president Andrew Johnson, who arrogated to himself the leadership of the poor whites, seeking equal citizenship for the blacks, he is recorded as having said to Johnson:

"The hostility between whites and blacks is easily explained. It has its root and sap in the relation of slavery and was incited on both sides by the cunning slave masters. Those masters secured their ascendancy over the poor whites and the blacks by putting enmity between them."

"They divided both and conquered each," continued Douglass. "There was no earthly reason why the blacks should not hate and dread the poor whites when in a state of slavery. It was from this class that their masters recruited their slave catchers, slave drivers and overseers."

Although no one knew better than Douglass that whites and blacks were played against each other by the opulent whites, he joined the latter and proclaimed upon the platform, "The Republican Party is the ship and all else is the sea." Other lights of the Negro middle class of that period followed the example shown by Frederick Douglass and entered politics on the side of the exploiting class for self gain. They, like the white bourgeoisie, only on a smaller scale, are the enemies and exploiters of black labor. They would exploit white labor if permitted by their white capitalist ally.

The delegation of Negroes that appeared at the convention of the National Labor union in 1869 had as its most able Negro representatives John M. Langston, lawyer and later congressman from Virginia, and P. B. S. Pinchback, lieutenant-governor of Louisiana. Both men were members of the Republican Party, which the union considered as a land monopoly, and were not in the least concerned about the precarious conditions of Negro workers.

Next week we shall deal with the Knights of labor and the Negro workers.

Eyes on Sacramento

CALIFORNIA, which has given the world such a clear and striking picture of capitalist class justice in the case of Mooney and Billings, is again striving for leadership in the new campaign against workers' organizations and workers' rights. The trial of the 18 workers on the charge of "Criminal Syndicalism," now in process at Sacramento, involves fundamental issues of great concern to all sections of the labor movement. With the charge of "criminal syndicalism" as a club the overlords of California are undertaking to penalize those who have taken active part in the organization of workers. At the same time they aim to intimidate others from taking the same course. A victory of the prosecution in this case would stimulate the search for more victims. It is high time for the workers throughout the country to awaken to the significance of the Sacramento trial and come to the aid of the defendants. Self preservation, as well as the spirit of labor solidarity which ought to be an attribute of every enlightened worker, calls for this action.

In the Sacramento trial the effort is being made to revive the system of bounding and persecuting the militant workers which characterized the highly praised American "democracy" in the war and post-war periods. The chief instrument then, and now again, is the notorious "criminal syndicalism" law. Such laws, directly contravening the civil rights supposedly guaranteed by the U. S. constitution, were passed by most of the States, especially those which had been the scene of industrial conflicts. The purpose was to curb "radicalism," which was broadly interpreted to mean any kind of aggressive and militant struggle for the rights and material interests of the workers.

The victims ran into the hundreds. In California alone close to a hundred prisoners, members of the I.W.O., were confined in prison after conviction of "criminal syndicalism." The infamous statute has lain dormant, with exceptions here and there, for about ten years. The attempt to revive it now is a stern warning to all the advanced workers of the crucial importance of united counter-action. The focal point for such a movement at the present time is the Sacramento trial.

As is usually the case with all manifestations of the system that is founded on deceit, the labor persecution inaugurated at Sacramento under the "criminal syndicalism" law is disguised and concealed behind the mask of the "Red Scare." The aim of the holy prosecutors, they say, is to defend civilization and the American home and to prevent the nationalization of women by the red barbarians. What they really mean is—they want to discourage the idea of workers organizing unions and fighting for a decent standard of living and then later, perhaps, getting bigger ideas in their heads.

The defendants at Sacramento were the organizers and leaders of the Agricultural and Canery Workers Union, an organization that led some memorable battles of the most terribly exploited sections of the California working class. This fact speaks volumes as to the real motive behind the prosecution. It is also a clear indication to all workers who stand for unionism, to say nothing of those who go farther in their aspirations and ideals, as to what their duty is in regard to Sacramento.

The Sacramento case cries aloud for united action. A national campaign is needed to put the case on the map before the trial is finished and the defendants are quietly shuffled off to San Quentin for long terms. Real efforts are required to secure the release of the prisoners on bail so that they can be useful in the agitation and publicity work. Agitation is needed—not a whisper but a mighty working class shout that will be heard in the court room at Sacramento. Every organization and every individual in the advanced labor movement ought to feel morally bound to lend aid to such a defense movement, and to do it now without further delay.

epoch of mass struggles and conflicts which will put all previous labor revolts in the shade. The masters of America, especially during the past year, have shown that they will yield absolutely nothing without a bitter struggle. The workers on their part have shown in the same time that they do not shrink from conflict. The exploiters will seek to victimize the leaders and active spirits as they have always done.

We must learn at the beginning to stand together in the face of such attacks. We need to establish the principle at the very start that an injury to one is the concern of all. This grand old motto of the Knights of Labor ought to be inscribed on the banner of the rising labor movement. Its application in labor defense cases should be automatic. We need to establish the principle, and carry it out in practice, that an attack on one organization of workers will promptly call the others to its aid, regardless of the differences between them. Against the attacks of the class enemy we must all stand united.

The Workers Party stands for this policy in regard to Sacramento. The issue is concretized on this case at the present moment. A practical agreement for a united campaign in behalf of the Sacramento defendants right now is worth a ton of abstract theses on the "united front." The Sacramento case is a test.

Hope for the Steel Workers

RECENTLY the attempt of the top officials of the A. F. of L. and the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, the steel barons and the Roosevelt administration to work out a truce for the steel industry broke down. The trade union officials promptly predicted that there would probably be a battle—"in the courts." Arguing about Section 7a in the courts or licking the boots of congressmen and senators for a revision of the NRA is the only kind of fighting these supposed leaders of the working class know.

From Pittsburgh comes the announcement that some of the younger members of the A. A. are calling a national convention of "rank and file" the first week in February to discuss "ways and means" of "forcing union recognition from the steel companies." That suggests the possibility of fighting it out on the picket lines and is much better.

However, some of the same men backing this insurgent movement, now talked mighty big to Hugh Johnson and even to Roosevelt himself last spring and then permitted Bill Green and Mike Tighe to out-manuever them and prevent a steel strike. What is going to happen this time? The personality of this leader or that is not a sound foundation for a movement of steel workers. A fake Communist party "united front" or "rank and file" movement even if dressed up very prettily is not a sound basis for a movement of the steel workers.

The progressive, fighting, genuine rank and file elements among the steel workers must get together regardless of personalities or political differences on the basis of a program and loyal determination to put the program into action. The first and chief plank in that program will be: Fight out the battle for union recognition in the steel industry! Fight it out now! Fight it out on the picket line!

Churchified Fascists

"A ROSE by any other name would smell as sweet." Conversely, a stink bomb by any other name would smell as ill. We make this observation apropos of what looks more and more like a world-wide movement to build a churchified Fascism—a Fascist regime which meets the approval of the Roman Catholic Church.

Several weeks ago a conference was held in Europe of Fascist organizations from various countries. It was announced, however, that Hitler's representatives were excluded. They did not belong in good Fascist company. Further examination of the participants indicated that they came from those countries where Fascism and the Roman Catholic Church had come to an understanding.

More recently the Pope announced that the Roman Catholic Church would observe "strict neutrality" in the Saar where a popular vote as to whether the region is to go back to Germany or remain under the supervision of the League of Nations takes place on January 13. The other day, however, all the leading Bishops in the Saar read statements from their pulpits, doubtless with the knowledge and approval of the Pope, urging their congregations to vote for returning to Germany. Apparently the Church and Adolf had also come to an understanding.

In the United States Father Coughlin is busily forming his mysteriously financed organization for social justice!

Whatever disguise it may wear and by whomever it may be blessed, the masses will rally for an irreconcilable fight against Fascism which smashes the unions, destroys all the democratic rights of the workers and enslaves them to black reaction.

ROOSEVELT and CONGRESS

Sections from an article by John West to appear in the January issue of the New Internationalist

What, then, may be expected from the new Congress? First, the relation of Roosevelt to his new Congress is almost the reverse of his relation to his first Congress. Then, at the beginning of his Administration, by a sweeping popular overthrow, he had been placed in power on the crest of rising mass sentiment. He was the Great Leader whose duty it was to guide a timid Congress into the untrodden country of the New Deal—New at least in the real sense of being a new step in the advance of United States capitalism to its final collapse.

Now, however, Roosevelt is two years removed from direct contact with mass sentiment. Moreover, his unfulfilled promises are drifting back home to roost—in the end, citizens take jobs, security, protection seriously. It is the members of Congress who, just assembling from the tribulations of November's elections, reflect more directly the mass sentiment. They come from localities demanding additional public works expenditures, more relief, bonus payments, changed labor legislation, mortgage moratoriums, inflation, or what not.

Therefore Roosevelt, from having played the Great Leader, must now play the Great Brake; he must calm the wilder members of Congress, shunt aside and compromise "radical" demands, and in general make sure that no accidentally passed "left" legislation hinder the fundamental "right" direction. His task is difficult, for he must do this all the while appearing in the official publicity as the champion of the common man against the Tories.

Second, certain industrial and banking corporations have achieved a temporary relative stability during Roosevelt's first two years, with a reasonable level of profits rolling in. These are consequently anxious to go back to the pre-1929 days, and to take their chances in rugged competition unconfused by the complex intricacies of the New Deal. Their wishes cannot be granted. The pre-1929 days have gone not to return. Individual capitalists have got to be taught that they must occasionally give up a few sweetmeats as individuals to preserve the basic interests of their class as a whole, and its position. And the state—in the days of monopoly capitalism most directly representative of the class as a whole—will be their teacher.

However, their reactionary opposition is a useful weapon for Roosevelt both against difficult groups in Congress, and to build up favorable popular sentiment. As against them, Roosevelt can be very left indeed, and can point to them as the bogeyman who will gobble up Congress and the masses if they don't toe the line.

In general, then, we may be sure that, while the underlying socio-economic drift continues toward a right solidification, the legislation actually passed by the new Congress will be on no basic question unambiguously one thing or the other. It cannot be openly reactionary without antagonizing the public in a manner for which Roosevelt is not prepared; it cannot be in reality left without injuring seriously the position of the bourgeoisie, which position demands now the steady movement to the right.

Mass Action Policy Of National League

By ARNOLD JOHNSON
Secretary of National Unemployed League

Facing the sixth winter of mass suffering, the unemployed of this country are looking with suspicion and scepticism at Washington today. The national Congress opens and will very likely try to feed the unemployed on words and promises. It may even pass some fake unemployment insurance bill which will cut wages, divide workers and starve the unemployed, then go home feeling the unemployed are taken care of.

Another assemblage at Washington which deserves only suspicion from the unemployed is the so-called Congress for Unemployment and Social Insurance which is in reality a masquerade preliminary to the second annual convention of the discredited Unemployment Councils of the Communist Party.

Used as Bait

Using the sentiment of the unemployed for the Lundeen Bill as a bait to get delegates to attend the convention of the National Unemployment Councils, the Communist Party and Unemployment Council leaders have again demonstrated their shady methods and false tactics for building an unemployed organization.

This time, they have even gone further than usual. They got a lot of individuals to act as "sponsors" of the Unemployment Insurance Congress. These individuals represent nobody but themselves and are not responsible to the unemployed. The C. P. and Unemployment Councils are responsible for this tactics and demonstrate that they are kidding the unemployed as well as the list of individuals. Furthermore, they have degraded the fight of the unemployed to the parliamentary sphere. They have also divided the demands of the unemployed and thereby the ranks of the unemployed and workers by making only one demand—the Lundeen Bill—the single issue.

The National Unemployed League is not attending the Washington convention of the Unemployed Councils disguised as a congress on unemployment insurance. We stand on a program of demands worked out by our state and national conventions and fight for them by the method of mass action.

Unemployment insurance at the expense of capitalist profits has been and will continue to be a demand in our demonstrations. At the same time we fight for adequate cash relief now for all of the unemployed.

We fight for a program of real jobs at real wages. We demand the universal 30-hour week in industry with no reduction in pay, from this point of view—as a means of creating more jobs. We demand a complete program of public works with 30 hours and $30 minimum per week. A $5,000,000,000 loan to the Soviet Union so it can purchase goods manufactured in this country will make jobs in industry.

A real struggle for the unemployed must put these demands in the foreground.

Need Organization
Moreover, a real program of the unemployed needs a real organization. That organization cannot come out of the National Unemployment Council convention or its curtail-raiser, the so-called congress sponsored by individuals. The attempt to substitute such carnivals for bona fide organizations of the unemployed masses can only injure the movement, insofar as it has any effect at all.

Masquerade conferences, which sidetrack the movement to the narrow channel of parliamentarism, cannot advance the real movement of the unemployed. The struggle of the unemployed requires mass organization. It must be organized on the sound basis of a rounded program and the method of mass action. This is the policy of the National Unemployed League.

Huey Long Is Tammany Rising in the South

The Chicago Federation of Labor has endorsed Huey Long for president.

Huey Long, despite the tendency to consider him a joke, has a dictatorship in Louisiana, has gained some national influence, and has already captured important political posts outside his state.

In order to understand Huey it is necessary to know something about his native state, and something about his personal history.

Little Industry

Louisiana is not an industrial state. There is only one city of any size, New Orleans, with 450,000. Shreveport is next with 80,000, and Baton Rouge, the capitol, is third with only 30,000. Altogether there are only eight cities of more than fourteen thousand. Thus the urban population is about seven hundred thousand, while the total population of the state is two million two hundred thousand.

Even in the cities there is little large scale industry. New Orleans is primarily a commercial port. In the north there is some oil industry, and scattered through the state are various sugar and cotton mills and textile plants. The predominant classes outside the cities are the fishermen of the South, mostly of French stock, the small farmers, and the shopkeepers.

A Venture in Oil

Huey Long was born in the town of Winnfield, in the north, of poor parents. He put himself through school by traveling the country districts as a salesman of knock-knives. It was this experience that later enabled him to appeal so effectively to the rural vote.

He went to Law School at Tulane, failed to get a degree, but was admitted to the Louisiana Bar. His first political post was on the board of the Public Service Commission. It was there that he attracted attention by conducting a fight against the Standard Oil Co. Huey owned an interest in several wild-cat oil wells. When oil was struck he believed himself on the way to wealth. The Standard Oil Co., however, had a monopoly of the pipe lines, and proceeded to squeeze Long's independent enterprise. Huey put up a fight; he used his post on the Public Service Commission to break the monopoly. Standard Oil managed to have an impeachment proceeding started against him in 1921. The impeachment was later dropped, and Huey gained his point.

Whether he made money on this venture is not known, although he is reputed worth well over a million today. However, his war against the large Standard Corporation did give him material for a political campaign among the farmers and the petty bourgeoisie. He started out as champion of the "people" against the wiles of trustified business and monopoly.

Captured Rural Vote

He ran for governor in 1924 and polled 70,000 votes in the Democratic primaries. (The Democratic primary is the real election in Louisiana, as a Republican has no more chance in the Deep South than the man on the moon.) Huey's vote came, as it still comes, largely from the rural districts. And in 1928 when his opponents split and threw away their majority, this same rural vote made Long governor, the first man to break the machine in decades.

His election in 1928 marked the real beginning of his career. He was only thirty-five years old. Up to that time he had been a backwoods Jackson democrat, who defended the "tenant farmers, small storekeepers, filling station owners and Bayou fishermen." In 1928 he promised the voters nothing more than free textbooks, better roads, and lower power rates.

From 1928 his rise was rapid until this year he launched his nation-wide Share the Wealth Clubs, made his plans on the presidency, was endorsed by such a staid organization as the Chicago Federation of Labor, and promised to "Make every man a king" on one thousand dollars a year.

National Rank Around.
According to many noted Tories in banking and industrial circles the measures taken by Roosevelt and his Congress have been the very essence of Bolshevism. Now however, they are rubbing their hands with satisfaction. Roosevelt, they say, is moving to the right.

If what they mean is that left implies more promises and right fewer promises there is probably little truth in what they say. For this is no time for Roosevelt to cease his promises. Especially when Virgil Jordan, economist for the National Industrial Conference Board declares to a gathering of business men that "We are little, if any, nearer recovery than we were two years ago..."

The speeches of Roosevelt and the willingness of his last Congress have been a bone in the throat of the working class and a boon in the pockets of the plutocrats. The Congress soon to open bodes nothing better and probably much worse. The big planks in the new "new deal" program are widely advertised as a comprehensive "Social Security" program. But the recent social security conference was hardly under way when it received a warning from Roosevelt that he would tolerate no "wild" ideas. The "bright" feathers in this plan are loans to home owners, public works and unemployment. Gems of deception.

It is sufficient merely to review the previous history of this plan to understand who profits by Roosevelt's altruism. Of the $200,000,000 expended by the Home Owners Loan Corporation more than 80 percent has gone to banks, insurance companies and realty agencies. The ballyhoo about clearing out slums and building homes for the poor has become in reality a building program for people with means. The poor cannot afford the rents demanded by government housing.

Public Works

All this is intimately associated with the famous public works program which it is reputed Roosevelt, with the certain consent of his Congress plans to extend. The past speaks eloquently on this matter. Of the $2,711,000,000 in PWA allotments almost two hundred million dollars went in subsidies to railroad companies. Large dips in this pork barrel were taken by the army, the navy and the air force. Relatively few men were given jobs through this method. Some time ago the Nation reported that only a few thousand men were employed on such an enormous project as the N. Y. Triborough Bridge which called for millions in expenditure. The one way public works can start employment even on a modest scale is by entering into competition with private industry. And the very idea of such a thing is sacrilege to Roosevelt and company.

The last and probably most important measure, which seems assured of adoption in the new Congress is some form of unemployment insurance. Relief has proved to be very costly. Bankers and manufacturers have been howling for as speedy an end of it as possible.

But since unemployment shows no real signs of decreasing and since a permanent jobless army reaching well over the seven million figure is here to stay, some permanent and less expensive method of keeping Potters Field from filling up too quickly must be found. Roosevelt no doubt has a solution in an unemployment insurance scheme where the largest part of the receipts will come from the miserably paid workers and where the unemployed will receive this insurance for a few weeks of the year on the condition that they accept any sort of job, at any wages offered, even a strike-breaking job.

Congress opens with the New Year prepared to repeat its services of the last year—not for labor, which it can never serve—but for capital which it must serve. Its legislation will remain two-sided—new deal and raw deal, with the workers on the short end of the stick.

of production for use and not for profit; that will solve the problem. The workers must have control."

Outstanding testimony as to the conditions of workers in the local plants of the Chevrolet Corp. and the Electric Auto-Lite Co. was given by Jim Kolland, and executive member of the union and of the Lucas County Unemployed League. Sam Pollock of the Workers Party and the Unemployed League was requested by the new progressive union leaders to speak before the committee in the name of the union, which he did.

Willis-Overland Co.

Preis introduced his testimony by an exposure of the operations of the Willis-Overland Co. He pointed out that in 1928 this company employed 25,000 workers. Today it has about 1,000. Most of these workers had been imported from distant sections of the country. After three months of speed-up they were fired. Today, Toledo has 23,000 families on the relief roll, one third of the population, and it was the breakdown of the Willis-Overland Co. which largely contributed to this, Preis said.

Remove Modern Machinery

Although the newspapers have been ballyhooing the reopening of large-scale production in the Willis-Overland plant, Preis told the committee that the plant has dismantled its modern machinery.

"The modern machinery has been stripped from the production buildings and sold. The Willis-Overland plant will never operate again," Preis declared. "The 24,000 people who lost their jobs will remain unemployed, with but few exceptions. And not merely unemployed, but disemployed. It is not folly, but cruelty, to consider the stabilization of the automobile industry without also considering how to give these workers their jobs again. And that is a futile task under the profit system."

Zack Meeting Draws Crowd

Two or three hundred people were turned away at the door. Victoria Hall at Irving Plaza was packed and people were standing against the walls. The occasion was the speech of Joseph Zack on the reasons why he quit the Communist Party after a membership of 15 years and joined the Workers Party. The revolutionary workers stormed the hall to hear what Zack had to say. And they heard plenty.

The speaker painted a devastating picture of the internal life of the Communist Party and, point by point, exploded the whole policy of Stalinism and contrasted it with the Marxist position of the Workers Party. For two hours the audience listened with the closest attention, and at the conclusion of his speech a storm of applause registered agreement with his remarks.

Last Sunday night's meeting was another of the successful chain of meetings which are establishing the party as the concentration point of the revolutionary workers in New York. In response to demands of many comrades the district organization is planning a series of Zack meetings in the different boroughs of greater New York and a national tour is being mapped out by the national office.

revival despite the sabotage of its reactionary officials. The steel workers genuinely hated the company union and they still do. New progressive elements came forward in the union but they could not stand up against the reactionary barrage. However, an opportunity does not wait forever.

It is reported that the progressives are planning a rank and file convention to be held in Pittsburgh the first week of February to consider "ways and means of forcing union recognition from the steel companies." The call was issued at a meeting of 500 representatives from ten districts of the union at which speakers said that "strike is our only weapon left now." Of course, this convention has already been declared outlawed by the Tighe administration.

Unquestionably the rank and file discontent with the reactionary union administration is deep seated and its demand for action widespread. Its real need is progressive leadership that will stand up and make the fight; but to provide that the progressives themselves need organization and a clear cut policy of action. In this respect the steel workers union is no exception from many others and this is only one more reason for the necessity and speedy realization of a new national progressive movement in the trade unions.

Roosevelt's Speech Goes On Forever

Has Made It Many Times and Conditions Go from Bad to Worse

By DAN DIAMAT

The President's speech to Congress was his Christmas gift to the American workers. Like a good many Christmas gifts the President feels that he has done his duty for the year, and can afford to forget the workers until the next Christmas comes around.

"We assert," he said, "that the ambition to attain proper security, a reasonable leisure, and a decent living is an ambition to be preferred to great wealth and power."

Like most politicians, it finally appears, President Roosevelt has exactly one speech to make; he made it at his inauguration, he made it over the radio, he made it last Christmas, he repeated it through 1934, and now he takes it out of the closet, dusts it off, and makes it for 1935.

From Bad to Worse
The depression goes from bad to worse. Unemployment increases, wages fall, the cost of living increases, unionism staggers, while great fortunes grow. Capitalism develops along its ruthless course. But one thing remains true and firm—no matter how awful the chaos, President Roosevelt goes on, smiling complacently, and delivering that speech, the same soft soap he has been handing out for two years.

"The ambition to obtain proper security" remains no more than an ambition. The government does the absolute minimum by providing relief. With the New Year the President, doubtless wishing to increase security, shifts some 16,000,000 from home to work relief "at low wages," and condemns some 4,000,000 more to the "security" of state and private charity.

That Reasonable Leisure
"A reasonable leisure" encompasses the same 16,000,000 unemployed on forced leisure, and the other thirty-five million wage earners who are driven half insane by stretchouts, overtime, and inefficiency methods. Ask the textile workers running extra looms, the steel workers on double shifts, or the auto workers on the assembly line, about "reasonable leisure."

A decent living, says the President, is a noble ambition. During the last year, while the "living" of corporations increased a very decent amount, the wages of workers increased a measly few per cent. (At that, not a real increase for the workers, when the rise in prices, which enabled the corporations to make their profit, is discounted against wages.)

Better Than Wealth
These ambitions, says the President, are to be preferred to "great wealth and great power."

The President's preference finds expression in the 26 new million dollar a year incomes under the New Deal, and in the increasing power of corporations, which have been unified and strengthened in NRA associations until they become monopolies.

"There is no ground," says our great orator, "for apprehension that our relations with any nation will be otherwise than peaceful."

Three days later, on January 7, we read in the World Telegram: "President Roosevelt today presented to Congress one of the largest peace time national defense budget estimates in history, about one billion dollars. Estimates for next year (1935) represent an increase of $179,888,500 over last year (1934)."

Farmers Not Forgotten
The President goes on, "We have already begun to feel the bracing effect upon our economic system of a restored agriculture."

In 1928, an average year, the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture reported 10,289 million dollars as the gross income of farmers. In 1933 the figure was 4,808 million, less than half the prosperity level. In 1934, the Department estimates a gross income of 5,950 million, an estimate which includes 500 millions of direct benefit payments from the government.

"Where is this 'restored agriculture'?" Can it be just another Christmas story?

We look forward with dismay to hearing this speech delivered several times this year over the radio, in those intimate fireside chats with the President that turn the stomach, several more times on momentous occasions such as the opening of new Civilian Concentration Camp systems, and finally we are dully sure to hear it again only slightly altered, on January 4, 1936.

Times may come and times may go, but that speech goes on forever.

Warnick Is Released on $3,200 Bail

Sacramento Labor Prisoners Helped by Non-Partisan Labor Defense

(NPLD Press Service)

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 9.—Jack Warnick, one of the leaders of the agricultural workers of the Sacramento and Imperial valleys, on trial with eighteen others here under the anti-labor Criminal Syndicalism Act, was today released on $3,200 bail provided by the Provisional Committee for Non-Partisan Labor Defense. The trial has been postponed until January 16. The jury has already been selected.

"I expect to prosecute the Communists vigorously," said the committee. With this proclamation, Otis D. Babcock, newly-elected District Attorney of Sacramento County, yesterday took over the task set by the California capitalist class of railroad to San Quentin 18 workers "guilty" of the crime of organizing the exploited agricultural workers of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys into a union to defend their elementary economic interests. During the election campaign Babcock repeatedly criticized the then District Attorney, McAllister, as an enemy of labor, but is now proceeding with the prosecutions which McAllister began.

Albert Goldman Enters Case
A feature of yesterday's brief court session was the entrance into the case of Albert Goldman, noted labor attorney and Socialist Party member, retained by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

The little courtroom was jammed, many workers being present. Newspapermen from San Francisco, Los Angeles and New York crowded the press table. Camera men shot magnanimous flares to picture the participants in the country's greatest political prosecution since the famous Bridgman cases. Everybody was keyed for the calling of the first witness when the District Attorney arose to ask for a week's adjournment.

Over the objections of Leo Gallagher, I.L.D. attorney representing ten of the defendants, Judge Dal M. Lemmon granted the District Attorney the delay "to acquaint himself with the evidence." The judge denied the defense counsel's motion that the jury be dismissed and a new panel called, and also denied a motion to examine the jurors as to whether they are acquainted with the new District Attorney. The jury had been chosen under McAllister.

Various complaints were laid before the judge by the prisoners, who complained about food and medical conditions in the jail. The judge washed his hands of the problem.

Defendants Hold Conference
Immediately after adjournment, a conference was held by the defendants, their attorneys and advisers. Sam Darcy, District Organizer of the Communist Party, to which a number of defendants belong, and Barney Moss, representing the Workers Party of the U. S., of which one defendant is a member, participated. Also present was Herbert Solow of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, which has charge

Workers Party Leaders Off on Speaking Tour

The first national tour of the Workers Party which opens January 13 in Buffalo will take the party leaders, A. J. Muste, national secretary, and James P. Cannon, editor of the New Militant, to 21 cities and industrial centers. The circuit swings north by way of Chicago, as far west as Davenport, Iowa, south to Charleston, W. Va., and back to New York on Feb. 10.

(See schedule of dates and cities where the speakers will appear, together with the subjects they will discuss elsewhere in this issue.)

The tour was mapped at the merger convention of the former American Workers Party and the Communist League of America who joined forces early in December in launching the Workers Party. Since the launching of the new party communications from many sections of the country to the National Office have requested speakers.

AFSW Plans Constitution PMA Election

By FELIX GIORDANO

PATERSON, N. J.—On Saturday, January 12, the first Constitution Convention of the American Federation of Silk Workers, Paterson District, will be held in order to go over the proposed draft submitted by a subcommittee of the Joint Board.

The proposed draft is far from satisfactory, containing provision after provision intended to strip the membership of its democratic rights. The power it intends to delegate to the Joint Board makes the latter a body with final authority. The Joint Board, which this proposed draft would have elected on the basis of "equal representation" would not only be non-representative of the entire membership, but also would have the power to veto any and all decisions of the District Convention.

Moreover, the "equal representation" on the Joint Board is in reality an unequal representation, since a Department of some 300 (like the Ribbon & Hatband) would have the same representation as the Plain Goods Department, numbering some 7,000. Such "equality" is obviously a blow aimed at the largest section of our union. The Joint Board must be elected on the basis of proportional representation. Equally objectionable is the pro-

Strike Shuts Garages in Twin Cities

2,000 Mechanics Out; Get Help from Drivers Union 574

(By Special Correspondent)

MINNEAPOLIS.—With strike headquarters in both cities functioning like clockwork, with commissaries set up and serving hot food, with mobile picket lines cruising the streets in good old style reminiscent of General Drivers Union Local 574's last summer, the striking workers in Garage Mechanics Unions No. 382 in Minneapolis and No. 459 in St. Paul have got the Twin City garages tied up tight. Today (Tuesday) the first strike bulletin will make its appearance on the streets of the two cities. If events demand it, the bulletin will appear daily until the struggle is terminated.

Heaten back in their attempt to take on a big league union like the General Drivers Local 574, the Citizens Alliance is now going to try its luck in the minor leagues. The General Mechanics Unions in Minneapolis and St. Paul have in their ranks about two thousand workers, with scores more flocking in daily from adjacent territory. These two unions, now functioning under a Twin City Joint Advisory Board, were forced out on strike last Thursday, January 3 at midnight. Their demands include:

Union recognition; a minimum of 30 hours work a week; a minimum of 90 cents an hour for mechanics and 65 cents for greasers and washers; seniority listing; and no discrimination for union activity.

Bosses Stall

On November 15 an election was held to determine the right of the two above-named Mechanics and Mechanics Lodges to represent the auto workers in Minneapolis and St. Paul. In the face of an attempted frame-up on Herman Hustman, business agent of the Minneapolis Lodge by the Citizens Alliance, the garage employees voted to have the union represent them.

After weeks of the old stalling tactics, the employers finally met with the union representatives—this only after the threat of an earlier strike. Several conferences resulted, but the bosses sabotaged any collective bargaining proposal. Finally, a few weeks ago, the bosses stated: "The sole point at issue now appears to be the question of union recognition."

But this question was supposed to have been settled weeks ago by the Labor Board elections. Such insincerity was too much for the patient and long-suffering garage workers.

V. R. Dunne on Job

At a mass meeting in St. Paul that night, General Drivers No. 574, through Bill Brown and Farrell Dobbs, offered to place several experienced leaders and picketers at the disposal of the strikers. 574's offer was enthusiastically accepted, and V. R. Dunne was delegated to assist the St. Paul workers.

Under F. Lutz, business agent of Local 459, Dunne has been directing the strike activities from the St. Paul strike headquarters. Other active leaders in that city are Jack Niles and Falke Lindholm. Since the beginning of the strike, St. Paul garages have been sewed up tight.

FDR Advocates Low Wage, Protects Private Industry, In Dealing with Unemployed

150 League Men Storm Town Hall in Michigan

Federal Relief Must Stop He Tells Congress—What Does It Mean?

TEMPERANCE, Mich.—One hundred jobless workers under the banner of the newly organized Monroe County Unemployed League stormed the town hall in Bedford Township and forced the relief authorities to grant immediate coal, clothing, bedding, and increased food orders to the unemployed of Bedford and Erie Townships.

When Dusseau, the case worker in Bedford Township, refused to grant a coal order to Homer Allen, member of the Temperance League, and told him openly that if he wanted coal he should go out and steal it, the U. L. committee of 11, headed by Jack Miller of the Erie U. L., proceeded to put Dusseau on the spot.

The doors of the townhall were closed, and Dusseau was informed that he would have to stay in the hall until the demands of the unemployed were met. He tried a number of tricks to get out of the hall, but to no avail.

After a two hour dead-lock, Russell Clark, the new county relief head, made his appearance on the scene with the county sheriff, deputies and state police. The unemployed refused to budge, and finally compelled the relief head to make out immediate orders.

Clark was even compelled to call up the J. C. Penny Co. in Monroe, and have them remain open for a half hour after their closing time in order to outfit one particularly destitute family with clothing.

Lay Plans for Akron Strike

AKRON, Ohio, Jan. 9.—Aroused to a fever pitch by the lay-off of 325 union members from the Firestone battery plant, nucleus and backbone of the union, a rank and file union leadership is breaking through the shackles of the American Federation of Labor bureaucracy and meeting this week to secretly plan a long overdue and expected strike which will send 7,000 Firestone workers on the picket line.

Failure of the Cleveland Regional Labor Board to reinstate the workers following a hearing last week climaxed the bitter resentment rubberworkers have against the tactics of the rubber baron, H. S. Firestone Sr., and sent strike feeling sky high.

A special meeting of the executive council of the Firestone Local was to be held Wednesday night to determine the course of strategy and action. The United Rubberworkers council, ruling power over all rubber unions, has called a meeting for Saturday to pledge aid and support to any action the local takes.

The refusal of the company to permit a National Labor Board election ordered recently to take place and the throwing of it into a federal court for an anti-election injunction indicate the weakness of the company union and the weakness of labor into realizing that NRA boards etc. were not on their side.

Labor's Share Less in 1935, While Profits Rose, NRA Figures Show

Just before the close of the old year, the capitalist papers started up a loud jabbering about increased production, higher earnings, greater consumption of all goods, the putting to work of unemployed, and so on. But at the end of one of these stories an index was attached—figures computed by the NRA—which show the following:

Employment declined from 78.8 in May of 1934, to 75.9 in August, and to 75.1 in October (latest figures given). The level of October, 1934 was therefore 75.1 as compared with 76.1 in October, 1933. Wages dropped from 61.5 in May, 1934 to 57 in August and then to 55.8 in October. As against a one point rise in wages between October 1933 and October 1934, the cost of living increased 3.1 points.

The index of production dropped from 64.7 in October 1933 to 61.4 in October 1934, and the latter figure also represents a drop of 14 points below production levels of the Spring.

This same release from the NRA reveals that the profits of industrial corporations for the first 9 months of 1934 show an increase of 75.1 percent over the total for the first 9 months of 1933, and also states that the "annual rate of return on net worth has increased from 2.3 percent to 5.1 percent."

While the value of retail sales increased in 1934 by four and a half billion over 1933, due to increased prices, reports from the Kresge stores, the market of the poor, indicate that there was a drop of 4 percent in the volume of goods sold during the first 10 months of last year as compared with 1933, and similarly the amount of goods handled by Woolworth dropped 6 percent.

As we progress further along the report, we find that the Christmas season was the only factor that saved the year of 1934 from being a complete disaster. All these figures quoted by the publicity offices of the NRA show a decided slump as they affect labor in the year and a half since the inception of the NRA.

FOLLOW THE NEWS IN THE NEW MILITANT.

"The Federal Government," said President Roosevelt in his speech to Congress, "must and shall quit this business of relief." This remark is in direct response, not to the needs of the jobless, but to the demands for a balanced budget and no dole by the conference of manufacturers and bankers at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. about a month ago.

What to do with the unemployed, of whom Roosevelt admits there are still "five million on the relief rolls"? First he arbitrarily rules out 1,500,000 as "unemployables" and turns them over to the tender mercies of local relief agencies. The other 3,500,000 are to be put to labor at public works projects.

The Real Questions
Above all else the unemployed want work. Roosevelt knows this and is playing upon this sentiment. But the real questions are: How many will get jobs? For how long? At what wages? On what projects?

The answer to these questions is already given. In his budgetary message Roosevelt requests an appropriation of a lump sum of $4,000,000,000 for relief purposes to cover the needs of the fiscal year 1935. It looks big, doesn't it? But don't be deceived.

Is Four Billion Enough?
According to the computations of Professor J. M. Clark of Columbia University it requires a $3,000 expenditure for each man directly employed for one year at public works.

The Congress outlay for public works will undoubtedly be what Roosevelt asks for—four billion dollars. This would mean that out of the administration's estimate of 3,500,000 unemployed only 1,333,333 (approximately one-third) would get jobs for an entire year. The entire number would get jobs lasting but four months. How will they keep the wolf from the door the remaining eight months of the year?

Once having been employed on public works they will be unable to return to local relief rolls as "unemployables." No provision is made for this eventually.

What About Wages?
And the wages? The amount of compensation, says Roosevelt, should be larger than the amount now received on the relief dole.

The average cost of direct relief per month for an unemployed family was recently estimated at $25 a month or about $6 a week. The unemployed would certainly welcome an increase over this miserable handout. How high shall the wages be? "... not so large" continues Roosevelt, "as to encourage the rejection of opportunities for private employment to engage in government work."

In other words wages must be lower than the $12 minimum provided in the President's blanket code. Moreover they must be lower than the wages paid by the tens of thousands of bosses chiseling under this minimum. Public Works wages must be less than the $10 code minimum in the rubber tire industry, less than $6.50 for the textile bag industry and less than $5.60 paid for 40 hours work in the laundry code in the South—they must be lower if the unemployed are not "to reject private employment... to engage in government work."

Roosevelt's "American Plan" Thus, with one blow Roosevelt slams three and one half million jobless workers below the border line of mere subsistence and provides the bosses with a mighty budgeton to keep the wages of those in their employ at rock-bottom levels. This, boasts Mr. Roosevelt, "constitutes an American plan for the American people."

The wages may be low and the work may last only a few months of the year but perhaps homes will be built for the destitute and slum-labouring working class. Let's see.

"The projects undertaken," warns the President, "should be selected and planned so as to compete as little as possible with private enterprise."

In fact, everything militates against a real housing program under the Roosevelt plan. First the fear to compete with the realty operators. Second the record. The NRA has cooperated in increasing the price of building materials some 23 percent, and, on the other hand, the government has been charging municipalities 4 per cent on the housing loans it has made. Out of $3,700,000,000 allotted to the

One World at a Time League Paper Tells Unemployed Readers

From "Voice of the Workers", organ of the Lehigh County Unemployed League:

The poor go to church more than the rich. Churches are emptier than they used to be, but the poor still attend in vast numbers.

In a few words this is the meat of a recent study made by the Council for Research in the Social Sciences of Columbia University. Evidently this group of professors on the council spent a lot of time and money finding these things out, and a lot of long words in making their reports. Any class-conscious worker, however, could have told these professors why the poor are the principal warmers of church benches, and thus could have saved these professors all their hard study. Furthermore, any class-conscious worker could have told them why the poor worker continues to swallow religious dope, an important matter that for some reason or other the professors did not include in their report.

The fact is that the lives of poor workers are so full of hardship and trouble that they are but too ready to believe priests and ministers who tell them that if they are only good, and come to church, and turn the left side of their heads to be clubbed by the police after they have had the right side of their head clubbed, they will inherit the kingdom of heaven when they starve to death, and everything that they did not have in this world will be added unto them in the next.

When life hurts too much, many poor workers try to kill the pain by taking religion. It is cheap and easy dope. It usually makes workers harmless, and for that reason the bosses see to it that there are plenty of ministers and that the churches are lighted and heated and kept in repair.

There is so much to do to make this a decent world, a world in which workers can live full, rich, happy lives, that workers have no time to trouble themselves much about another life that may just possibly exist beyond the grave. No matter what heavenly rewards there may or may not be, there is a job in this world that the workers must do here and now. Let nothing distract their attention or divert their efforts. One world at a time!

League in Airport Strike Bares Huge Graft; Hits at Forced Labor

WOOD COUNTY, Ohio.—Attempts to work scabs on the Wood County airport project, where for the past three weeks, members of the Wood County Unemployed League have been striking, were crushed by a militant mass picket line which was formed on the morning of January 2 in zero weather by members of the Rossford, East Rossford, Lake Township and Perrysburg Unemployed Leagues.

The strike was called when it was learned that the airport on which federal funds and relief labor were being used is the private property of a corporation, the Trans-American Airway Corp.

As a result of an Unemployed League investigation, it was discovered that in December 1933, E. B. Richardson, receiver for this corporation, had leased the property to the city of Toledo for $1,000, the lease to extend from that date until November 30, 1935. In the same transaction, also for a consideration of $1,000, the city of Toledo appointed and designated Richardson as sole operator, with the proceeds from the airport to go to the operator and his company.

Even prior to the time of this transaction, former mayor Thutcher of Toledo had permitted the use of Community Welfare House inmates as laborers on the private property of this corporation without pay.

PMA "Wild Cat" In Springfield

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—Springfield miners have a contract with coal operators, but that doesn't stop them from using direct action when they need it as a weapon to gain immediate demands. The members of the Progressive Miners Union at Jefferson mine here struck last week against the Brewerton Coal Co.

Pickets were on hand Friday and the mine closed tight. The miners charged that they were being compelled to accept pay by buying coal from the company at fabulous prices.

The Brewerton Coal Co., notorious for its robberies, functions under the camouflage of a Federal receivership. For many years one couldn't even whisper condemnation of the company for fear of being brought before the court for contempt. Now, however, the miners have taken the only logical action—strike.

The Party at Work

RAPID GROWTH IN NEW YORK

New members are being assigned to the various New York City branches at the rate of ten to twelve a week. One of the significant features of this drift towards the new party is that most of the new members are former members of political parties, such as the Communist Party, the Industrial Union Party, the I.W.O., the Workers group, and so on. No systematic membership drive has been started yet, but plans are now being laid for an intensive propaganda campaign on a city wide scale.

The attendance at the Sunday night forums has far exceeded all expectations, and more than doubled the attendances at the former C.L.A. and A.W.P. forums. Preparations are now under way for a joint meeting of the Workers Party and the Spartacus Youth League to commemorate the death of Karl Liebknecht, Rosa Luxemburg and Bobbin, to be held on Sunday evening, Jan. 13, at Irving Plaza. Another event for which preparations are being made is the Lenin Memorial meeting to be held on Wednesday evening, Jan. 23, at the Irving Plaza. The Cultural Committee has arranged an interesting program of dances and music.

The Cultural Committee is a newly formed group organized to bring color and drama into the movement and to form a nucleus of dance groups, dramatic groups and musical groups. This committee meets every Friday evening at 7 P.M. at 144 Second Ave. All friends and sympathizers who are capable of contributing to this work are urged to be present at these meetings.

ALLENTOWN MAPS ACTIVITY

ALLENTOWN, Pa.—The Allentown Branch at its last meeting elected an executive committee consisting of Lester Heckman, Ed Moser, John Gardner, Bill Reich and Frank Collins. Other officers of the branch are Ed Moser, secretary; Frank Collins, treasurer; John Beisel, literature agent; Grant Minn, branch organizer; Bill Reich, industrial organizer. The following fraction chairmen have been elected: Unemployed Leagues: Andy Budhas; Silk, Corn-country relief czar, but the unemployed will be "permitted" to work out their budgetary relief allowance for the equivalent in cash, which makes no allowance for transportation to the job, protective clothing, rent, coal, etc. Those assigned to these projects under the new "plan" were sent "yellow-dog" cards which they were supposed to sign, designating whether they accepted the offer—and if they did not accept, informing them that they would be cut off the relief rolls.

The locals of the Wood County Unemployed Union have already adopted resolutions charging the new relief program as constituting a cut in relief and forced labor, and demanding a minimum of $15 per week for work to be increased proportionally with price rises, which the resolutions add should not be considered as in any way altering the demand of the National Unemployed Union for $30 per week and a 30-hour week.

A huge mass meeting has been called for Bowling Green, and the Wood County Unemployed League is planning to extend the airport strike to a county-wide strike against the entire new forced labor program.

Meeting on Work Projects Called by Allentown League

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Jan. 7.—Step by step, by committee action and mass demonstrations, the Unemployed Leagues of Area 6, comprising Lehigh, Northampton and Carbon Counties, have forced relief officials to grant additional necessities to the unemployed. First food, then clothing, then fuel, then rent. Electric light bills have now been added to the list. Pressure became so strong that Weston Kelsey, Relief Director of Area 6, took a committee consisting of Lester Heckman of the Lehigh County Unemployed League and Russell Shuey of the Northampton County Unemployed League to Harrisburg to present the case for the payment of light bills before Alvin Gaylor, Field Director. The conference resulted in specific plans being drawn up for the payment of these bills. The committee was also instrumental in forcing the distribution of additional surplus commodities.

In spite of these gains relief remains woefully inadequate and the unemployed are milking as never before in order to force additional demands and to protest the forced labor scheme which is now being foisted on them.

"Budgetary Deficiency" A new uniform state plan is being entered for distributing relief.

Under this plan a maximum budget is drawn up for each family. The budget provides for food, clothing, rent, fuel, light and gas. From the budget is subtracted any income the family might have; the remainder is called the "budgetary deficiency." One individual from each family is given work at the rate of 50c an hour to earn the amount of the budgetary deficiency. The main objections to this plan are:

Budgets are set too low for human decency; no provision is made for medical and dental care or for paying insurance and debts; skilled workers are forced to work at rates for unskilled labor; since only one member of a family can be given a job, many able bodied men and women are excluded from work; political preference is being shown in allotting foremen, timekeepers and supervisors jobs.

A mass meeting for all unemployed and employed workers will be held at the Harrison-Morton High School Auditorium on Friday, Jan. 11. At this meeting relief grievances will be aired and plans for forming committees on every project will be presented. This will be the first of a series of monthly mass rallies held by the Lehigh County Unemployed League. Workers songs and dramatics will form an integral part of each meeting.

1. The Goal of the Workers Party.
2. Trade Union Tactics and Strategy.
3. Unemployment.
4. The Recent Events in the Soviet Union.
5. Short History of the Internationals.
6. The Workers Party and its Program.

Subscription for the six pamphlets, which will be published at the rate of one a month, are now being accepted. The price for the series is 50c, and may be secured by writing to the Pioneer Publishers, 102 West 11th Street, New York City. All friends and sympathizers are urged to subscribe immediately as this is the only method of financing the publication program.

Injunction Seen As Lewis Move

(Special to the New Militant) SPRINGFIELD, Ill. Dec. 24.—Federal Judge Wham of the East St. Louis district court, denied the United Electric Coal Co. an injunction to prevent mass picketing by the members of the Progressive Miners of America. The Red Bird mine, operated at Freeburg in the Belleville coal field, has been shut down since April 1, 1934, excepting for a few days when the miners permitted operation under tentative plans.

The efforts to get the injunction were avowedly the plans of John L. Lewis, tyrant of the United Mine Workers, who is attempting to break the Progressive Union in the Belleville territory.

YOU SAID IT, FRANKLIN! In spite of our efforts and in spite of our talk we have not weeded out the overprivileged and we have not effectively lifted up the underprivileged.—F. Roosevelt in his message to congress Jan. 4.

CITY JUGGLES WITH RELIEF

Councils Dormant - Socialist Unions With Cap In Hand - Attitude of Jobless Changing

By AL DASCH

The beginning of the New Year finds the unemployed in New York City in a more precarious position than at any time in the past five years. The city flop houses are filled to capacity with homeless men and women; and if the lengthy breadlines no longer arouse comment, it is only because the sight has become an all too common occurrence. 1,200,000 people in the city are totally unemployed, while more than 300,000 families depend for existence on the starvation budgets allotted to them by the Emergency Relief Administration. Due to the lack of organization on the part of the jobless, the city administration has been able to direct a whole series of attacks against the unemployed in the past few weeks.

Over six thousand families were dropped completely from the relief rolls lately. The favorite excuse was that a close relative (who in many cases had a family of his own and did not even live together with those on relief) had an income exceeding the budget of the relief bureau for that number in a family. At present no more applications of single workers are being accepted. All existing vouchers have been stopped. This leaves the unemployed without even a minimum of clothing with which to face the winter.

Waiting for Snow

Some time ago the city realized that the budget of the Emergency Relief Administration could not take care of all the needs of its "clients." An elaborate snow removal plan was worked out by which 23,000 heads of families would receive work at fifty cents per hour. The Department of Public Welfare stated that the money made on this job would go fully to supplement the relief the men received and nothing would be deducted from their monthly vouchers.

Last week the Department of Public Welfare sent out letters to the men enrolled informing them that half of what they made would have to be deducted from their budget. In view of the fact that it advised them that every twenty-five cents made on the job would be wisely invested if clothes were purchased with it.

Another trick is to transfer those on CWA projects who have no children to home relief, where the amount received by a family of two is less than the small wages paid on work relief. This works both ways, as now only the heads of large families are being placed on work projects. Those placed as laborers received $48 a month for two weeks work. This is less than many of them received before and in that case their "earnings" are supposed to be supplemented by a check from the home relief bureau making up the difference. Most of the men however are unaware of this and do not apply for the additional amount. The result is their families have to get along as best they can on the miserable wages they make.

Work Relief

Since the mass lay-offs last summer for "loafing" the men are, as they put it, "leery." A host of Fusion and Tammany favorites in the positions of foremen harass the men with the threat of "knocking them off." The result is that those on work relief are driven to work extremely hard for what amounts to $12 a week. The speed-up plus the small wages have caused a great deal of dissatisfaction. The work bureau, however, has hit upon a happy scheme with which to elude protest. Together with the threat of being fired for freshness a constant rumor is circulated that with the beginning of the new year those employed are going to receive steady work at the rate of five dollars a day.

Lack of Organization

The only reason that one blow after another can be aimed at the unemployed of New York City without resistance on their part is the lack of an unemployed organization capable of championing the jobless. While cities throughout the country have had their unemployed band together and force concessions from the relief administrations, New York has never done this.

By KARL LORE

Saving John L. Lewis

Stern on the Horizon

Hot Oil

Compulsory Arbitration

The National Industrial Recovery Act saved the skin of John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers. He had worn the once-powerful union to a frazzle, had expelled the militant elements who opposed his corrupt and bureaucratic rule and did nothing to halt the steady disintegration of the organization.

NRA changed all that. John L. saw his opportunity, worked himself rapidly into the highest councils of the administration and sent his organizers into the coal fields with the story that he, Lewis, had breakfast every morning with the President and that F.D.R. had asked him to organize the coal miners. In less than a year the U.M.W. of A. had practically swept the field.

Oil Unionism

The International Association of Oil Field, Gas Well and Refinery Workers was in somewhat the same fix. No conventions had been held since 1926 because of the steady decrease in membership. It took a new lease on life and a membership of 75,000—an increase of 25 percent—was reported to the 1934 gathering. The steady growth has continued since then. Some 15,000 workers are covered by an agreement negotiated by the union with the large Sinclair Oil Company. A few strikes were called against small companies, a number of Labor Board elections resulted in decisive victories for the International as against company unions and special organizing drives enrolled thousands of new recruits.

Thunder Ahead.

In both of these great fuel extraction industries therefore, almost entire dependence was placed on NRA maneuvering. National headquarters of the U.M.W. were moved from Indianapolis to Washington while Harvey Freming, president of the I.O.P., was in the White House.

WASHINGTON.—Extension of the federal employers' 5 percent wage cut for another six months was called for by Pres. Roosevelt in an executive order signed Jan. 4, as bills sponsored by the unions were being introduced in Congress demanding immediate restoration of the cut.

Charges that the government "encouraged general wage-cutting" and set "the worst possible example to private employers" are made in a memorial for repeal of salary reduction addressed to members of the House and Senate by the National Association of Letter Carriers.

WASHINGTON.—Railroads have received more than half a billion dollars in R.F.C. loans, according to the annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

ident of the Oil Field, Gas Well and Refinery Workers, deserted his old offices in Fort Worth, Texas for the superior attractions of the nation's capitol. The increased distance from the coal tipples and oil derricks was more than compensated for by the proximity of code authorities. It is true that Freming threatened general strike action in his industry in March and again in August 1934, but no one ever took it seriously.

Speaking relatively, therefore, everything has been smooth sailing. No real crisis arose to disturb the tranquillity of the union chiefs, such as faced the officialdom of the textile, steel and auto unions. But the events of the past week show that the day of reckoning is approaching and that the coming months are almost certain to produce serious and unavoidable issues in coal and oil.

Price Control

The stumbling block in both industries is the breakdown of the price control system set up to end suicidal competition. Lewis has recently complained that bituminous coal mine operators, after more than a year of successful operation under fair trade provisions of the NRA code have, within the last ten days, started "cutting each others' throats again." The entire minimum price structure of the coal code is threatened with collapse. This must lead to wage cuts as the old competitive fight begins all over again. In a letter to the NRA Lewis hinted at a nation-wide walkout of coal diggers to check that tendency. An even graver situation has been created by the recent decision of the Supreme Court which declared the production and price control features of the oil code unconstitutional. The flood of "hot oil" especially from the East Texas fields in defiance of NRA provisions had already nullified any benefits which the oil workers might have gained from the code for their industry. Now that all the bars are down, price cutting will go on at an ever increasing rate. And the brunt of the battle will, of course, be born by the workers. What this will mean in some sections where even today a state of virtual peonage exists, may be imagined.

The union is trying to get revisions of the code to provide for a 30-hour week and wage increases. Freming stated at a hearing recently that the "reabsorption of unemployed by the industry has been practically nil and its increased wage bill has been a sad disappointment."

Fight—The Only Way One after the other the unions are finding out that the old rules still apply. Labor must fight for what it gets. In certain industries special circumstances may delay the final showdown. That has been the case in coal and oil. But increasingly the workers in these two industries will have to face the cruel facts. To prepare the organizations of labor for the fight, to sweep aside those who sabotage or who preach the identity of the interests of the exploited and the exploiter—that is the job for the progressive unionists of America.

Arbitration It is certain that efforts will be made at this session of Congress to put over a bill for the compulsory arbitration of labor disputes. It is an open secret that certain government officials in high places favor such legislation. Every reactionary interest in the country is busily pushing the idea.

And why not? If organized labor can subscribe to the following paragraph from the American Federationist, organ of the A. F. of L., what serious objection can it have to forced arbitration?

"We hold," says this editorial, "that Labor and employers are properly partners in industry, with separate functions but with interdependent interests which can best be furthered by genuine cooperation or production and for that control of industry that will bring balance in distribution of income and stability in production."

Compulsory arbitration goes as logically with that kind of bunk as ham with eggs.

By JACK WEBER

State of the Union
No More Cash Relief
Imperialism and the Farmer

Roosevelt has sent his message to Congress on the state of the union. And a sad state it is. Had there been in the past year a sharp upturn, a rapid rise in production, reemployment of many more millions of workers, Roosevelt would have taken credit for all this as the result of the New Deal. As it turns out all the hollowness of the demagoguery and ballyhoo of the NRA stand nakedly revealed. True, there has been some recovery of business; employment is above the lowest levels of the crisis; but the illusions created in the minds of many workers that the government would see to the return of prosperity and send them back to the factories in short order have evaporated into thin air. It must be clear to all by now that Roosevelt gained on the ending of the depression and on the recovery of business in the normal course of things, and that his whole "program" so far as the working class was concerned, was intended to lull the masses into passivity during the worst phase of the crisis.

In his message of last year Roosevelt expressed the hope that the budget could be balanced in the next fiscal year—the year beginning in June 1935. That hope, too, goes by the board with the indication that a deficit of four billions of dollars will be piled up in the coming year, thereby bringing the total federal debt to a record high. With the failure of business to pick up sufficiently to permit balancing of the budget, with the government embarking on a new program of public spending to be financed by government borrowing, further inflation looms in the future as almost a certainty. Of course it is not Roosevelt's real intention to spend the entire appropriations supposedly made for relief through public works. But if he follows along the course outlined in his message, the treasury will be forced by the need for refunding previous loans (for example, the Liberty Loans that fall due), and the demands for new funds for public works and other "emergency" measures, to borrow some eleven and a half billions of dollars. Such huge government borrowings will exert the most disturbing influence on the entire financial structure of the nation. That is why the government may be compelled to take over greater and greater control of the banking and credit system.

What is of the utmost importance to both the employed and the unemployed alike, is that part of Roosevelt's message dealing with relief. He intends to drop as much as possible cash relief and substitute what comes close to being forced labor at low wages, lower than for similar work in private employment. And this is to be applied particularly in the field of construction. Thus the pre-arranged propaganda extending back for months now, blaming the failure of recovery in the building trades and the field of heavy construction on the refusal of the skilled workers to give up the wage levels and the conditions to which they were heretofore accustomed, is now bearing fruit. The government is stepping in to help beat down the standards of living of the building trades workers. Recovery of heavy industry is to take place by loading all the sacrifices on the backs of the working class. It can be said in advance that the workers will not submit to this program without the sharpest struggles and resistance. The government will find it necessary to use the methods of repression more and more.

Secretary Wallace Gives the Key

To understand the real meaning of the moves being made by the government one must see them in their entirety as in accord with the historic aims and needs of the American finance capitalists. Such a view is given most clearly in the apparently "liberal" writings of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace. To him it is perfectly clear that America cannot turn to any scheme of autarchy, of a self-enclosed economy. Rather it must rearrange its entire internal economy so as to enable the closest economic ties to be made with the backward agricultural countries of South America and Asia. America, in short, must become more and more imperialistic. It must capture the major world markets for manufactured goods by its mass production methods in the factories. Competition with the other imperialists requires that the costs of production must be extremely low. Hence the drive on workers' living standards. At the same time, if these other countries are to be put in "our" market, they must be permitted to sell their agricultural products. Hence the program of crop control here, to eliminate those American farmers in competition with the potential buyers. Naturally with this vast program of imperialism goes a complete revision of the tariff system.

BIG PROFITS IN TEXTILES

WASHINGTON—Big profits were made by the textile industry from Jan. 1, 1933, to Aug. 31, 1934, according to the first installment of the Federal Trade Commission's reports. Altogether the 765 companies studied made nearly $100,000,000 profits in the whole period, so that the claimed loss of the companies of $4,667,578 for the 2-month period just before the great textile strike had been well covered by the tremendous gains.

Dew of Death Rained From Sky
Capitalist Weapon for Next War

By RUTH WILSON

In Japan school children are taught to use gas masks. In Paris, bomb-proof cellars are built for the civilian population. In Italy, boys of eight are given military training.

In the United States, the government talks of taking the "excess" profits out of war—and continues to build battle ships and to carry on secret experiments with poison gases.

All over the world, the next war is in preparation. For the time being American capitalists, like the English, and all others for that matter, are talking peace—and preparing for the inevitable war.

Chemical warfare is a thing of such horror that the mind reels at the thought of it. Propagandists, lulling us into a feeling of safety, declare that no country would dare use the chemicals and gases they have prepared in their laboratories, because of the fear of reprisals by its enemy.

No Limits

Let us forget gas warfare was "outlawed" before the World War; but both sides used it just the same. In the next war, with a pre-knowledge of the possibilities of demoralizing civilian populations by a quick paralyzing stroke, and with the new horrors made available by the laboratories of the world since the World War, there will and can be no rules and no limits.

What are these horrors of chemical warfare? We don't hear much about them, mostly rumors. There is good reason for that: If the workers of the world could learn what is actually being prepared for them by the governments of Europe and America, then they might rise in protest.

A little book, prepared by the Chemical Workers' Union of England, gives some idea of what the next war will mean. These chemists know what they are talking about.

Mustard Gas

They tell of Mustard Gas, whose victims in the World War suffered and died for years after 1918. This gas, which can be prepared more easily now than at the time of the last war, vaporizes slowly at ordinary temperatures. Thus it may be carried on clothing into a warm room, where it becomes effective. It contaminates anything with which it comes in contact—food, clothing, ground. It has the added horror that it takes some time for it to show its results, so that the victim may not know he has been affected until hours later.

Then, with increasing intensity, the gas causes smarting of the eyes, nausea and vomiting, a rash that develops into blisters and festering sores, and blindness. This agony may last for several days, ending in death.

Those who have seen gas victims of the last war know that even a non-fatal "dose" of Mustard Gas leaves the victim weakened for life.

Perhaps most potent of all gases is Lewisite—discovered by the United States Chemical Warfare Service. To this gas is given the poetic name of "Dew of Death," and it has an odor not unlike that of geraniums. It is one of the most deadly gases ever discovered.

There are many others—Chlorine, which causes death by water-logging the lungs; Phosgene, which kills 81 percent of its victims within 24 hours, after the most horrible agony; and the "irritants," which are not fatal in themselves but are designed to cause their victims to tear off their gas masks and thus expose themselves to the deadlier gases.

"Civilized" Weapons

These are a few of the weapons that experts are preparing for the next war. And not only the experts of Europe. The English Chemical Workers' booklet tells of a huge poison gas plant at "Edgewood" in the United States, built at a cost of $45,000,000, with 218 manufacturing buildings, 1,400 tons of poison gases in stock, and a plant capacity said to be 800 tons of poison gas per day. This would mean that in two months this plant could produce more poison gas than the Germans used throughout the last war.

There is no adequate defense against chemical warfare—the experts agree to that. It would take years to make enough gas masks to protect civilians—even if little children and old people could be trained to keep on these uncomfortable masks. Shelters deep underground may be built to comfort people and prepare them for the idea of war; but to build enough shelters for even one large city—even if they could be built deep enough to keep the gases from seeping down—is a virtual impossibility.

Soothing Syrup

The governments know this. So they devote their propaganda to soothing the people. Sir Samuel Hoare, in a speech in the British Parliament, discussed the possibility of a pre-war treaty under which the centers of cities would not be bombed until the workers had gone home!

But workers, knowing that to paralyze industry will be one of the chief points of attack in the next war, will remember that 31 nations signed the Geneva Protocol forbidding the use of poison gas in the World War—and will not put their faith in the politeness of nations at all.

And the "Abundant Life" Is Poverty! Poverty! Poverty!

By TESS HUFF

Said the New York Post in an editorial in November:

"If a bear, kept in a cage for years, is released, he will pace up and down in an area no bigger than that to which he is accustomed."

"The iron bars are down. But the psychological bars stay up long after there is any basis for them in reality."

"Human beings suffer from the same mental inertia."

"No wonder it seems difficult to grasp the idea that for the future there is enough to satisfy the needs of everyone."

Indeed, it seems difficult. The masses in the United States, first under Hoover, then under Roosevelt, have been like the chicken who starved to death on a sack of grain. But since 1929 there has been a growing conviction that poverty and "bread lines knee-deep in wheat" are there only because they are tolerated.

To put the time had come to have two chickens in every pot and two cars in every garage. And why not? No other nation possesses so much wealth, skilled manpower and machinery.

The government began making surveys. Committees turned in reports and fact-finding bodies filled volumes with facts and figures. Nevertheless, no improvements were visible. In fact conditions got worse. People ate less, poverty increased, debts piled up and more millions joined the unemployed.

Hoover did the best he could. No capitalist could have done better. But the masses were dissatisfied and angry. They made the mistake, so usual in America, of regarding the president as a man, as an abstract man without class alignments and interests. They got angry at Hoover and not at what he stood for. They did not see in him the spokesman for capitalism.

Then came the new savior, Franklin Roosevelt.

When Roosevelt took power the banks were failing and the profit system was in a bad way. Roosevelt saved the banks, and looked at the masses. In a kindly voice, Roosevelt spoke to the nation. The time has come, he said, to have a New Deal and to end this shameful condition; we will drive the money-changers from the temple and lift up the underprivileged to an abundant life.

The government began new surveys. Committees and fact-finding bodies produced new volumes of facts and figures. And the facts and figures added to the already voluminous evidence that every man, woman and child could have plenty of all the necessary things of life—food, clothes, homes, a high standard of living.

But again the months passed and there was no visible improvement. In 1933 there was a brief upturn and then conditions got worse than ever. The President continued to speak of the "abundant life."

But facts and figures are hard with-ness. Less food was sold in 1934 than in 1933. New homes are still out of the question; there is none; and the old ones do not improve with age. It is true that new millions in profits were reported by the corporations and banks in 1934, but the government has just reported an all time high of 19,000,000 people on the relief rolls. The living standard instead of being doubled is sinking lower.

In his message to Congress, which has just opened, Roosevelt admitted that "despite all our talk" the New Deal has failed to lift the underprivileged. But in the same breath he defended the "profit motive," said the government "must and will quit this relief business" and recommended that 3,500,000 of the jobless be put to work on government projects "which do not conflict with private business" at low wages.

The working masses do not yet realize who Roosevelt is. That he is a member of the capitalist class, trying to apply a capitalist remedy, is not generally known. But little by little the idea that WE COULD HAVE PLenty is growing. And this is the dynamite that will blast capitalist poverty and the whole capitalist "profit motive" system away high.

SPANISH SOCIALIST YOUTH

CALLS FOR NEW INTERNATIONAL

(Ed. Note: An expression of the tremendous ferment in the ranks of the Young Socialists of Europe is to be seen in the call issued by the Socialist Youth of Spain for unity with the Young Communist League and the Communist Left Youth ("Trotskyites") and the formation of a new revolutionary youth International and be "return to Marx and Lenin". The call issued by the Spanish Socialist Youth is reprinted herewith.)

Call of Spanish Socialist Youth To the Socialist and Communist Youth:

To the working Youth:

Comrades: Following the revolutionary movement and because of the need for strengthening the proletarian defense against the fascist offensive the Executive Committee of the Socialist Youth considers that the unity of the youth forces can no longer be postponed. The proletarian youth is faced with the problem of organic unity. Realizing this to be so, we have addressed the following proposal to the Y.C.L., the Communist Left Youth (International Communists) and the youth organizations of the Iberian Party (Maurin group):

"The Socialist Youth of Spain feel the unpostponable need of achieving the organic unity of the revolutionary proletarian youth which has already been united in struggle. During the October revolution we have struggled together against fascism in a single block and for a common purpose. Why should this not continue to be so? Why continue separately if our line is the same? The Socialist Youth have broken definitely with the Social-Democratic Reformism and intend, together with the Socialist Youth of France, Belgium, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, England, and Austria, to initiate the reconstruction of the youth movement on the purest basis of revolutionary Marxism. The international leadership necessary to reach victory is non-existent. The Second and Third Internationalisms have lost this leading position. Following Hitler's victory, a new movement has gotten under way. We believe it necessary, urgent, to push this movement to its destination."

"Let us return to Marx and Lenin. Let us unite the proletarian youth in an international that has broken with the errors of the past. Therefore, we invite the Y.C.L., the Communist Left Youth, and the Youth of the Iberian Communist Party, to enter, as such, en masse into the Socialist Youth of Spain. We invite the revolutionary proletarian youth to rally under our banner for the reconstruction of the international proletarian movement."

"For the organic unity of the proletarian youth! For a Marxist International! For the banner of Marx and Lenin!"

Concerning this proposal, discussions have been held with the Y.C.L. which has refused our proposal in a sectarian manner. We have not, however, lost confidence.

Young Communists: bring pressure on your leadership to achieve organic unity.

Young workers: The Socialist Youth of Spain calls on you to unite.

Long live the October revolution! Long live organic unity! —Socialist Youth of Spain.

Situation Tense In Cuba

Once again, Cuba finds itself on the brink of a volcano. The fate of the Mendieta-Batista regime, puppet of American imperialism, hangs in the balance. Opposition groups of both the right and the left are organizing the struggle for its overthrow.

The mass base of the present government has been progressively shrinking for many months to the point where it now rests almost entirely on the army with the support of Wall Street interests. The development of the strike movement and the tremendous wave of terrorism—bombings and assassinations—have shown the impotence of the government to dominate the situation. Serious disaffection is evident in the army, a number of officers having been detained for subversive activities, and numerous arrests of Communists, ABC members, and alleged terrorists, have been made in the last few days.

There can be no doubt that the Cuban revolution is entering a new phase. Both of the working class parties — Bolshevik-Leninist and Stalinist, all of the petty bourgeois revolutionary groups—Cuban Revolutionary Party, Young Cuba, National Agrarian Party—as well as the would-be Fascist ABC, openly proclaim the renewal of hostilities. Upon the events of the next few weeks may depend the future of the Cuban revolution for many years to come. Organized labor of the United States should be prepared to forcefully demand that American imperialists keep their hands off of Cuba in the struggles that are approaching.

shook the walls. The N.U.L. was launched. The spies and fascists were decisively beaten—how decisively was apparent at the meetings following the convention and at the second national convention which showed clearly the tremendous progress in political understanding and class-consciousness that these workers, who only a year before waved the flag and dangled the club, had made under the tutelage and leadership of the C.P.L.A. Ramaglia and Johnson, elected president and secretary without opposition, could prepare their plan for extended organization.

Huey Is Tammany Hall Rising From the South

Second Installment on Life of Louisiana Kingfish

Huey's career from 1928 to the present day is a history of complicated political maneuvering, whereby he worked himself up from an ordinary governor to monarch of Louisiana.

Huey Long is absolute dictator; not only does he control the legislature, the governor, and the supreme court; but also the Commissioner of Taxes, Allice Gros Jean (one time Secretary of State in La.) who holds a bluegeon of taxes over business; the Commissioner of Levees, Abe Shusan, who raised a $377,000 campaign fund by an extra legal tax on state employees; the Commissioner of Forests, Seymour Weiss, who has favors for steamship companies; the Commissioner of Conservation, Bob Maestri, who has jobs to hand out.

Long even has the power of approving the appointment of lawyers to the bar; and in many cities of appointing police, fire chiefs, sewer and water commissioners, etc. Since the last primary, Long has captured the New Orleans municipal government.

Controls 13,500 Jobs
Politicians calculate five votes for every job. Huey controls some 13,500 jobs, and so he can be sure of 87,000 votes out of 300,000 no matter which way the wind blows.

In the end, however, his real strength lies in his ability to get the support of the masses. Huey Long has actually accomplished reforms, by pulling up a tremendous debt which will ultimately have to be paid by the workers.

The fulcrum of Long's political lever is the state highway system. He has built hundreds of miles of fine concrete, bringing tourists and trade to the impoverished countryside. His highway system, however, is a patchwork. Only the Parishes, or counties, that vote for Long get roads; so that one may travel fifty miles of fine concrete to cross in a moment into a mire of ruts, an anti-Long county.

Rich Get Richer
His reforms are attractive, make a fine show, and satisfy some of the smaller needs of the voters. But the rich are still rich and the poor get poorer in Louisiana, no matter how Huey may talk.

Huey knows that he can't go on forever in his home state. His reforms, small as they are, have been accomplished at an expense which is almost prohibitive. In the year 1928 the bonded indebtedness of Louisiana was $11,000,000. In 1934, after six years of Huey Long, it was $140,000,000, 41 percent as large as the debt of New York, the richest and most populous state in the union.

Huey and the Banks
Huey will soon reach a critical point in his career. He must have money to go on with his "popular" government. He can't get money from the poor voters who elect him. There is only one source large enough for the sort of campaign Huey conducts, that is the banks. If money continues to flow in Louisiana, or in Long's national campaign, it can only be by virtue of a behind-the-scenes agreement between Huey and the very big business he flays.

Huey and the Government
The most pressing of Long's opponents is the federal government. Through relief agencies, through the PWA, through the FERA, through all the federal activities the government controls a great many jobs in Louisiana, and these jobs, at the rate of five votes to the job, are going to anti-Long men. Further, the government can withhold PWA funds, as it is threatening, and thus bring Long to his knees.

At present the government is engaged in an investigation of the incomes of Long's followers. Several of his right hand men have already been caught in the net; indeed so close a companion as Abe Shusan, the Commissioner of Levees, is being investigated for the $377,000 he raised for Long's political campaigns.

Huey's Program
Before we try to predict anything of Long's future, let us look at the

Bill White Dead

William J. White, a member of the C. P. O. (Lovelace group), and a fighter in the trades union and political movement since 1889, died in New York, Jan. 7. He had been ailing for some months but carried on as a field organizer in Port Wayne, Ind. and Ohio. A few weeks ago he returned to New York. Comrade White was born in Pennsylvania in 1871, of Irish parentage. At an early age he went to work in the steel mills, joining the S.L.P. and the Amalgamated Association of Steel Workers at the age of 18. From then on to his death, Bill was engaged in every political or industrial struggle that took place in the steel towns of Pennsylvania and Ohio.

a bad thing. It makes for efficiency and cheapness of production.

It is the ownership of capital, in the form of factories, by private persons that is the real difficulty. The factories become continually more and more efficient, but at the same time, by the very concentration of ownership by one person, the efficiency is obtained, it is continually less and less profitable for the owners to operate them. Thus we arrive at the stage where the most efficient and progressive industrial nation in the world is forced to leave millions unemployed, to operate its factories at one quarter capacity, to deprive and starve one half the population, and drive the other half to death.

Solution in Ownership
This state of affairs is not the result of the efficiency of our industry, but of the ownership. The solution lies not in subdividing industry and going back to the U. S. Steel corporation to the blacksmith shop, but in taking the ownership away from the U. S. Steel and giving it to the workers.

Huey Long's program contemplates the subdivision of capital by limiting fortunes to some reasonable figure such as $500,000,000. (It should be clear that fortunes are not in cash, that in fact, Henry Ford could never get all his wealth in cash, for there isn't that much currency in the country. Henry Ford's fortune consists in the ownership of factories, mines, offices, etc. Thus when Huey Long speaks of dividing up the wealth of the country he is only clowning.)

Huey Long may be clever enough to know that his plan is nonsense. Certainly he knows how to appeal to his voters. Huey's program reflects the emotional, unreasoned, desire of the small bourgeoisie, the owners of little, inefficient factories, the owners of small stores, the owners, in effect of blacksmith shops, the desire to go back. The desire, not to turn the great potential power of the U. S. Steel to the use of the workers, but the desire to destroy the U. S. Steel corporation, so that the workers may be exploited by outdated blacksmith shops once more.

INTERNATIONAL WORKERS SCHOOL

NEW YORK CITY.—The third week of February will mark the opening of the first semester of the New York District Workers Party School, to be called the International Workers School. Final plans for its organization will be completed in the next few days.

Enthusiastic response is expected to the school arrangements. Overflow audiences at recent mass meetings and open forums of the Workers Party clearly indicate the great interest in the program and policies of the Workers Party. Both new and old members in the district organization have made requests for the early commencement of classes.

To satisfy these needs and desires, a list of competent instructors and lecturers has been compiled. They are being assigned to take charge of those courses in which they are most experienced. The policy of the school will be to concentrate on the more elementary subjects to educate the militant workers and train them for more effective participation in the class struggle. Only by sound theoretical understanding of the problems of the class struggle can the workers conduct intelligent and victorious action. Courses included are:

Workers Party fundamentals, Marxian Economics, History of the American Labor Movement, Trade Union Strategy and Tactics, History of the Three Internationals, History and Problems of the Youth Movement. In addition there will be lecture courses on cultural problems.

As part of the School a library is to be organized. This will contain the Marxian classics and literature of the social sciences, as well as current periodicals. Readers of the New Militant are invited to contribute suitable books or pamphlets: Joseph Carter, Administrator, International Workers School, 112 East 19th Street, Room 702, New York City.

Cult of Leadership, Zig-Zags And Turns Mark C.I. Policy

By JOSEPH ZACK

An analysis of the Comintern and its national sections would not be complete without mentioning the peculiar leadership cult introduced by Stalin. First it was, "Comrade Stalin, secretary of Central Committee." Then it became, "our Central Committee led by Comrade Stalin." Now already for some time it is, "the Central Committee under the leadership of Comrade Stalin."

The same practice has been introduced in the other parties. In Germany it reads "the C. P. of Germany under the leadership of Comrade Thaelmann." Perhaps it is better to say it that way, for the Central Committees have long ago been reduced to a consultative capacity; under Stalin's regime they become assistants to the secretary. This runs to such extremes that even when the bulk of the party is in jail in Germany the demand is made for "the release of Comrade Thaelmann" as if the others did not matter. Stalin's idea of centralism is the one man principle. The rest must be subordinated, chosen by The One under the camouflage of nominating committees and "ratified" by the body having formal jurisdiction. Each new leadership glorifies itself through articles, pictures, folders, anniversaries, etc. The whole system is so arranged that it is exceedingly difficult to have any of these people ever "promoted" out of office through pressure from below, let alone removed. Thus firm leadership is established in the Communist parties.

Naturally, such a leadership, freed from any control by the party masses, are at liberty to change the policy at will without consulting the membership. The policy swings from one extreme to another. The party membership learns about the latest "turn" after it is already in effect.

Between 1923 and 1928, a period of high prosperity in this country, we had two basic changes in policy. First, in line with the Kuomintang experiment in China and similar policies in India, we in this country were organizing the Farmer-Labor Party and seeking alliance with LaFollette.

This opportunist policy outraged the Communists to the function of organizers of reformist parties. Lenin untiringly preached against such policies.

At the same time we echoed the theory of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats on the trade union field, namely, "No Dual Unionism." This slogan was originated by Samuel Gompers, late president of the A. F. of L. It meant that the workers had no right to organize outside the A. F. of L.

This opportunist policy created a sharp division into right and left in the Communist parties. The Comintern leadership (Stalin) got panicky, made a sudden, sharp turn to the left and got from under by unloading the whole thing on Bucharin and denouncing the Right as the main danger.

While "prosperity" was still at its height (1928) a totally new set of theories were promulgated without any connection with objective conditions. The new theories rested on the conception that everyone else except the followers of Stalinism are direct or potential enemies. These enemies were divided into categories such as "Social Fascists," or "Left Social Fascists." The panic found its most profound expression however in the excommunication of the genuine left wing of the Comintern as "counter-revolutionists." In this characterization tion, incidentally, Stalin revealed the true character of his own policy and the tremendous falsification perpetrated by the pseudo-left policy of the "Third Period"

Naturally with such a policy there could be no united front, not only with other classes as before but not even with groupings and organizations of the working class. The workers were simply invited to support the C. P. and this was called "the united front from below." If, before that, the Communist Party was hidden under the bloc of classes, farmer-labor parties etc., now everything was to be subordinated to the C. P.

Red Unions Period
A corresponding change was effected on the trade union field. No more of Gompers' slogan of "No Dual Unionism." Now there was to be not only new unions everywhere, whether they had a base for existence or not, but they were to be "red" unions, unions that must acknowledge the C.P. as their official leader and endorse its program. As to the left and progressive minorities in the reformist unions, they were to be called upon to leave those unions double quick and go into "red" unions.

The evil fruits of the theory of "Social Fascism," "Red Unions," the "United Front from Below," and the rest of the "Third Period" program, are well known. Thanks to them, when the day came in Germany Hitler was able to shove aside the best organized working class and the strongest Communist Party in any capitalist country. Deceits and isolation everywhere resulted from the "Third Period" of "left" adventurism in the Comintern. A new "prescription" was needed. It came, eventually, in full force. Without any discussion of the past errors, to say nothing of a recognition of them, a new swing to the Right is now under way.

No more is heard of "Social Fascism." This theory is sunk with out a trace. The conflict with Social Democracy is now softened down to a dispute with "class brothers" and proposals are made to end the dispute altogether. The first step in the direction is the signing—or proposals to sign—"non-aggression pacts" Under these pacts the two parties—C.P. and S.P.—agree not to criticize each other inside or outside party meetings (France).

On the trade union field there are to be no more "Red" unions. More there are to be no new unions generally. Stachel, trade union expert of the C. P., now declares that "we never believed in dual unionism" (November issue of Communist). This new swing to the right is only in its inception. Resistance to it inside and outside the Soviet Union has retarded its rate of development, but the swing to opportunism is well under way. If Brandler and Lovestone have not yet returned to the fold it is not any more because of serious differences of policy but out of the difficulties of face-saving on both sides.

Why the Zig-Zags?
Thus we have seen three basic changes in policy back and forth within ten years. Did these swings have anything to do with the objective situation? Not at all! They were the results of defeat after defeat. What we strove to do one year we had to undo the next year. Did these policies have anything to do with Marxism or Leninism? Nothing whatever! Exactly the contrary, as Trotsky shows with crystal clearness in his numerous pamphlets. Did the movement grow stronger at each turn? Just the contrary. The desire to overthrow capitalism on the part of the workers is undoubtedly stronger than ever before, but Communism as an organized force was never as shattered as now.

Stalinism has not only disorganized the international movement of the workers' vanguard. It has also weakened and undermined the position of the Soviet Union. The task of the International proletariat now is to reorganize its ranks, prepare for revolutionary struggles and thereby, also, provide the necessary defense—the only real defense—of the Soviet Union. In order to accomplish this historic task the vanguard of the international proletariat must free itself from the blighting influence of Stalinism. The Workers' Party and the movement for the Fourth International are leading the way to the revival of the revolutionary movement on the basis of Marx and Lenin.

F. D. R. Deals With Relief

PWA for the last eighteen months only $146,000,000 has gone for housing, out of which only a few millions have been used. Almost three times the amount went to the army and navy to build its machine of destruction.

Now that we have seen what will happen to three and one-half million of the unemployed what about the other 1,500,000. These Roosevelt calls "unemployables." How he arrived at this figure is not disclosed but it looks very suspicious. It is more than one-fourth of the total under consideration, which means that in the eventuality that Roosevelt has underestimated the number of unemployed—and he certainly has—this one-fourth will be turned over to local relief.

And how will the cities carry on this relief when most of them are that broke? New York City has a deficit of $4,000,000. Chicago $125,240,000. Philadelphia $6,000,000. All these cities have cut the salaries of city employees during the last year. Some have restored cuts but most of them have not. Many of these cities have introduced sales taxes. Now consider the situation of the smaller cities, towns and counties if such a deplorable situation prevails in the metropolitan centers.

After a short burst of enthusiasm the local agencies will turn their backs on these 5,000,000 men, women and children and claim that they are financially unable to assist them. Furniture of evicted families will clutter the streets. The million bread line will return. Roosevelt's line instead of Hooverville will become standing institutions. Into this breach Roosevelt will step and through his "own personal efforts and the influence of the office" that he holds, the "unemployables" will be taken care of. Hoover did the identical thing. He made radio speeches and his heart beat for the destitute. Then the hat was passed. Result: starvation and suffering everywhere.

After laying out this black tomorrow Roosevelt turns to God: "In the face of these spiritual impulses," he prays in conclusion, "we are sensible of the Divine Providence to which nations turn now, as always, for guidance and fostering care."

Yes! Roosevelt may turn to God for consolation after damning the unemployed. But the jobless worker will have to take care of himself.

Limits Democratic Rights
The draft also makes inadequate provisions for trials and for nominations to office. It would leave trials entirely to the Branch Executive Boards and to the Joint Board; and gives nominating committees the final say on nominations. Both of these provisions limit the democratic rights of the members, who are entitled to be guaranteed the right of trial by jury, and the right of nominating by petition.

The proposed draft makes no provisions for special conventions. Such a provision is essential. Special conventions should be held upon the request of any one Department of the organization.

Finally, and by no means least important, is the fact that the proposed draft takes a step backward in respect to the industrial as against the craft form of organization.

vision in the draft which specifies that representation to the District Convention be "one to each 500 members . . . and no less than two delegates from each branch." The aim of this clause is all the more evident since representation to the National Convention is on the basis of one to 200. The only proper and democratic basis of representation to the District Convention is one delegate to each one hundred members.

At this conference the prisoners unanimously adopted a resolution calling on all workers and sympathetic organizations to send deputation action for the defense of the gates to a conference to establish 18 prisoners and the repeal of the Criminal Syndicalism Law. The prisoners emphasized their desire to see a serious, militant, broad movement on their behalf. They included in the resolution a general appeal for bail funds.

REVIEWING THE NEWS

By BILL SHERMAN

"A More Abundant Life"

That's how Roosevelt speaks, but here is how the National Guard acted in Rossville, Ga. "In two rushes, National Guardsmen patrolling the Richmond Hosiery Mill, where a strike is in progress, today rounded up 33 persons, including five women . . . they will be placed in a military detention camp. . . . The walk-out came when the mill posted a notice of a 10 percent reduction in pay." (A. F. dispatch)

Democracy and Communist Party

"Communists are prepared to join the Labor Party movement." So Earl Browder announced at the Unemployment Insurance Conference in Washington, and that announcement was the first information given to the Communist Party members and supporters on such an important change in policy. Nodiscussion pro or con, just the payroll bill from Browder. Is there any wonder that the entire audience laughed loud and long when a C. P. member, speaking from the floor at the New York Zack meeting, said: "We have democracy in the C.P.?"

"The Slums We Give Them"

"The poor are always with us and the slums we give them (give them!) are usually better than the hovels they lived in on the other side. In many cases they are not Americanized enough to know what cleanliness means." So spoke Joseph P. Day, real estate magnate, before the National Housing Conference, and in so speaking, he voiced the real opinion of his class. The fear of the "dirty poor" keeps many from speaking so openly but every action taken by "the powers that be" to meet the unemployment crisis shows that they consider the working class to be dishonest, lazy, incompetent, dirty, and drunkards. Beef that is not considered good enough for the animals in the Zoo is canned and fed to the unemployed. "Made work" is prescribed for them. Snoopers are sent into their homes to make sure that they are not getting drunk on the miserable dole. A man whose ancestors may have come over with George Washington's father is looked on as an "alien" if unemployed. Joseph Day merely expresses the uncaring attitude of a parasitic ruling class to those who do the so-called dirty work.

Pastors, Preachers, Messiahs and Crooks

The Reverend Ethelbert Brown, Pastor of the Herbert Harrison Memorial Church, New York City, in a sermon last Sunday denounced "religious crooks who call themselves Messiahs and who sell charms to cure illness in Harlem." This attack, which apparently was directed against one of Earl Browder's favorite "united-fronters," is a dangerous thing for a preacher to start. Beginning with an attack on the "rank and file God" where is such a fight against "religious crooks" to end? A very important and respectable organization, the Holy Catholic Church, gets quite a bit of its income by selling passes through Purgatory, and where is the preacher who is not ready to raise his paws to Heaven in a prayer for the ailing—for a price? When "religious crooks" are to be attacked, all dope peddlers from Holy Jumpers to the Vicar of Christ should remember the old saying about those who live in glass houses.

"Free Workers" in Auto Paradise

The statement issued by Alfred Sloan, president of General Motors, in which he attacked the tyranny of "free workers", was further illuminated by the testimony given before the Joint Commission on Stabilization of Employment in the Auto Industry. This Commission got an earful on just what Sloan's "freedom" and "high wages" mean to auto workers. One witness said the workers were so speeded up that it was next to impossible to get away "even for a few moments for hygienic purposes." A thimble test would be fired if they appeared to testify. That in itself is a touching tribute to "the freedom of workers not under union domination"—Men working under bonus systems, so complicated that they never knew what they were supposed to get and had no way of checking up—wages so low that workers were better off under relief—guards to prevent workers from speaking to each other on the bridge entering into the Ford plant—these are a few of the benefits enjoyed by "free workers" in the auto paradise of Detroit, where there is no "union domination" . . .

LENIN

ELEVEN years have elapsed since the death of Lenin. But even though great changes have come over the face of the world and the labor movement that Lenin knew, everything that has happened has served only to verify and strengthen the ideas and achievements with which the name of this greatest of modern revolutionary leaders is so inseparably connected.

Lenin's ideas are more potent and sure-footed today not because of the futile attempts to convert the dead leader into an infallible god who must be worshipped, whose words must be mechanically repeated in and out of season. Rather have they gained in influence because the events of the last decade, however they have brought advances or setbacks to the working class movement, have demonstrated with a growing force the truth that the exploited and oppressed masses of humanity are to be liberated from the social order that strangles them, only by following in Lenin's footsteps.

LENIN was primarily and above all a proletarian revolutionist. He was animated by a central idea and a single ideal—the liberation of the oppressed and exploited from the chains of slavery. In his youth he became imbued with an ineradicable hatred of czarism and capitalism. He set his life's course towards the goal of ridding the world of modern slavery, beginning with the overthrow of the czarist autocracy in the Russian empire. His principal instrument—the principal instrument of the working class as the only consistently progressive force in modern times—he conceived to be the revolutionary party, as had Marx and Engels before him.

To advocate stubbornly the idea that even in backward Russia the future of the masses lay in the hands of the working class, required that deep conviction of the correctness of Marxian theory and a power of penetration into the realities of social and economic development, that made Lenin outstanding even in the select ranks of the revolutionary movement. If that spirit of concrete realism, which is an essential part of Marxism, made it possible for Lenin to deal practically with every situation, to seek allies in every progressive force regardless of how short a distance they could march in common, it also made it the central part of his work to cement together an iron regiment of revolutionists into the Bolshevik party.

LENIN'S party stood aloof from no struggle, regardless of how little developed might be the masses who engaged in it, no matter how conservative might be the shell in which the struggle was first contained. Where the workers sought a wage increase of a few cents per hour, or an improvement in their conditions, Lenin and his party placed themselves automatically on their side—asking nobody's permission to cooperate and putting no conditions for the assistance they rendered. Where the workers chafed under the yoke of imperial despotism and sought a means whereby a more democratic regime might be established, Lenin's party stood in the forefront of the struggle. Where the peasants rebelled against the misery and poverty of their lives under the rule of the feudal lords, the Bolsheviks were by their side, explaining, in the course of the fight, the indispensable need of allying their efforts with those of the workers in a common struggle. Every event was utilized by the Bolsheviks to direct attention to the need of overthrowing the monarchy and making way for the final struggle of the masses against capitalism and for their own emancipation.

Lenin directed his blows not only against the enemy of the working class outside its ranks, but also against the foe, well-meaning or malign, on the inside. If the Bolshevik party was able, in 1914, to withstand the ravages of social chauvinism which swept the Second International into the trenches under the banner of imperialism, it was because it had been prepared in advance for its internationalist position by the struggle against the "Populists", the Mensheviks, and all other forms of reformism and compromise. If the Bolshevik party, further, was able in 1917 to lead the masses of Russian workers and peasants to the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of the first successful working class government, it was because it had been steered and tempered in a thousand preliminary battles against the ruling class and against conciliators in the labor movement.

LENIN is an immortal of the working class, therefore, not only because of his ideas, not only because he dug revolutionary Marxism out from under the refuse heap with which the bankrupt Second International had buried it, but because he succeeded in incorporating his ideas into the two great living realities of his time: the Russian workers' republic and the resurrected Revolutionary International.

The cruel death which snatched him prematurely from the ranks of the class to which he had devoted such a magnificent life, made it impossible for Lenin to complete his work. The wave of reaction which set in against his death brought to the surface, and then to the helm, elements in his whom he had contended all during his lifetime and especially during the latter part of his life. His greatest misfortune occurred not during his lifetime but after it. His ideas were distorted and then canonized into a contorted and lifeless dogma. In place of the working class democracy for which he had fought was placed a disintegrating bureaucracy. The internationalism with which his life's work was literally drenched was replaced by a narrow-minded nationalism. The Soviet republic which he led in founding and building up was weakened, seppled and thrown into a mortal danger by those who usurped his leadership. The Third International which he led in organizing and consolidating as the general staff of the world revolution, was undermined, dismembered, and eventually destroyed as a revolutionary organization.

Not discouraged by these events, but rather continuing to draw our inspiration from the tenacious and confident struggle he carried on for the ideal of the world socialist society, the revolutionists of today have once more raised his banner. We want to commemorate the anniversary of Lenin, not by fine speeches and articles, but by strengthening our determination and increasing our activity to accomplish in this country what Lenin achieved in Russia. The Workers Party, which stands on the foundations of Lenin's work and ideas, and adopts his methods, proudly proclaims its goal to be the working class struggle against the iniquities of capitalism, against exploitation and misery, against war and Fascist barbarism, the working class revolution to smash the cursed system of capitalism and replace it with the new order—world socialism!

In the spirit of Lenin, the thinker, the guide, the man of action, the proletarian revolutionist! For the working class—first, last, and always! For the Fourth International, the rightful heir of Lenin's work and aspirations! For the international socialist order!

W P Moves National Office Takes Floor at 2W. 15th St.

Comrades! Friends! Sympathizers! We have done our part; we have moved to the new headquarters—the entire third floor of 2 West 15th St., replete with spacious, well lit offices. Room for the National Headquarters, for the Workers School, for the District Office, for trade union and unemployed work, and for the new Pioneer Bookshop.

An expanding party must have large headquarters. But alas! Headquarters do not grow on trees. Now it is up to you. Come to our support; send us money—nickels, dimes, quarters, half dollars, dollars, five and tens. This is the critical moment, we must have funds.

In addition to the new office, we have the cost of moving, the necessity of expanding our printing plant, of obtaining a new press to take care of increased New Militant and New International circulation, the cost of our growing trade union and unemployed work, of the new school and the bookshop.

Shame us for having underestimated you; make the foundation fund go over the top. Pay your pledges, and pledge again. Don't miss this opportunity, abash us, baffle us, astonish us, overwhelm us—subscribe and over-subscribe. Make the foundation fund go over the top.

The FEDERAL BUDGET

(From Washington Correspondent)
WASHINGTON.—Just what is it, when the capitalist state writes in the agencies of depression, which "unbalances" the Federal budget? If we listened to the President, we might get the idea that relief expenditures are to blame; whence, the conclusion is drawn, cut down on relief. Let us, instead, look at the record as displayed in the recent Treasury report and set forth in the President's budget message. During 1934, the Federal government paid out 7 billion dollars and took in 3 billion; for the difference, the public debt was augmented.

Billion for bondholders?
How was the money spent? Some 750 million went to meet interest on the public debt; 350 million more to retire part of the debt outstanding. In short, over a billion dollars was devoted to the support of bondholders.

War Expenditures
Pensions to World War veterans accounted for another 500 million. The Army and the Navy took between them another half billion dollars for the current needs of the military and naval establishment; so far, that is, as the direct data show. We really should add to this sum many hundreds of millions of dollars hidden away under the PWA appropriations and elsewhere. In sum, considerably more than 2 billion dollars was expended upon the luxuries of imperialist war, past, present, and future.

This is not the end of the story. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration expended almost 300 million as a reward to farmers for plowing under crops and taking toll out of cultivation. The Farm Credit Administration laid down $150,000,000, not to rescue farmers, but to salvage the reconstruction of mortgages. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation chipped in at least 500 million to prop up the top-heavy and tottering structure of private debt. To preserve the institution of private banking, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation dug down into its purse for 150 million. And so it went.

In sum, considerably more than one billion dollars went to encourage wanton destruction of the means of livelihood, to maintain the solvency and income of mortgage holders, and to help keep the banks safe for private profit.

Recapitulating, the federal government spent a good deal more than 3 billion dollars on anti-social purposes. Hundreds of millions more should be added to allow for less readily ascertainable expenditures of the same type. Cut out these sums, and the budget would almost balance without taking a penny away from relief. Better

Bosses Pay Prosecutor In Sacramento Red Trial

BULLETIN
The Independent Union of All Workers, with headquarters in Minnesota, has sent the following telegram to the Sacramento defense:

"UAW protests against prosecution of 18 cannery and agricultural industrial union members and use of action in attempt of Industrial Alliance and Growers' Association to smash unionism. View criminal syndicalism law as vicious. Favor its repeal. Organization represents over 5,000 workers in 13 cities or states."

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 18.—The trial of the eighteen workers indicted under the Criminal Syndicalism Act opened here this morning in a tense atmosphere hostile to the working class defendants.

League Men In Conference In N.W. Ohio

(Special to New Militant)
TOLEDO, Ohio.—Over 100 elected delegates, representing 25 locals of the Unemployed League in Northwest Ohio with over 5,000 members, met at the headquarters of the Lucas County Unemployed League in Toledo, January 13, for the first N.W. District Conference of the Ohio Unemployed League. Although the first League in this district is only a year and a half old, the delegates were already veterans of the class struggle, having participated in scores of strikes, marches, demonstrations in the past year. Sam Pollock, vice-president of the N.W. District of the Ohio Unemployed League, presided.

Delbate after delegate gave reports, showing the powerful growth of the Unemployed Leagues in this area under the leadership of members of the Workers Party. It was a remarkable and stirring account from the lips of the workers themselves of a constant and courageous struggle for better living conditions.

The delegates, in an enthusiastic and intelligent fashion, laid out their plans for their coming fight against the new national slave program advanced by Roosevelt, analyzed the militant mass action tactics to be used, and pledged themselves to a finish fight against all fascist cohorts including those of Father Coughlin, Huey Long, Alfrey Lawson and William Dudley Field.

The conference lasted from 2 in the afternoon until 9:30 in the evening. After a very busy and comprehensive day, the delegates were dismissed in terms of greater mass action.

ORDER W. P. PAMPHLETS NOW.

Despite the fact that public sentiment last week had apparently succeeded in ousting former District Attorney McAllister from the trial—the trial was to have begun a week ago, but the newly elected District Attorney Otis D. Babcock asked for a week's delay in order to prepare himself for the case—McAllister appeared today as the prosecutor. McAllister was responsible for the original arrests and indictments and had been defeated for re-election. The local capitalist press and the business-men's associations had been demanding that special funds be authorized to retain McAllister, and they have now succeeded.

Leo Gallagher, attorney for the International Labor Defense, raised constitutional objections to McAllister, but the judge, Del M. Lemon, waved them aside. Albert Goldman, attorney for the Non-Partisan Defense, pointed out to the court the evidences of mob spirit, but the motion was denied.

Gallagher charged that McAllister's apparently small salary is being supplemented by funds raised by the local bankers among themselves.

Gallagher, for the International Labor Defense, and Goldman, for the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, are cooperating in the courtroom, consulting together and dividing the work between themselves. The Communist Party and the Socialist Party have accepted proposals made by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense for setting up a joint committee on which all the political and defense organizations will be represented and which will take over the conducting of the case. Final settlement of the character and scope of the joint committee will be made at a meeting on Saturday.

3,000 in N.Y. Biscuit Strike

Three thousand workers of the National Biscuit Company, New York branch of the Inside Bakery Workers Federal Union, are out on strike to break the union splitting tactics of the company. The strike was called in sympathy with the Philadelphia workers and now includes the York, Pa., the Atlanta, Ga., and Newark plants, some 7,000 workers in all.

Every Man Out
The New York strike is a fighting strike. Every man in the plant is out, including the truck drivers, whom the company unionized by its own cheating tactics. The workers are showing remarkable militancy for an eight months' old union. A strong picket line has the factory sewed up, picketing has been extended to stores throughout

Links G.P.U. with Kirov Assassination

The following article by Leon Trotsky, dealing with the Kirov assassination and the infamous attempts of the Stalin regime to connect Trotsky with this assassination is of the utmost significance and should be carefully read and studied by all revolutionary workers. It throws the searchlight on the system responsible for the assassination of Kirov and the subsequent executions. The remarks made concerning the French Socialists and the Humanite can be applied with equal force to their American counterparts and the Daily Worker.—Ed.

By LEON TROTSKY
After the inevitable day's delay, I received a Paris newspaper of December 28, containing extracts from the indictment, with a commentary by one Duclos. As both the extracts and the commentary originate from the G.P.U. there is no need to enter into a discussion with hired lackeys. It will suffice for us to disclose the plans of their masters.

Just as one could have expected, the indictment doesn't mention the Zinoviev-Kamenyev group by so much as a word. In other words: the initial amalgam fell apart into dust.

However, concurrently it has fulfilled its task by psychologically preparing for another amalgam: in the indictment there emerges suddenly—suddenly, for naive people—the name of Trotsky. Nikolai, he murderer of Kirov, was—according to his confession—in contact with a consul of a foreign power. During one of Nikolai's visits to the consulate, the consul gave him 5,000 roubles for expenses. Nikolai adds, "He told me that he can establish contact with Trotsky, if I give him a letter to Trotsky from the group." And that is all. Period!

The indictment does not subsequently return to this episode. It must also be remarked that Nikolai made his first avowal concerning the foreign consul and his offer to transmit a letter to Trotsky only on the 20th day after his arrest. Manifestly, the examining magistrate was compelled to assist the terrorist's memory in the course of twenty days in order to extract from him such precious evidence!

But let us skip that. Let us allow that the evidence is authentic. Let us moreover allow that the consul in question does actually exist in the flesh. Let us allow that he established contact with a terrorist group (there have been such instances in history). But how and why does my name suddenly appear here?

Is it, perhaps, because the terrorist group was seeking contact with Trotsky? No, even the G.P.U. does not dare to assert this. Perhaps Trotsky was seeking contact with the terrorist group? No, the indictment does not dare say this either. The consul himself was the one to assume the initiative and while giving Nikolai 5,000 roubles on the eve of the terrorist act which was being prepared, he requested a letter addressed to Trotsky. This is the sole deposition—a truly astounding piece of evidence made by Nikolai.

The personality of the "consul" at once stands revealed in glaring light. The "consul" is wide-awake! The "consul" is at his post! The "consul" requires a tiny document, a letter from the terrorists financed by him to—Trotsky. Did the conspire these issues clearly and keep the workers from being misled by vague promises.

There is a splendid group of young comrades here. After our meeting, when we were having coffee and tea (yes, both!) in a restaurant, they sang labor and revolutionary songs. The branch has a chorus. New York and other districts take notice! That's an idea for us. And we should have a song book.

On for Hamilton!
HAMILTON, Ont.—This is the most highly industrialized town, in proportion to the population, in Canada. But the labor and radical movement is weak. The discontent of the workers expresses itself in voting for "friends of labor" of the A. F. of L. stripe.

Yet there is some radical activity. A small but lively branch of the W. P. of Canada vigorously pushes its propaganda.

Our meeting here was not large, but the workers showed by their 25 questions after our speeches how eager they are for help in forming a revolutionary program.

TONAWANDA, N. Y.—Back to the United States! In a rather bleak hall in this industrial center hangs a charter of an A. F. of L. central trades council, and around it half a dozen local charters—of union locals long since defunct. Here an unemployed organization met last year, under the influence of a Democratic politician. A couple of our comrades were expelled, for being too radical. It, too, is now dead.

In this hall, on Sunday afternoon, we talked to a group of deeply interested workers about what might be in the U. S. and of labor's road to power.

When we had finished, one of these workers said, "Send a young comrade up here as an organizer, and I'll see that he gets a bed and three squares a day."

Muste, Cannon In Canada; Find Workers Party Active There

Making a couple of preliminary visits to Canada, A. J. Muste, national secretary of the Workers Party of the United States, and James P. Cannon, editor of the New Militant, have launched their tour to present the W. P. program to the workers of the country.

First reports from Comrades Muste and Cannon tell of a growing militancy among Canadian workers, and of Tory Premier Bennett's "new deal" gestures to try to halt this ferment.

In Toronto the Workers Party of Canada, sister organization to the W. P. of the U.S., has an important and widening influence. In Hamilton, Ont., where labor has long been conservative, and in Tonawanda, N. Y., where as recently as last year a Democratic politician dominated the unemployed organization, workers listened eagerly to the message of the Workers Party.

From week to week the New Militant will follow Comrades Muste and Cannon in their tour across the country.

By A. J. MUSTE
TORONTO, Ont.—The first stop Comrade Cannon and I are making on our tour to present the Workers Party program to the workers of the United States is in Canada! This we may take as a symbol of international working class solidarity and a prophecy of an international Workers' Republic.

Speak to 400
For our mass meeting here more than 400 workers crowded the Labor Room, notwithstanding the fact that the Communist party staged a rival meeting. The workers stayed until almost midnight, asking questions. They showed intense interest in recent events in the Soviet Union; Comrade Cannon's replies completely silenced the Communist party members of the audience.

The Canadian Worker admits that two Ukrainian workers who went to Russia, one deported from Canada for C. P. activities, were recently executed by the Communist party in the S.U.

The Workers Party of Canada has a flourishing branch here, another in nearby Hamilton, and in Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver, with contacts in other towns. Its Program of Action includes: 1) a $1,500 fund to enable it to issue a weekly organ; 2) a tour by Secretary Jack MacDonald in the spring; 3) a national conference following the tour.

Here in Toronto, our W. P. comrades are the leading influence in a promising unemployed movement. At the office of Vapna Sans, a bi-weekly Finnish paper, we found Comrade Hero Boman of New York translating the Declaration of Principles of the W.P.U.S., which is running in the paper.

Canada's "New Deal"
There is excitement here over radio broadcasts of the Tory premier, R. B. Bennett. This conservative politician is adopting "la-ssez-faire, old-style capitalism" is dead and advocating social insurance, "fairer distribution of income" (without very specific suggestions), control of stock speculation, etc. The fact that a Tory must come out for such a program is a measure of the revolt stirring among the masses.

In the United States we have seen what a "new deal" really means to workers. Here Bennett seems to be taking the wind out of the Liberal party sails on the eve of election. Even the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, social-democratic farmer-labor party, finds it hard to criticize Bennett's program; there is even talk of a "national" cabinet, with the possibility that the C.C.F. leader, J. S. Woodworth, and Bennett will yet do a Stanley Baldwin-Ramsay MacDonald brother act.

Opportunity for W. P.
All this means there is a real opportunity for the W. P. of Canada, as the Marxist party able to analalyze these issues clearly and keep the workers from being misled by vague promises.

There is a splendid group of young comrades here. After our meeting, when we were having coffee and tea (yes, both!) in a restaurant, they sang labor and revolutionary songs. The branch has a chorus. New York and other districts take notice! That's an idea for us. And we should have a song book.

FROM THE FIRING LINE

Judge Wins Picket Trial

ALLENTOWN, Pa. Jan. 14.—R. W. Iobst, notorious anti-labor judge, upheld the police court conviction of four of the six workers arrested on Oct. 29 at the strike of the Frezzer Shirt Co. when the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Unemployed League joined forces in mass picket lines to defy Mayor Fred Lewis' proclamation limiting picket lines to ten strikers.

Cases against Frank Kirsh and Bill Reich were dropped as the charges against them—"exceeding the number of pickets" and "organizing on the street"—were declared illegal when the similar case of Larry Heimbach was appealed to a higher court by the American Civil Liberties Union. The other men were charged with "disorderly conduct" and had been assessed fines of $50 by the police court.

The case of John Beisel, Workers Party member, came up first. After hearing the evidence the judge asked:

"Are you the Beisel that makes trouble at evictions?"

"I was formerly chairman of the Lehigh County Unemployment League Eviction Committee," explained Beisel.

"Verdict upheld," ordered the judge.

The verdicts against James Muthard of the Unemployed League and Joe Munk and Frank Bennis of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers were also upheld but the fines were reduced from $50 to $10.

Police charged the defendants with calling them "rum hounds," "flat feet" and other abusive names. At the police court hearing, witnesses testified that a cop who was obviously drunk started the fracas by deliberately insulting pickets and clubbing them when they protested. Stralinists On Firing - Line

NEW YORK.—Will you please print this as an item from the Firing Line.

The Communist Party made a dying start in its fight on capitalism in Harlem last Thursday, Jan. 10.

Two hefty members of that party attacked and beat up A. Gonzalez who was passing out leaflets for a meeting on "War and the Unemployed Worker."

Gonzalez was standing near Fifth Avenue and 115th Street passing out the handbills on an anti-war meeting to be held the following evening at 143 E. 103rd Street, under the auspices of the Harlem branch of the new Workers Party, when the two men approached him from the rear and knocked him down. The men ran and disappeared in the Astoria Workers Club near by, where the Communist Party was holding a meeting.

Unemployed workers here have had sad experience with the Unemployed Council in various false promises—first as the Unemployed Council, then as the Unemployed Council and now as the Unemployed Protective Association.

Interest outside the ranks of the unemployed has been quickened by the entrance of the League into New Haven. Students in economics at Yale University and a joint meeting of all classes in the New Haven Labor College heard Montross explain the purposes of the League and appeal for support by the organized employed in two meetings held on January 9. Trade union support was speeded when a representative of the Rubber Workers Federal Union in Akron told New Haven trade unionists of the unity of employed and unemployed achieved in Ohio.

Verdicts against James Muthard of the Unemployed League and Joe Munk and Frank Bennis of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers were also upheld but the fines were reduced from $50 to $10.

Police charged the defendants with calling them "rum hounds," "flat feet" and other abusive names. At the police court hearing, witnesses testified that a cop who was obviously drunk started the fracas by deliberately insulting pickets and clubbing them when they protested. The Party at Work

BOSTON BRANCH TAKES LEAD IN GETTING NEW MEMBERS

Reports from branches indicate that point one on the party convention Program of Action to double the membership in the next six months will be more than fulfilled.

Boston in Lead

The Boston branch appears to be in the lead. It is already very close within the actual doubling of its membership. The branch has worked out a program of public meetings under party auspices and it is making arrangements also for speakers to appear at workers groups and student group meetings.

On January 25 Comrade Shachtman will speak at a Lenin memorial meeting. Sidney Ilook is tentatively scheduled to speak before a student group on February 8 with the expectation to remain in Boston and to address a general public meeting the following Sunday.

In the middle west the Minneapolis branch is again in the lead. We have not yet a full report of the number of new members admitted since our party convention, but a perusal of reports on hand show several new applicants accepted at each branch meeting. At a meeting on January 3, seven applications were received.

The branch is about to move into new headquarters and then to bring forward more effectively its program of public meetings and educational activities. It started off with a meeting addressed by Comrade Norris on the subject "Why I left the Socialist Party and joined the Workers Party."

Active in Strike

Most important, however, are the practical activities in the class struggle, a field in which the Minneapolis comrades have already attained a splendid record. All branch members were assigned duties in the present garage workers strike. Once again the labor movement of the city is animated by a strike militantly conducted and bitterly fought by the Citizens Alliance.

Once again our Minneapolis comrades are actively engaged, doing the part in the leadership of the strike and taking their posts on the picket line.

L. A. BRANCH INCREASES 30 PERCENT AT EACH MEETING

LOS ANGELES.—Enthusiasm is running high in the recently fused branches of the Workers Party of the U. S. with an approximate increase in membership of 30 per cent occurring at every meeting. A new branch, to be known as the Southside Branch, is in process of formation in the Goodyear section of the city. Payments on the Party Foundation Fund are coming in promptly from friends and sympathizers of the W. P. as well as from members.

Plan Mass Meeting

A huge mass meeting is being planned for Friday evening, Feb. 1, at Walker's Auditorium. There will be several speakers including Sam Meyers, Charley Curtis, and Dave Harris of the National Unemployed League. Among the subjects to be discussed will be "The Message of the Workers Party," a report from the delegates to the National Unity Convention and an address on "The Only Way Out."

Evening classes are now under way at the Los Angeles headquarters, 1785 East 1st Street. They include classes on "Working Class Economics" given on Thursday evenings at 8 P.M. by E. Everett, and at 8 P.M. on the same evening a class on "Imperialism—America in the World Arena."

DISTRICT COMMITTEE STARTS TRADE UNION CAMPAIGN

NEW YORK.—The New York District Committee has undertaken a campaign to organize the trade union work of the Party in this district. The first step in this direction will be taken at a general membership meeting to be held Sunday, January 20, at 3 P.M. at the Irving Plaza Hall. At this meeting the trade union policies of the Party and the concrete tasks before the New York district will be the subject for discussion. Only members of the Party can attend this meeting.

This meeting is to be followed, according to the decision of the District Industrial Committee, by a week-end conference of all the Party members who are members of trade unions, and also close Party sympathizers.

This conference will be held the following week, that is, Saturday afternoon, January 26 and Sunday the 27. Sympathizers who wish to attend this conference are to apply to the District Office for permission. The problems of the various trades in which our Party members are involved will be discussed and concrete policies elaborated.

Stalinists On Firing - Line

NEW YORK.—Will you please print this as an item from the Firing Line.

The Communist Party made a dying start in its fight on capitalism in Harlem last Thursday, Jan. 10.

Two hefty members of that party attacked and beat up A. Gonzalez who was passing out leaflets for a meeting on "War and the Unemployed Worker."

Gonzalez was standing near Fifth Avenue and 115th Street passing out the handbills on an anti-war meeting to be held the following evening at 143 E. 103rd Street, under the auspices of the Harlem branch of the new Workers Party, when the two men approached him from the rear and knocked him down. The men ran and disappeared in the Astoria Workers Club near by, where the Communist Party was holding a meeting.

League Pickets 13 Townships

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio.—Flying squadrons formed by the Wood County Unemployed League early Thursday morning, January 10, struck every relief project in Wood County, Ohio. Hundreds of relief workers, members of the Ohio Unemployed League, named mass picket lines in thirteen townships of the county, in a demand for 15 dollars a week minimum wage on relief jobs, in the first drive against the new national forced labor program which is aimed at placing the unemployed to work for the equivalent or less of the present direct relief allowance.

Using the county house at Bowling Green as general strike headquarters, over 1,000 relief workers from all over the county met Thursday evening to lay the plans for the continuance of the strike and to arrange for mass demonstrations at the county relief offices to secure relief for the strikers. The meeting was addressed by Sam Pollock, vice president of the N.W.

Subway Men In Revolt Against Co. "Brotherhood"

What has happened to the subway workers who two years ago took a 10 percent wage cut without a squawk?

The company "Brotherhood" has turned out to be not so hot, after all!

The men on the subways of New York City are now engaged in organizing a union of their own, an independent union which will take in all who are employed in passenger transportation in the entire city.

From 1905 the subway men have tried many times to better working conditions and get more pay. Sometimes it was through company unions, sometimes through the A. F. of L., and at other times through no organization whatever. Several times they went out on strike, but without proper preparation or leadership. They were sold out by their leaders, Cochrane of the I.R.T. company union, who threw three or four hundred motor-men on the street to look for other jobs, and by Shea of the Amalgamated, who collected the dues and disappeared.

Company "Brotherhood"

Subway workers are forced to belong to company unions. On the I.R.T. this union is called the "Brotherhood of Interborough Rapid Transit Co. Employees." This organization never did anything for the men as a whole, but the delegates take up individual grievances. If a man is punished by suspension, the delegate of his local may try to get the time cut down. Or if a man is fired, he may get back to work in two or three weeks, or get transferred to a different department. But when the company wants to put over anything on the men, it is done through the same delegates.

One afternoon, in December 1932, the men were going to their lockers to wash up after work. They saw in the evening papers the announcement that they had voluntarily voted themselves a 10 percent cut in wages, ($2,750,000 annually) and that the I.R.T. Company thanked them heartily. They had not heard anything about the cut. It was the trusty delegates who had done the dirty work.

Another Example

Another example was the famous, or rather infamous Pension Plan of July 1934.

It seems that there were and still are several hundred old employees and company officials who are getting from $4,000 to $50,000 and even $60,000 per year each, and they were old enough, or almost old enough to be retired on a pension. These few hundred men, although forming a very small percentage of the total number of employees (14,500) take up an enormous percentage of the total payroll.

District of the Ohio Unemployed League. Ralph B. Kille, president of the Wood County Unemployed League, acted as chairman.

LEAGUE'S STRIKE IS FIRST ONE IN MONROE COUNTY

MONROE, Mich.—The first strike in the history of Monroe County was pulled early Monday morning, Jan. 14, when the Erie-Lesalle local of the newly organized Monroe County Unemployed League threw mass picket lines around two work relief projects in Erie Township and closed down the jobs 100 percent. From its very beginning the strike was marked by splendid militancy, women as well as men marching on the line and forcing the few scabs to lay down their tools. One woman was injured while trying to take a shovel away from a scab.

At two meetings held the previous night, which were addressed by Ted Selander and Art Preis, members of the Workers Party, the new League members voted 100 percent to close down the jobs, in a demand for a 20 percent increase in wages and the firing of Ray Gonyer, foreman on the Yeller Drain Project, who has appeared on the job on several occasions with a concealed revolver.

Does Industrial Food Union Support Dutch Shultz Gang?

By JOSEPH ZACK

The situation that prevails inside the Communist Party is reflected in the unions it controls. The workers believe that the party fraction in the unions discusses their problems and then brings recommendations to them for approval.

In reality that is not what happens. The leader of the party fraction lays down the law, then there is more or less latitude in discussion—less in the need trades and more in the foodworkers' unions.

Authority to decide policy is thus so concentrated that what results is a one-man union. Those who object are either "tamed" or eventually eliminated.

The only thing that Rubin, Gold, Potasch, etc., really have to worry

National Progressive Movement In Trade Union Is Party Task

By ARNE SWABECK

Trade Union Secretary of W.P.

Definite trends in a progressive direction are apparent in a number of trade unions, and especially in the unions in the basic and in the mass production industries. In practically every instance determined support from the rank and file membership has followed spontaneously. But so far it is possible to speak only of trends, here and there taking on an organized form. The specific features that will give to these trends the character of a movement are still lacking. Unified plans and clear perspectives have not yet been brought forward. It is in view of these conditions that the Workers Party convention in its Program of Action laid special emphasis on the creation of a national progressive movement in the trade unions.

Progressives In Steel

In the steel workers union the progressive group which came forward last summer is now renewing its activities and it is now also enriched by one more valuable experience. The group is demanding that the union president, Mike Tighe, reconvene the convention adjourned last summer to force action on a number of grievances dating back to the Weirton case. Of course, the essential issue is still union recognition; but the prospects that Tighe will agree to reconvene the convention are exceedingly slim. Apparently the progressive group understands this and it has therefore called its own progressive conference to be held during the first week of February. Reports indicate that the progressives feel that now is the time for action in view of the present upturn in the industry due largely to the heavy orders from the automobile manufacturers.

Auto Workers

From the automobile workers' federal unions, which have suffered a serious setback since the sell-out agreement was concluded last summer, comes word also of incipient revolts. Recently a number of Detroit federal locals decided, in face of an edict by William Green to the contrary, to get together in a conference and discuss their problems of organization. In other cities federal local unions have begun to make demands for the creation of city central councils of federal unions. Thus the direction of these trends is unmistakable. They tend in a progressive direction although still on a very elementary level. Clarity of perspectives has not yet been arrived at. But this is usually the way that progressive movements begin, centering at their inception around the most elementary issues of organization. With the pressure of economic necessity these trends are bound to advance toward a greater clarity of objectives and take on organized form. They are bound to spread because of the fact that everywhere the problem exists of finding a way out of the conditions of stagnation imposed by the trade union bureaucrats.

Period of Calm

At present the whole trade union movement is in a state of calm before the storm of new strikes and new struggles. Last year in some of the local strike situations, not only did the progressive tendencies become pronounced, but in Minneapolis, as one example, the truck drivers strike saw a conscious left wing in the leadership. Toledo followed this example and on the Pacific Coast the left wing forces had a powerful influence in the harbor workers unions prior to the San Francisco general strike.

Yet the reactionary trade union officials appear on a whole as strongly entrenched as ever. That is what appears on the surface. When looking beneath the surface to the undercurrents of rank and file discontent that breaks through from time to time it will become noticeable very quickly that the entrenchment is not so secure. This fact will undoubtedly become much clearer in the coming contests between progressives and reactionaries over the immediate and pressing issues of extension of union organization and of union recognition to be attained through the organized mass power of the workers—the only way it can be attained.

Under the conditions of monopoly capitalism organization of the unorganized in the basic industries is possible only through fierce struggle against the owners of the powerful corporations and their government servants. In some instances the workers in these industries have already proven that they will respond most readily and that they do not at all fear the struggle. At the same time the trade union officialdom has demonstrated just as clearly its fear of any heavy influx into the unions of the healthy proletarian elements much more than it fears the aggressive onslaughts of the employers. It shrinks from organization of the unorganized in fear of the consequences of the struggle. The trade union officialdom knows that rapid growth and expansion of the unions also means a fundamental change in their composition and character, leaving room for demands for action and demands for leadership; leaving room for rank and file rebellions.

Counting on this officialdom to give leadership in the organization of the unorganized would be hopeless. Nay more, it would be inconceivable that the trade union organization of the basic industries can be undertaken seriously with this gentry in a position to block every move and to enter into treacherous agreements with the owners of monopoly capital of the kind that makes an aggressive policy of organization impossible. Certainly, unless there is an effective counterbalance created, an effective progressive movement, real prospects of success would be very slim.

The Job Before the Progressives

This is the job for the progressive and left wing elements to tackle. It is a job of large dimensions.

It is a job of large dimensions. It requires an intransigent fight against the reactionary officials who block the road and a determined fight against all the obstacles to organization laid down by the well-fortified employers. But it is necessary to repeat: The left wing and progressive forces will not get very far without a clear understanding that they are called upon to lead and that conditions are ripe for such a leadership. Now is the time for action. The progressive forces owe to the trade union movement that they organize themselves and work out their plans in common. Their movement may start on a local or otherwise circumscribed scale, but to be really effective it must be national in scope and unified in character, interlocking from industry to industry and from union to union.

The problem before them is first of all to chart a new course for the trade union movement and to gird up their loins for a serious struggle. A militant class struggle policy and leadership in the trade union movement is the objective. This the Workers Party will aim to sponsor. The party will endeavor to reach an agreement with the progressive elements to attain the elementary objectives, agreements honestly arrived at and with the pledge to carry them out in common action. Some of the progressives may falter and weaken in fear of reprisals by the hostile trade union officials, but this fear will be far outweighed by the needs for the building of the progressive movement and the pressing needs for action. Today there is not such a national movement in existence and its actual creation represents for us an unpostponable task.

Arrest Union Local In Labor Frame-Up

DETROIT, Mich.—In one of the rawest frame-ups the labor movement of this city has seen in many years the Prosecuting Attorney's office has charged Meyer Weiner, member of Jewish Bakers Union Local 78, with the murder of Harry Haftka, son of Joseph Haftka, operator of a Jewish bakery at 4322 Joy Road, against whom the union has been conducting a strike for several months. Harry Haftka was shot to death near his home on the night of December 13, 1934.

In addition to Weiner, seventeen other union men, practically the entire membership of the local, have been arrested. Four of the arrested reported to the court that they were severely beaten by the police.

The manner in which the war-sions and requires a fight on two fronts. It requires an intransigent fight against the reactionary officials who block the road and a determined fight against all the obstacles to organization laid down by the well-fortified employers. But it is necessary to repeat: The left wing and progressive forces will not get very far without a clear understanding that they are called upon to lead and that conditions are ripe for such a leadership. SUPREME COURT DELIBERATES

DEBTS AND GOLD
HUGHES IS SHREWD
PERPETUATING RULE OF RICH

The judicial arm of the American capitalist government has played an inconsequential role during the period of crisis and the NIA. The august judges, than whom there would seem to be no higher authority but God himself, have felt rather aggrieved at being so completely eclipsed by the executive power in the hands of Roosevelt. But such power on the part of the executive authority becomes inevitable whenever a major crisis threatens the very foundations of bourgeois rule. There is nothing, in this respect, so firmly established concerning capitalist society, as that the boss class will violate every single law set up by itself, if these laws stand in the way of the fundamental interests or the continued existence of the ruling class. For that matter the ordinary "rights" won by the workers under bourgeois democracy are violated with impunity day by day. In regard to such violations of workers' rights by the exploiting class, the whole system of courts, including the Supreme Court when the interests of the class in power as a whole are involved, becomes merely a cloak for the proper veiling of class justice from the naive vision of the masses.

But the courts also exist, not merely in their role of judicial means of oppression of the exploited classes by the oppressors, but also to "keep the arena" where property interests come into conflict, causing, at times, deep-going differences within the ruling class itself. In such cases the Supreme Court may be called upon to render a decision generally in accord with the historic interests of the upper strata of the ruling class. The Supreme Court is now "deliberating" over the government's abrogation of its gold contracts when it went off the gold standard.

Case of the Gold Standard

It was to the interests of the capitalists, in order to maintain their power and to prevent an even worse collapse of their system than actually occurred, to scale down the entire debt structure within American economy. It was also to the interests of the big financiers to lay the greatest burden of the crisis on the backs of the working class and the petty bourgeoisie. By depreciating the currency these aims were achieved.

Such depreciation amounted to wholesale expropriation of the wealth in the form of savings, common stock, insurance, etc., held by the small people. The big financiers were capable of protecting their own interests so that their wealth was not expropriated at all or to a minor extent as compared with the other classes. Furthermore, going "off gold" or depreciating the currency met the demands of competition for foreign trade due to the money manipulations of other countries. For the working class there was involved a subtle wage cut by this process.

In view of all these effects of the abrogation of the gold clause by the U. S. Government, corresponding to distinct needs of the bourgeoisie, can anyone be under the illusion that the Supreme Court would dare to declare the government's act unconstitutional?

Majesty of the Law

In reality the Supreme Court is putting on a show, is covering with the necessary amount of formality and formality the foregone conclusion of its decision. Hughes has no intention to bring about the chaos that would result from an adverse decision.

The Constitution Itself

The Marxian who knows the history of the American Constitution itself, is well aware that this sacred document is nothing but the legalization of the capture of power after the American Revolution by the rich, exploiting section of the colonial society, destined to become the modern capitalists. The Constitution was designed to protect private property, to prevent interference with this private property by the majority of the people. In short, the Constitution was designed to perpetuate the rule of the rich minority against any attacks by the future proletariat and petty bourgeoisie. Surely a "yardstick" to be respected by this same proletariat which it was designed to keep from attaining to power!

Huey Long's Labor Record; He Says Mussolini Indorsed His Plan

This is the third and concluding article on Huey Long, demagogue and dictator of Louisiana. Next week comrade Eastman will begin a series of three articles on Father Coughlin.

By DAN EASTMAN

It is not by chance that Huey Long, the most grasping of "practical" politicians, has a program distinguished for its impracticability. Huey Long is not interested in a real redistribution of wealth; he is only interested in appealing to the most ignorant prejudices of the backward sections of the population.

He is not interested in the welfare of the workers, but solely in the welfare of Huey Long.

To increase his power and influence, he is willing to promise anything and does.

As for carrying out the promises? That's another story.

His Labor Record

Huey Long has never in any of his writings or speeches given support to union labor. He has never given support in his actions to union labor. So far as he is concerned union labor does not exist.

On the construction of the very roads and public buildings which Huey "gave" to the workers, scab labor was employed wherever possible.

During numerous strikes in Louisiana Long has never given support, or even sympathy, to the strikers. During the longshoremen's strike in New Orleans, last year, Huey Long courts issued the usual injunctions in restraint of the right to picket.

"Every Man a King"

There has been no improvement of the status of the working man in his state where "Every Man is King."

An example: In New Orleans cotton mills the wage scale was $3.30 per 56 hour week before the NRA. The workers were forced to pay two dollars of this sum in rent for company owned shacks. After the NRA the scale was raised from 6c per hour to 20c to 30c per hour, but the hours were cut to eighteen. At the same time that wages were thus raised from $3.30 to $4.50 per week, however, the rent was raised from $2.00 to $3.00 per week, so that the total gain was 14c per week for the workers.

This example is a bad enough indictment of the NRA; but consider that Huey Long was dictator of Louisiana, both before and after the NRA. During that time he did nothing to aid the workers in the cotton mills, either when they struck or when they were at work. The NRA raised wages 14c per week; Huey Long raised them not at all.

Long's attitude toward union labor is best and most completely revealed in one incident.

Suppresses Pamphlet

Last year a New Orleans labor editor, whose name I omit, printed at his own expense a pamphlet on Long's labor record, an expose of the Kingfish. The pamphlet never saw the light of day.

Two racketeers threatened the editor with violence, not against his person, but against his printshop, the means of support of himself and his family, unless the pamphlet was destroyed. Rather than take the chance of becoming poor in the state where "Every Man is King" the editor, out of consideration for his family, complied.

Negroes Are Oppressed

One of the most oppressed classes in Louisiana are the Negroes, who number 750,000. They are subject to the most degrading conditions, to Jim-crow discrimination, they are excluded from juries, are prevented from voting, are deprived of even the smallest show in the government that oppresses them.

Huey Long has done nothing for the Negroes in Louisiana. They are still excluded from the law and from the vote. Long himself indulges in Jim-crowism.

For instance: During the so-called vice investigation of New Orleans, Long called a city wide conference of ministers. Two Negro preachers, who were naive enough to take him at his word, turned up for the conference; they were barred. There are plenty of other instances of actual personal discrimination by the Kingfish himself, against Negro reporters, doctors, etc.

Lynchings

There is no better index of the attitude of the state, and of the oppression of the people, both Negro and white, than the number of lynchings. In 1933, the last year for which I have complete figures, Louisiana tied with Georgia and South Carolina for first place in the number of lynchings.

Huey Uses Troops

There is no class poorer than the unemployed and the "unemployables". Of the latter there are 15,000 in the city of New Orleans alone. Last August they were cut off without a penny of relief. When a hunger march descended on Huey's capital it was met by the National Guard, the leaders were arrested, and the marchers dispersed.

Huey Long failed to approve a bill providing a meager $10,000 (66c each) for these workers, as a temporary measure of relief. Instead the legislature, Huey Long's legislature, turned the care of the unemployed over to the parishes, unburdening the problem of the poor on the poor.

(President Roosevelt stole a trick from Huey when he returned 5,000,000 unemployed to state charity. It's all the old army game of passing the buck, with the workers getting it in the neck every time.)

Relief Is Low

In Orleans, now a Long city, has never provided one penny for relief (New York City pays some $5,000,000 a month), every cent coming from federal and parish resources.

As a consequence of Huey's great concern for the poor man the average relief in Louisiana is two to five dollars a week; in a state where the legislature appropriated more than $100,000,000 for the construction of vote getting roads.

Like all demagogues Huey talks big and does little.

What is Huey's future?

In an issue of The American Progress, his paper, there appeared a little box notice:

"Mussolini says Long is right on sharing the wealth. Premier Benito Mussolini, who has rapidly risen to the forefront among world statesmen (!) has given his indorsement to the Huey Long plan for redistributing wealth."

The quotation that follows, however, contains no reference to the Senator. The important fact is that Long's paper, and by inference Long himself, publishes with pride an indorsement from Mussolini.

There are points of similarity between Huey and the Italian murderer. Both are experienced politicians, both are ruthlessly ambitious, both are great popular orators, who conceal the continuing oppression of capitalism under a cloak of fine phrases about abolishing poverty. What Mussolini has is the backing of capital, and a completely crushed labor movement. What Huey Long needs is—

Mechanization In Steel
Bodes Uncertain Future

Fewer Workets Needed in Modern High-Speed Mills -- Companies Contract for Eight More

By FRED RAYBURN

NEW CASTLE, Pa.—Fourteen steel producers, representing 83 per cent of the ingot-making capacity of the country, report an aggregate deficit of $19,023,200 for the third quarter of 1934, indicating that the net deficit for the entire industry was close to $22,919,000.

Steel workers in the Youngstown, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Gary and Detroit areas did not have to read these figures. They knew—not in terms of dollars or cents or trips to Europe, which is what the deficit means to steel mill owners. They knew in terms of bread and butter, of milk for their children, shoes for their wives.

A stagger system of one or two days' work a week, with the speed-up still operating full-force to keep down employment costs, brings full realization to workers of their plight under a dying capitalism.

See Uncertain Future

And now the steel workers, harried almost to the breaking point by the uncertainties of the past few years, must watch the steel mills carry on and increase the process of mechanization, and know that insecure as their jobs have been in the past, in the future they face the certainty that thousands of them will have no place in this industry.

If the mills were being operated to supply the needs of the workers, this would not frighten them. It would mean that the back-breaking work of the steel industry would be done by machines, and the men would be freed to provide other goods.

But as long as the mills are run with profits for the owners as the first and chief consideration, these workers know that this mechanization means only unemployment and misery; for with millions being replaced in other industries there is no place for them to go.

Erecting Modern Mills

Contracts for high-speed modern mills have been let by various steel companies. These mills, costing between $6,000,000 and $12,000,000, are capable through a continuous operation of producing 2,200 tons of 75-inch sheet steel in 24 hours, or 680,000 tons a year. Compared with an ordinary hot sheet mill with eight plants, rated at 60,000 tons a year, and you have a clear picture of the future for those workers who as yet are employed in old-type mills.

Ford Motors has one of the new mills in the process of installation. The Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co. is building one in Youngstown, Ohio. The Great Lakes Division of the National Steel Company has let a contract for a similar mill at Detroit; Carnegie Steel (United States Steel), at Youngstown.

Brings Loss of Jobs

It is significant to note that the Inland Steel Company, which reported a profit of $3,108,358 for the first nine months of 1934, when most of the large companies showed deficits, is equipped with the latest in tin plate machinery, which not only produces much larger quantities with fewer men, but results in a higher quality. And this results, not in a better life for the workers, as it should, but in their losing their jobs.

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation is considering erection of one of these new mills either at Sparrows Point, Md., or Lackawanna (Buffalo), New York.

Steel Towns Passing

These conclusions to be drawn from the recent developments are that complete mills will become obsolete. The towns that grew around these mills will in turn become desolate and barren. These new type mills will employ a small working force, who cannot possibly work steadily as the available market for their product is limited. Then, too, these mills, with their mechanical perfection, require very little experience to operate in contrast to the older types.

Inevitably, some firms will be forced into bankruptcy when they are unable to compete with these highly rationalized mills. The ranks of the unemployed will be swollen by thousands.

Thus what might mean greater comfort and leisure for workers will mean more profits for a few millionaire steel mill owners. The workers can save themselves only by building a society in which machines will be used to serve man—a workers' world.

The Boston Tea Party and The Fears of Sir Hearst

Through his chain of newspapers, William Randolph Hearst, multi-millionaire who lives in California, is engaged in a vicious red baiting campaign against all who oppose capitalism.

The idea that the working class will lead the oppressed population in an uprising against the profit system has set Hearst off on a patriotic crusade. Like Hitler, Hearst wants to abridge workers' rights, and freedom of expression for everybody but the capitalists, and set up a fascist regime. Hearst is doing what every other millionaire and capitalist will do in time. He is speaking for his class—for Fascism.

The following letter, from a comrade in California, recalls some American history, and reminds us again of our revolutionary traditions. The Hearsts have good reason to fear for capitalism and their multi-millions taken from working people.

In the year 1773 the American colonists groaned and muttered under a yoke of taxes—stamp taxes, sugar taxes and the tea tax imposed by the wealthy merchants of England.

Today, in many of the States, sales taxes are a terrific burden to an oppressed working class who every time a loaf of bread is bought, must pay an extra toll to the capitalist.

The people of 1773 knew how to deal with their oppressors. In Boston three tea-ships arrived in the harbor. The towns people would not let the tea be landed. Gov. Hutchinson would not let the ships return without unloading. On the night of December 16, 1773, a party of men jumped aboard the ships, ripped open the chests, and dumped the tea into the harbor. This "Boston Tea Party" cost the East India Company about $75,000.

The British Parliament took speedy action upon receipt of the news of the Boston Tea Party. Seventy-five thousand dollars worth of British property destroyed! That was going too far! The colonists must be shown their place. The port of Boston was to be closed until the tea was paid for, no town meetings held unless the governor o.k'd them, trials for British officers in England.

In 1934 when the longshoremen of San Francisco and the young men and girls in the textile industry struck for their rights against the employers, for better living conditions, what happened? Just like in the Boston Tea Party, the yellow press (owned by the capitalists) cried out: "The strikers are damaging property! Send the troops!" And just as the English troops were sent to quell the colonists, now the militia was called out in the interest of breaking the strikes and protecting the bosses' profits.

Under the guise of "protecting life and property", company thugs shot and killed strikers. In 1775 the Boston Massacre saw 8 colonists shot. Trials in England for English officers who killed the protesting colonists, today lackey judges who do the bidding of the money lords, sentence workers to long terms in prison (like Tom Mooney), electrocute other men fighting for freedom (like Sacco and Vanzetti) and hastily dismiss, or in a circus exhibition, free the big robbers of the people—"Wall

PROGRAM FROM "LA VERITE"

Ed. Note: An event of great importance in the struggle against Fascism in France was the adoption by the Paris District of the Socialist Party of the Program of Action sponsored by the Trotskyist group which recently entered the Socialist Party. The members of this group, known as Bolshevik-Leninists, have conducted a vigorous agitation for their program of action in their newspaper "La Verite" and in the Socialist Party organizations. For the information of our readers we reprint this important document in full as it appeared in La Verite.

THE CRISIS

Capitalism is passing through a crisis against which it cannot stand up except by retrenching its productive capacity in order to adapt it to the capacity of consumption which is more and more narrowing. It has exhausted its possibility of reform.

The reactionary offensive and the utilization of fascism are not the results of a revolutionary offensive; in France they are the reply to socialist reformism, itself incompatible with the existence of capitalism if it is to be a "reformism" serious and logical. It is because it has entered the stage of retrogression and decadence that capitalism opposes us with a growing resistance. Capitalism is forced to substitute for a regime of parliamentary and bourgeois democracy a regime of strong force resting on the army, the police, the armed fascist forces, and to crush the democratic conquests, by the suppression of the rights acquired by the workers (organizations, press, demonstrations, meetings, etc.).

The Ministry of Flandin is but a variant of this regime. Under these conditions the task of preserving and extending the democratic conquests cannot be assured merely by parliamentary and democratic means. These methods must be paralleled by extra-parliamentary struggles of the masses. Either the reaction will crush the workers as in Germany, Austria and Spain or the masses will overthrow capitalism and take power.

To expose the illusion that parliamentary means are sufficient for a defense of democratic conquests, to guide the will of the masses for preserving their conquests in a struggle for their own power—this is the task of the Socialist Party. The problem is posed whether socialism or fascism will arrive at power first.

The present parliament has betrayed the interests of the people who have chosen it. It no longer represents their will. It must go.

WE DEMAND ITS DISSOLUTION.

WE WANT POWER.

How to Bring the Masses on to the Road of the Decisive Struggle for Power.

1. The party must be in a state of permanent mobilization: daily propaganda must be carried on (distribution of leaflets, meetings at factories, at workers' centers).

A parliamentary group must be at the disposal of the Federations for systematic agitation in workers' quarters and at factory gates.

2. The unity of the workers' front must be on the broadest basis. It is necessary that this unity be effected around central slogans common to large proletarian organizations and capable of rallying the big mass of the workers, of involving in the struggle step by step even the most hesitant layers (peasants and middle-classes) which will gain their experience in the fight, will abandon illusions and will rally to socialist solutions. That is why the 19th Section believes that the plan of the C.G.T. contains four slogans:—Nationalization of key industries; Control of production; Control of banks; 40 hour week—which should serve as a common basis for the propaganda of the united front, involve the C.G.T. in this united front and give to the popular front an actively revolutionary content by realizing the bloc of all those who today are robbed and exploited by capitalism. The French Socialist Party must cease being the tail-end of the united front, but on this basis must put itself at its head.

To hasten the decisions, to give to the united front a content of action so that those who have to act in common become more firm and decisive, it is necessary:

1. To hold joint meetings between socialist and communist districts.

2. To break all resistance to trade union unity.

The strengthening of the unity of the front will facilitate the realization of the unification of the two parties for revolutionary action.

The Struggle for Power

The Socialist Party which poses seriously the problem of the struggle for power must know how to adapt its tactics and its preparation.

It is necessary that it know how to break the resistance no matter from where it comes.

For that the general strike is the best weapon. It will hinder the revision of the constitution by a capitulating parliament as well as hasten its dissolution.

Between the riots of Feb. 6 and the workers' answer of Feb. 12 too much time elapsed. The time may not be allotted to us in the future!

In the present state of tension the general strike will unleash the forces of the bourgeoisie against the workers. In order to defend themselves the working masses must organize the peoples' militia sufficiently strong numerically and materially to crush the reactionary bands.

The organization of the general strike and the organization of the peoples' militia must embrace volunteers from all the layers of the anti-fascist toiling population.

From this follows the necessity of creating (in accord with all other organizations which will accept it) shop committees and local committees for the general strike which organize locally the militia groups and prepare the days of proletarian power.

Necessity of the regional and national coordination of these committees.

The general strike must have for us, socialists, positive objectives:—The Government of Workers and Peasants—the problem of which will embrace essentially:

a) Convocation of a Constituent Assembly chosen by all the inhabitants over 18 years of age;

b) Disarmament of bourgeois formations;

c) Arming of the workers;

d) Realization of the principal demands of the united front mentioned above.

We Socialists, we must prepare this gigantic struggle, organize the working class step by step so that it can lead it. We must make it understood that even under a hypothesis that a government results from universal suffrage, that once this government decides to apply reforms of structure capable of realizing the demands of the workers, small merchants and the peasantry masses, that it will meet the resistance of the bourgeoisie which will not hesitate in violating its own legality to oppose by force the realization of these measures.

The Party Fund

Building the new party is not a matter of choice. It is a duty imposed upon us by events.

The task is enormous, made more difficult by the disillusionment of the leftward moving elements who looked with hope to the Communist Party and the "Militants" in the Socialist Party. Misled and frustrated by these two parties, the class conscious workers are waiting to see what we, the Workers Party, are going to do.

We must prove our seriousness and earnestness. We must show by concrete work in the class struggle that we can and are willing to give correct leadership in the struggles.

We can do this. But we must have the full support of all who see the problem clearly and know how to answer it.

The first requisite is a party, organized on the basis of democratic centralism, with functioning units throughout the country.

We must bend all our energies toward this end. We must aim a national training school for workers. We must extend and strengthen the unemployment movement; organize the Left-progressive wing in the trade unions; help the Youth consolidate its organization.

HELP BUILD A MASS WORKERS PARTY. CONTRIBUTE TO THE FOUNDATION FUND.

REPORTS FROM BRANCHES

Waukegan, Ill.—The secretary writes: At our last meeting, the unemployed members pledged their 25c assessments and each of the employed members made their pledges. The total equals $25, the sum assigned us by the national office.

Los Angeles, Cal.: Received a quota of $100.00. Has definite pledges of $91. No doubt the balance will be made up by local sympathizers.

Detroit, Mich.: Accepts the quota set, but will be a little late sending in the money due to unemployment in the branch.

The South: This branch has to function underground due to local conditions. However they accept their quota and will do their best to meet it as fast as possible.

Philadelphia, Pa.: Accepts the full quota and has already asked for $70 worth of certificates.

Kansas City, Mo.: Will meet the quota. More than half already pledged.

New York: The following is a detailed report from the New York District. It gives the names of the members who paid on their pledges since the last report printed in the New Militant.

Workers' Security

THE Association of Railway Labor Executives, the leaders of the railroad labor unions of the United States, set a good example the other day when they told Railroad Dictator Eastman to go to hell after he had made a speech saying that putting the 30-hour week into effect would "ruin the railroads". Said the union leaders, responding to pressure from their membership:

"A million unemployed railroad men have to be put to work or they will be ruined."

The Workers Party of the United States supports the struggle for unemployment and other forms of social insurance. But it believes that making this almost the sole object of struggle today, as the Communist Party is doing, is a grave error. The capitalist system must be challenged much more directly and drastically today—challenged with the demand to give the workers jobs!

The Workers Security program of the Workers Party includes the fight for:

1. The 30-hour week at a minimum wage of $30 per week, and in any case without reduction in present weekly pay.
2. Proportionate cash relief for all unemployed workers and farmers pending establishment of a satisfactory social insurance system.
3. A real public works program providing housing for the masses, electrification of farmers' homes, etc.
4. Credits to the Soviet Union which will put American workers to work making automobiles, tractors, machinery of all kinds for the U.S.S.R.

The 30-Hour Week

THE struggle for the six-hour day, the five-day week, with no reduction in pay is taking on new form and new life, and will be reflected in the Seventy-fourth Congress now in session. The agitation for this slogan among the working class in the whole past period of the crisis has gained momentum and now promises to be one of the major issues of the day.

Spokesmen for the exploiters of labor, who in the past raised a cry against immediate relief and social insurance, at last realizing that some form of take deal will have to be adopted, now center their attacks upon the 30-hour week.

The press, the pulpit, the radio and the platform, to say nothing of the economic "experts", are being utilized by the capitalists to save the country from another catastrophe. They assure the people that nothing would be more fatal to recovery, to prosperity, to the United States, and to the welfare of the millions of employed and unemployed workers than the adoption of the 30-hour week. In fact, all of a sudden, they have forgotten their own selfish material interests and are championing the cause of labor—against the 30-hour week.

But we have heard all this before. In the thirties of the last century, just one hundred years ago, when the American workers were struggling against work from sun up to sun down and demanded the 10-hour day, these same arguments were used. Later, in the eighties when the eight-hour day movement gained momentum the same arguments were used.

In 1900 the average work week was 57 hours. By 1929 the process of technical improvement and the class struggle had reduced the average to 50 hours per week. In 1934 the average weekly hours for the country were reduced to 40. Before 1935 the working class should complete the first phase of the struggle for the 30-hour week. By that time the 30-hour week must become a law and the practical gauge for the work week.

Practically the whole labor movement is behind the struggle for the 30-hour week. The only force that bungled the whole question a few years ago was the Communist Party which demanded the seven-hour day, and five-day week. They claimed that the slogan for the six-hour day, the five-day week, with no reduction in pay was counter-revolutionary, and was playing into the hands of Green and Company. Today they are climbing on the band wagon, first through their auxiliary organizations.

What is lacking in the struggle for the 30-hour week is UNITED ACTION. The labor movement is for the 30-hour week but up to the present, in the main, each organization has been fighting by itself, in its own way. The unity of this struggle and a powerful campaign will force through the workers' demands. Unless the workers drive toward this end the bosses and their government will give us a 30-hour week law, as a fake counterpart to their social insurance plan. We have had many laws passed, and many laws are on the statute books, for labor's rights—but these laws are not worth the paper they are written on.

There is no solution of the unemployment problem under capitalism. But immediate relief, social insurance, work relief, and a 30-hour week are needed to prevent the workers from becoming paupers. The most effective and far reaching immediate measure toward this end is the struggle to reduce the hours of work. It is a demand of both the employed and unemployed. It is a demand that readily unites the struggle of the employed and unemployed.

Even in the most promising days of prosperity before 1929 production could not be run 100 percent. Labor was being displaced by the millions. Declining American capitalism will do less.

The reduction of hours is one of the most effective immediate demands. It is realizable, and at the same time involves the exploiters of labor in the greatest contradictions.

Let the working class give notice. Let the working class unite and celebrate the 100th anniversary of the struggle for the 10-hour day by the realization of the 6-hour day, five-day week, with no reduction in pay.

The Saar Plebiscite

IN the plebiscite last Sunday the population of the Saar voted ten to one in favor of reunion with Germany. Out of the total vote cast 476,089 favored the return to Germany, 46,613 favored the status quo and 2,083 voted for France. Accordingly this territory, rich in coal and iron, will return to Germany and come under the ruthless Nazi domination.

What this will mean to its working population is already indicated in the extended arrests of Nazi opponents and the preparations for concentration camps. It is clear that the Nazi hordes will proceed exactly as in Germany, crush all opposition with fire and sword and wipe out all semblance of working class organization, rights and liberties. Another heavy blow has thus been struck against the international working class movement.

Let us not misunderstand this situation, however. The working class itself voted by a majority for reunion with Germany. It is especially significant that Voelklingen, the seat of the Herman Roelichs steel dynasty and a population consisting in its overwhelming part of steel workers, voted ten to one for Germany, casting its ballots as follows: 20,657 for Germany, 2,203 for the status quo and 135 for France.

How is that to be explained? Claims that these workers voted for the Nazi regime are preposterous and ludicrous. It is far more correct to assume that this vote represents a desire to return to what these workers still look upon as their fatherland.

But this is at its best only a partial explanation. It must be remembered that these workers felt themselves left in the lurch, with no force capable of showing the way out. Even the united front between the Social Democratic and the Communist parties that finally came about in the Saar could not show the way out. These parties had failed before.

When the Nazis knocked at the gates in Germany the issue was presented squarely: Accept the continuation of capitalism plus the rule of this tyrannical horde or fight to the end for a Socialist system of society. Both parties of Socialism failed miserably and had nothing but abject surrender to offer. This is the crime that in the Saar plebiscite had the effect of condemning these parties to impotency in advance. This is the crime for which the workers of the Saar now have to pay the heavy price. May it speed the day when they learn to build upon the ruins of the past, to build a new party capable of leading the way to the Socialist revolution.

Federal Budget

still, transfer these sums and there would be more than twice as much to spend on relief purposes.

Whence did the money come? From the rich, the industrialists, the landlords, the bankers? Not much of it, you may be sure.

Income and inheritance taxes together—which, but oh ever so mildly, "soak the rich"—yielded less than $900,000,000; i.e. less than a third of the total. The rest came from a variety of sales taxes, over and over again, which, so the pundits of taxation inform us, must inevitably "soak the poor". Thus miscellaneous internal revenues yielded $1,500,000,000; processing taxes on farm products, $350,000, 600; customs duties, more than $300,000,000. As for the increases in the public debt, that merely served to build up future claims by bondholders to be supported out of the public funds.

It is a lovely and touching tale which the budget spreads out before anybody with a taste for fiscal data. In order to induce prosperity, in order to maintain relief, the New Deal has set the poor to picking one another's bones; which, after all, is just what used to happen under the Old Deal. Yes, the New Deal has redistributed the national wealth and income as the President said it would. There is only one catch; in accordance with the immemorial rules of the racket, the New Deal has taken from the poor and given to the rich.

In his budget measure, the President never bothered to touch upon these indelicate facts. He was shocked, instead, at the idea that the government might be expected to continue supporting those of its members for whom capitalism cannot find jobs. Don't give them relief, he urged, for that will warp their moral fibre. Make them work for their dole, but never, never commit the mistake of employing them in some useful occupations or of paying them too much.

The President is speaking as the defender of an economic order which has long since outlived its usefulness. It is not balancing the budget which will make the United States a country worth living in for its workers and its farmers. Nothing short of revolutionary reconstruction will do that.

Biscuit Strike

the city, and an automobile brigade had been formed for flying work.

The company is reported frantic. Attempts to palm off stale biscuit and to ship in biscuit from other cities have failed. Threats against union leaders have been met with the formation of a bodyguard. An independent grocers association has boycotted National producers, according to reports.

The company is unable to ship biscuit out of the port of New York to foreign and colonial customers.

The workers have many grievances, including the practice of firing men when they reach 45, no matter how long they have worked for the company. (One man was fired after 20 years' service). The truck drivers were originally forced to buy their own truck chassis. The company, however, maneuvered them out of the ownership of their trucks. The drivers who then became eligible, immediately joined the drivers union and struck.

Trotsky Answers Indictment

sul obtain this letter? One should imagine that this question would be of paramount importance.

But it is precisely on this score that we cannot gather a single word from the indictment as it is printed in L'Humanite. Is it conceivable that neither the examining magistrate nor the prosecutor became at all interested in this fact? For not the exploits of a consul unknown to anybody are of interest but the question of the relations between the terrorists and Trotsky.

What Happened to the Letter?

Were there such relations or not? Was the letter written and transmitted? Was a reply received? To these unavoidable questions we get no answer. Is that surprising? Only to naive people. The G.P.U. could not permit the prosecutor any indiscretion within that sphere over which it has been compelled to draw the curtain of silence.

One need not doubt for a moment that the letter was never written because if the terrorists knew anything at all about Trotsky—and they couldn't but know—my irreconcilable attitude towards the adventurism of individual terror which runs like a red thread through my 37 years of revolutionary and literary activity could have been no secret to them (see several dozen articles in my Collected Works, published by the State Publishing House).

However, an admission that the terrorists could not see the slightest reason for seeking contact with Trotsky, and for this reason did not respond to the kind offer of the "consul" would be tantamount to the immediate bungling of the entire amalgam. Best keep quiet about it!

Let us, nevertheless, make momentarily an entirely improbable suggestion; the eloquent provocateur did actually succeed in obtaining the letter which so interested him. But what happened to it? Of course the temptation would have been great to transmit such a letter to Trotsky and . . . to receive from him some sort of an encouraging answer for the Leninist "supporters", even if without any reference to terror.

But his inspirers, if not the consul himself, understood only too well the risk of such an enterprise: the previous attempts at provocation, which it is true, were on a smaller scale ended in inevitable fiasco. The letter—if it had been written, we repeat, contrary to all likelihood—would have to simply remain in the archives of the G.P.U. as a weapon unsuitable for its purposes. But this cannot be said aloud without confessing by this very fact that the consul is a second cousin to the Wrangel officer (see below).

The Mystery of the 'Consul'

Is it possible, however, to conceive of a consul in a role of an agent provocateur? We have no means at all of knowing whether a real or a fake consul is here concerned: the resources for fraud in the given instance are illimitable. But even genuine consuls bear very little resemblance to saints. Some of them engage in smuggling, with illicit deals in currency and fall into the hands of the police (not only of the G.P.U., of course).

Such a compromised consul may be offered not only forgiveness for his sins but also some entirely legal coin in addition, should he be so obliging as to perform a few trifling and innocent services. There were, there are, and there will be such cases . . . as long as there exist consuls, customs, currencies, intermediaries male and female, and police.

The version we have adduced which unflinchingly flows from the indictment itself, if one is able to read it, presupposes consequently that the G.P.U. itself through the medium of an actual or fake consul, was financing Nikolai and was attempting to link him up with Trotsky.

Complicity of the G.P.U.

This version finds its indirect but very actual confirmation in the fact that all the responsible representatives of the G.P.U. in Leninград were kicked out immediately after the assassination, and the investigation subsequently kept marking time for a protracted period, faced with the obvious difficulty of what variant to choose in order to explain what had happened.

We do not mean to say that the G.P.U. in the person of its Leninград agent, premeditated the murder of Kirov, we have no facts for such a supposition. But the agents of the G.P.U. knew about the terrorist act which was in preparation; they kept Nikolai under surveillance, they established contacts with him through the medium of trumped-up consuls for the double purpose of capturing as many persons as possible involved in the matter, and at the same time of attempting to compromise the political opponents of Stalin by means of a complex amalgam.

Alas! an amalgam much too complex, as the subsequent course of events proved: before the "consul" had succeeded in preparing the political blast against Trotsky, Nikolai pulled the trigger at Kirov. After this, the organizers of the surveillance and the provocation were thrown headlong from their posts. And in writing the indictment, it became necessary to painstakingly steer around the sandbars and the submarine reefs, to leave the "consul" in the shade, to wipe away all traces of the activities of the G.P.U. and at the same time to save as much as possible of the shattered amalgam. The mysterious delay in the investigation thus finds an entirely natural explanation.

But why was the consul necessary? There was no getting along without the consul. The consul symbolizes the link between the terrorists and Trotsky with world imperialism (although the consul represented, one should imagine, some very petty and backward state: that is the least dangerous way).

The consul is serviceable in another connection: because of "consideration of diplomacy" he cannot be named in the indictment nor consequently called as a witness. Thus the mainspring of the combination remains behind the scenes.

Finally, the consul himself—if he really exists in the flesh—runs no special risk: even if recalled by his government. Out of considerations of diplomatic politeness, he returns home as a distinguished hero who suffered in the service of his passionately loved fatherland; moreover, a certain supplementary sum to his modest salary would be found in his pocket for a rainy day, and there is no harm in that either.

The White Guard Dodge

The character of the machination is easiest understood if one is in the least bit acquainted with the preceding history of the behind-the-scenes struggle of Stalin against "Trotskyism". I shall mention only three instances.

As early as 1926, the hired journalists broadcast through the entire world the report that the Left Opposition had been implicated in relations with . . . White Guards. We were bewildered. It turned out that the G.P.U. had sent one of its official agents to an 18 year old youth unknown to anybody, and sympathetic to the Opposition, with an offer to assist in spreading Opposition literature. Some six to seven years previously the G.P.U. agent it appears served in the army of Wrangel (which, incidentally, was never verified). On this basis, Stalin publicly accused the Opposition of making a bloc with . . . not an agent of the G.P.U. but White Guards.

On the eve of my exile to Central Asia (Jan. 1928) a foreign journalist made me an offer through Radek, to transmit secretly, if need be, a letter to my friends abroad. I expressed to Radek my conviction that the journalist was an agent of the G.P.U. However, I wrote the letter because I had nothing to say to my friends abroad that I could not repeat openly. The very next morning my letter was published in the Pravda as proof of my secret connections "with foreign countries".

On July 20, 1931 the yellow sheet Kurjer Codzienny, of Cracow, published a gross forgery under the signature of Trotsky. Despite the fact that my literary works are banned on the pain of severest penalty in the U.S.S.R. (Blumkin was shot for attempting to bring in the Bulletin of the Russian Opposition), the article from the Kurjer was reprinted in the Moscow Pravda—in fascimile. The most elementary analysis proves that it was manufactured by the G.P.U., with the assistance of the well-known Yara-slavsky and printed in the Kurjer (one should imagine at the regular advertising rates) only in order to be reproduced in the Pravda.

Stalin's Lackeys Inform French Authorities

I am compelled to leave aside a number of other combinations and amalgams which are more clarifying in order not to cause harm, by premature revelations, to other people involved. In any case, the type of this sort of creative effort is clear from what has been said above. The triangle composed of Nikolai, the "consul" and Trotsky is not new. It resembles a dozen other similar triangles and differs from them only by being on a much bigger scale.

It is necessary, however, to point out that the Soviet press, as is evident from the cable extracts in the very same L'Humanite makes very circumspect use of the latest amalgam in relation to Trotsky and does not go beyond inferences concerning "the ideological inspirers". In return, however, L'Humanite speaks about my participation in the murder of Kirov with almost the same assurance with which the Matin recently wrote concerning my participation in the murder of King Alexander and Barthou.

The difference in the conclusions drawn by L'Humanite and the Pravda is to be explained not only by the fact that the idiocy of the Nikolai-"consul"-Trotsky amalgam is much more obvious in Moscow than in Paris—but also because by its very essence this part of the amalgam is destined for foreign consumption, primarily for France. Its direct aim is to exert an influence of the necessary kind on the French workers through the medium of the united front, and to exert pressure upon the French authorities. Hence, the unbelievable tone of L'Humanite!

The Soviet authorities were compelled to openly admit that the participation of Zinoviev, Kamenev and others "was not proved": The governmental dispatches generally made no mention of me at all. The indictment refers only to the anxiety of the "consul" to obtain a letter to Trotsky—without making any conclusions. The lackeys of L'Humanite write that Trotsky's participation in the murder of Kirov was "proved".

Postmarked for the 'Best Disciple'

This article as I have already said is addressed not to the lackeys but their masters. However, I cannot leave unmentioned here the fact that one of my sharp conflicts with the "troika" (Stalin, Zinoviev, Kamenev), came as a result of my protest against their busy efforts during the time of Lenin's illness, to corrupt the more pliant "leaders" of the labor movement in the West, particularly by means of bribes. Stalin and Zinoviev replied in rebuttal, "Doesn't the bourgeoisie buy the leaders of trade unions, members of parliament, and journalists, then why shouldn't we do likewise?"

My answer was that by means of bribes one could disintegrate the workers' movement, but that one could not create revolutionary leaders. Lenin used to warn against selecting to the Comintern "obedient fools". There has been added to this selection of cynics who are ready for anything.

Ready for anything? Up to the first serious danger. People who have neither honor nor conscience cannot be trustworthy revolutionaries. In the moment of difficulty they will inevitably betray the proletariat. My only counsel to workers is that they remember well the names of these shameless villifiers, in order that they may verify this forecast.

Garage Strike In Twin Cities

bullet was fired and ricocheted. Must have been some bullet.

Perkins of course was not arrested. Instead Ed Grosslein, union member, was framed. When a charge of inciting to riot proved too strong for even the frame up machine, he was accused of "unlawful entry".

"Bloody Mike" Busy
Chief of Police "Bloody Mike" Johannes has issued instructions that all pickets are to be booked on the most serious charge obtainable by the frame-up machinery.

On Jan. 11 guns belched again in answer to peaceful attempts of strikers to interview employees at work in the Tri-Mo Garage. This time the president and vice president of the firm did the shooting. Bufort Eastman was shot through the thigh, H. W. Collins in the hand, and Louis Le Meaux in the leg. Undaunted, the committee disarmed the gunmen. The wounded are members of Garage Mechanics Union No. 382, Minneapolis.

Thirteen strikers were arrested last Tuesday, charged with disorderly conduct while peacefully picketing the Anderson Chevrolet Company. Their immediate release on bail was obtained by the Defense Committee of Central Labor Union of Minneapolis. Another picket was arrested Thursday at the McDonald Gillilan Garage.

Even in St. Paul, where the strike is less bloody, the strikers have had their trouble. When a scab was run out of the Holt Motor Company, the St. Paul press played the news up big—as in kidnapping. A striker was shot in the thumb at one garage.

REVIEWING THE NEWS

By BILL SHERMAN

NEW TITLE WANTED
The editors don't like the title of this column, so they got together with the business manager and I am asked to announce that a year's subscription to the New Militant will be given free to the reader suggesting the best title. The editors to decide. Titles must be in by February 15.

By reading the Daily Worker, I gather that Lindergh, acting for Wall Street, conspired with Hauptmann, a Nazi adherent, and William Randolph Hearst, to kidnap and murder his own son for the purpose of launching a big campaign of publicity to befuddle the workers so that they could not grasp Earl Browder's latest zig-zag on the Labor Party and the united front.

That the Home Relief Office at 25 Sheriff St., New York, is a fire trap; that it was originally certified for 25 persons but was used for as many as 800 applicants in addition to the staff; that there are four lavatories for 300 employees and none for the relief applicants; electric circuits overloaded, switches fused; the floor above occupied by a paint company, with turpentine dripping through the Relief Office—such was the testimony of William J. Desmond, clerical supervisor, and an Aldermanic committee. And that testimony reveals the attitude of the "liberal" administration of Mayor LaGuardia and the class he represents, to the unemployed.

Not in backward China, but in up-to-date, progressive, rugged individualist U.S.A. An INS item reports that federal investigators in the Ozarks found 31 persons "living in a one room shack . . . several families made up the 31." Eight hundred applicants for relief crowded into quarters certified for 25 in New York City, thirty-one men, women and children living in one room in the Ozarks, surely Roosevelt's "more abundant life" is spreading all over God's country.

Krat News in Hauptmann Case

Fifty Western Union messengers at the Hauptmann trial pulled a sudden strike, and won $1 to $1.50 pay increases, and in addition the removal of the charge for uniforms. Bartel Reasoner, one of the messengers, who was fired for complaining about conditions, was reinstated.

Militant Progressive Unionism

Here is the meeting schedule of General Drivers Local 574 for the month of January, as reported in the Minneapolis Labor Review: Friday, Jan. 11—Stewards Meeting. Monday, Jan. 14—Full membership meeting. Tuesday, Jan. 15—Independent Truck Owners. Monday, Jan. 21—Coal Workers. Friday, Jan. 25—Stewards Meeting. Monday, Jan. 28—Full membership. Tuesday, Jan. 29—Taxi Drivers. Night shift, one P.M. Day shift, eight P.M.

The same issue of the Labor Review contains a report made by Herman Husman, international representative of the Machinists Union in the Garage Mechanics strike. "Husman said words should not express the gratitude of the strikers to the leaders and members of Local 574, who were giving tireless and most valuable assistance." The schedule of meetings and the assistance given to the striking mechanics together show that the leadership and membership of Local 574 are not content to rest on the laurels of the great strikes of last year, but with the widest democracy and most militant spirit, are preparing for the greater battles ahead.

Mass Telephoning

The just passed by plebiscite in the Saar, with its disastrous results for the future of the German and international working class, naturally has again brought into the forefront the question of Fascism. It is therefore interesting to pick up a little booklet published by the International Labor Defense in the U. S., and see what means they say they use in order to fight Fascism. Most startling tactics, a most unusual contribution to the arsenal of working class struggle! They boast that time and again, they have so swamped the desk of the German consul with telegrams, and have kept his phone so busy, that he could not conduct his regular work. Evidently the trouble in Germany was that Hitler did not have a phone. . . .

From A. J. Muste, national secretary of the Workers Party, comes further word of the tour he and James P. Cannon, editor of the New Militant, are making to present the program of the W.P. to the workers of the country. Reports indicate that Comrades Muste and Cannon's tour is a march of triumph.

By A. J. MUSTE

NEW CASTLE, Pa. and YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio.—From the debacle which overcame the militant movement of the steel workers last spring when Bill Green and Mike Tighe sabotaged the general strike in the industry, the movement is slowly recovering.

The determination to build a union is not dead among the steel workers, though they are somewhat lost in the maze of Labor Board elections, injunctions by the steel companies against the union and by the union against the companies and what have you. A crisis breaking into a strike may develop in one of these mills where an election is denied.

W.P. Has Many Contacts

The militant leaders hope nothing too serious will break before they get their forces organized better than they were last year. Comrade Cannon and I were called into conference by some of them. We find the Party has many contacts in steel.

Comrades McKinney, Cooper, Sullivan and Berman from Pittsburgh popped into the New Castle meeting. They are hoping to tie in the unemployed movement here with the national movement.

The Party branches in New Castle and Youngstown have a good start and are thoroughly in earnest. The meetings for Comrade Cannon and me brought out most of the active spirits in the locality and made converts to the W.P. After the mass meetings, the branches kept the national officers up until four in the morning to discuss branch problems!

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—On the way up here we visited an old steel worker's home. He still goes to work when there is work. "We are lucky if we make 10 dollars a week now, when we used to make that in a day."

The day before, one of his shopmates fainted on the job, narrowly escaping being burned to death. "He has a wife and three or four children. He just doesn't get enough to eat to let him do a trick in a steel plant."

Two Husky Sons

Two husky sons of our friend sat in the house—no jobs. The father put a question to us—really to the capitalist system: "Do you think they'll fix it so there will be something for the young men to do?"

The answer of capitalism to that momentous question we got an hour later when we drove through McDonald, where Carnegie Steel was just breaking ground for a new strip mill. Referring to the labor to be displaced by the new process, the young steel worker riding with us said: "They won't need anything in this damn industry pretty soon except a few button-pushers."

Same Old Story

We had a well-attended meeting here. Same old story as to C.P. and S.P. They can't meet us in an argument on our Declaration of Principles. The branch has good material. It is working out a program of action. It will be felt in the labor struggle in Cleveland.

The branch conference in Cleveland was attended by party members from Akron. As dispatches to the New Militant have indicated, things may pop in rubber very soon. If so, Akron will be the first Toledo-Minneapolis of 1935. Our party members and sympathizers are the only advanced group having real access to the rubber workers. Would that Louis Budenz were well enough to take the field. What a chance his America of the Middle West would give him!

TOLEDO, Ohio.—If there was ever any doubt as to whether our Toledo comrades would be able to dig in and follow up (never mind if the metaphors are mixed, Comrade Editor) the work they did in the great Auto Lite strike, that day is past. The Central Labor Union supports the Unemployed Leagues openly. Our comrades are asked

Buying Power Drops Under "Model" Code

By JACK ELDER

WASHINGTON.—Did anyone ever believe that the NRA codes would increase the purchasing power of wage earners and redistribute the national income?

Then glance at the recent reports of the Federal Trade Commission and of the Bureau of Labor Statistics on the operation of the cotton textile code: NRA's first and model code. These two reports, taken together, are revealing.

First, the Bureau of Labor Statistics study on wages. In August 1933, when the code took effect, half the cotton textile workers earned less than 21.8 cents per hour. In August, 1934, on the eve of the great strike, the median hourly wage rate was 34.9 cents.

But wait—between August 1933 and August 1934 living costs skyrocketed—because of the drought, because of the A.A.A. processing taxes, because the NRA codes permit cartelized price-fixing and production control.

The result? In that one year, real wages—purchasing power—in the cotton industry, in the north fell away 15 percent; in the south, 25 percent.

This, then, was how the cotton textile code raised the purchasing power of hundreds of thousands of wage slaves.

Significantly, real wages moved upward slightly—5 percent in the north, 8 percent in the south—until June, 1934. At that time, NRA agreed to a 25 percent curtailment in cotton production hours—with no compensating wage increase. The mill owners were given full power to sabotage the industry's productive capacity.

Without delay, real wages plunged down. Under pressure of mass misery, the rank-and-file workers forced a nation-wide strike which their leaders choked off at its height.

Meanwhile, what happened to the cotton mill owners? The F.T.C. report shows that from Jan. 1, 1933 to June 30, 1933 the rate of profit in the 400 cotton textile mills studied was 4.09 percent; from June 30, 1933 to Dec. 31, 1933, 9.50 percent; from Dec. 31, 1933 to June 30, 1934, 5.15 percent; during the two months preceding the strike a slight loss is reported—1.84 percent. These rates are calculated upon the hypothetical value of investment in plant and equipment. The F.T.C. cannot penetrate beneath the accounting logic by which employers make out the best case for themselves; i.e., inflated original valuations and minimum charge-offs for depreciation and obsolescence.

Then, too, the rate of return (constituting an accounting profit) does not allow for the generous salary which the owner pays himself as manager.

It now becomes evident why the Cotton Textile Institute loves its code. It is well-calculated to engender profits. As for the workers—let them be happy as guinea pigs of a high-minded experiment in New Deal reconstruction.

ROOSEVELT'S INSECURITY PROGRAM

Not economic and social security for wage earners but a scheme for forced thrift imposed upon those who can least afford to be thrifty—this is the Administration's "unemployment insurance" and "old age" pension proposal.

The government will not engage to pay a modest income to workers who become aged in the service of profit-making. Oh no! The government will require that each worker make periodic payments toward the purchase of an annuity, maturing at the age of 66.

How much you will receive in the end will depend: (1) upon the number of years you participate in the scheme; (2) upon your average yearly earnings over the payment

Akron C. P. Members Follow Zack to W. P.

News that three of the most influential members of the labor movement in Akron, Ohio, have left the Communist Party and joined the Workers Party is received as the New Militant goes to press. These three new comrades, whose names cannot be given at this time, were the leading members of the C.P. in Akron.

The Akron branch of the Workers Party is especially fortunate in getting these three trained militants at this time. A strike of the rubber workers is pending. And it is very likely that Akron will be the Toledo and Minneapolis of the 1934 strike wave.

Announcement of this important news, which is further evidence of the drift toward the Workers Party, came in the following telegram to the New Militant:

That Pittsburgh Convention

Steel Progressives Will Lead - A. F. of L. Leaders Look Askance at Rank and File Conclave

(By Special Correspondent)

PITTSBURGH.—On February 3, rank and file delegates from unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. are to meet in Pittsburgh. In spite of the unofficial nature of this convention, many of the major A. F. of L. unions will be represented. Foremost of the unions that will participate, from the standpoint of numbers and influence, is the embattled Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel, Tin and Sheet Metal Workers.

Within the union, according to the claims of some of its rank and file leaders, a powerful rank and file movement has developed in recent months directed to the adoption of a militant program of organization and opposition to company-unionism on the basis of an eventual steel strike.

Revolt Against A. F. of L.

Ostensibly, this "rank and file convention" is called to consider the decisions of the official San Francisco convention of the A. F. of L. and to lay plans for carrying out these decisions, which are mainly concerned with the extension of organization. But there is implicit in such a procedure a revolt against the A. F. of L. officialdom.

There is no prospect that the "rank and file convention" will receive the blessings of the officials. In at least one case, that of the A. A. the officialdom headed by Mike Tighe has already put thumbs down on the whole business, calling on the rank and file to adhere to the union's constitution and to avoid any sins against its "solemn ritual."

Normally, plans for organization issue from the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. and the International Boards of the affiliated unions. No such plans have been forthcoming since the San Francisco convention and apparently there has arisen a militant rank and file leadership strong enough to take matters into its own hands.

That the Steel union will dominate the coming convention is confirmed by the preparations of the A. F. of L. top leadership to propitiate the steel delegates. Bill Green finds himself unable to attend the organization conference of the Aluminum workers this past week in Pittsburgh because he is obliged to attend an Executive Council meeting in Washington devoted to organization in the steel industry.

The conference is very opportune. Out of it will come organizational plans that will be placed before the A. A. delegates to the "rank and file convention" as a proof of their fealty and unwavering action. Obviously, it is supposed that

56 Released as Leaguemen Storm Court

By ART PREIS

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio, Jan. 22.—A cheering, jeering, clapping, stamping assemblage of Wood County workers and farmers packed the court room here today and forced the release of 56 Unemployed League members who were arrested last Saturday evening after they stormed the relief headquarters and occupied it for eleven hours in an attempt to obtain relief for 26 strikers in a county-wide strike on relief projects.

The defendants formed solidly into a "56 or None Club," modeled on the famous "40 or None" trial of the Toledo Auto-Lite strikers, defeated attempts of county officials, acting as agents of "No Work No Relief" Duncan, county relief czar, to isolate and frame Ted Selander, Sam Pollock and Art Preis, Workers Party members and League leaders, by giving them a separate trial.

The 56 workers, 47 men and nine women, were tried in a body, and by raising the demand "If one goes to jail, we all go to jail," forced Justice-of-the-Peace Nearing to suspend sentence on all on a charge of "illegal trespass" on the public property of the county relief building. A second charge of "unlawful assemblage" against 55 men and women is set for hearing Jan. 28 with the officials wanting to continue it because they realize what a "hot potato" they had grabbed.

Force Leaders' Release

At the close of this hearing, when deputies started to take Pollock and Selander back to jail until their hearing on the second charge or until bail of $1,500 was raised, the entire assemblage surged around them while the "56 or None Club" seized the prisoners, shouting their slogan. The police, deputies and officials were helpless; they could not feed or house the hundreds who demanded to be taken to jail with the two prisoners, and the prosecuting attorney and sheriff had to appeal to the prisoners to protect them from the crowd.

Upon assurance by the prosecuting attorney of a drastic bail reduction and release as soon as the legal arrangements were carried out, the two prisoners quieted their defenders. The entire group settled back into their seats to wait until Pollock and Selander were released and pledged themselves to join them again in the county jail if they were not.

Following several maneuvers by the officials, such as an offer to release the prisoners if they would promise not to return to Bowling Green and veiled threats that a "vigilante" group was forming and they had better leave the county—which the presence of hundreds of League members in the court room made laughable—the defendants' offer of $300 bail was accepted.

Are Released on Job

The released prisoners walked right back to the court room, addressed the assembly, and went at once to the relief headquarters on another grievance committee.

The entire trial was a farce. It was obvious the verdict had been

United Defense Acts To Mobilize Labor In California Trial

Union Conference Called by Five Groups to Aid 18 Defendants—Decker Out by NPLD

BULLETIN

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Jan. 23 (by wire).—Caroline Decker, organizer of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Agricultural Workers and leader of the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Union, was released on $3,200 bail yesterday provided by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

Decker is being defended by the International Labor Defense but applied to the Non-Partisan Labor Defense for bail. Bail was supplied within 24 hours of the receipt of her application. Jack Warnick, another leader of the union defended by the I.L.D., was bailed out two weeks ago at his request by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

Two other defendants are out on bail. The remaining 14 are still in jail, where they have been since their arrest last July.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 22 (by wire).—The newly formed joint defense committee for the Sacramento trial of 18 workers and labor leaders on criminal syndicalism charges, tonight drafted a call for a conference of all unions and other labor organizations Feb. 10, to mobilize the labor movement.

The call was signed by Charles Gordon for the International Labor Defense, Maurer for the Communist Party, Clarence Hubert for the Socialist Party, Barney Moss for the Workers Party, Herbert Solow for the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, and Dr. George Hedley, director of the Civil Liberties Union, as temporary chairman of the committee. The Shipyard Union and Machinists Local 68 (A.F. of L.) have already endorsed the defense committee. The conference will be preceded by a united front mass meeting Feb. 1.

The first meeting of the united front defense committee was held Jan. 19, at the end of the first week of the trial.

The united front came at almost

Second Blast In Mine Kills 11, Injures 71

SHENANDOAH, Pa., Jan. 21.—

Eleven miners were killed outright and 71 injured, at least one fatally, in the second blast in the main shaft of the Gilberton mine here within a week. The first blast resulted in the death of one miner.

Although the miners were warned by the company "not to talk" they reported that the blast followed the detonation of a shot of dynamite. "The blast was undoubtedly caused by faulty ventilation of the mine, which allowed the accumulation of fire damp."

A miner, Richard Evans, although fatally injured directed a rescue party to an alley where ten of his comrades lay helpless. When the rescue party returned to him he was dead.

WASHINGTON.—The United States is "the most backward major industrial nation in the matter of mine accident prevention," according to the report of the Minerals Planning Committee of the National Resources Board. Its accident rate is exceeded only by that of China.

"Miners and their families lose between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 in income annually due to preventable accidents and ill health," says the report. The average age of the coal miner who is killed is 35 years.

Ten or more percent of the mine cost of producing coal or ore is due to the various factors entering into accident occurrence, which amount in the bituminous industry to between $30,000,000 and $50,000,000 a year. "If already known and available improved safety methods and measures could be put into general use, the burden of accident expense could probably be reduced to as low as 1 or 2 percent of mineral production costs," say the government experts.

Saturday Night Housewarming

NEW YORK CITY.—Champagne will flow from soda water bottles when the formal opening of the new National Headquarters and New York District Office at 2 West 15th Street, takes place on Saturday night, Feb. 2, on the third floor, we'll waxed, of the aforementioned address.

A refreshment table of no mean proportions will help us make the newly scrubbed hall a little more livable by messing it up a bit with the skins of hot dogs, etc. A jazz band to be furnished by the Cultural Committee will furnish low brow music, and the ship of the new state will be sent down the rails accompanied by high spirits and lots of soda pop.

The entire membership is invited—Los Angeles, please notice—and of course all friends and well wishers. We'll sing revolutionary songs and play ring around the rosie. The date is Feb. 2 at about 9 P.M. and bring all your friends.

To Maintain this Great Work We Must Have Funds--Now!

THE Workers Party is expanding at a rapid pace, so rapid as to completely outdistance our meagre funds. We have our principles, we have our men, workers are crying to be organized, the field is vast, the opportunities are here.

At the present moment we have contacts in the steel industry who are working in the progressive movement. The steel industry is one of the critical battlegrounds in the coming struggles of the American workers, and the progressive movement will be the determining factor in this struggle.

The Workers Party must, it is our revolutionary duty to maintain our work in steel. BUT WE MUST HAVE FUNDS.

In Akron, the center of the rubber industry, where a strike is imminent, we have been extremely fortunate. The leaders of the local C.I. unit, who are active in the unions and in workers' education, have resigned from the C.P. and come over to the W.P. just this week. These comrades form a nucleus from which we may penetrate thousands upon thousands of workers. We are sending organizers into the field immediately.

But in order that the comrades may carry on this vital work, WE MUST HAVE FUNDS.

In Detroit, where tens of thousands of automobile workers are in a constant ferment, we have already established several party organizers. They are carrying the tradition of Toledo right into the heart of the automobile industry.

To maintain this work, WE MUST HAVE FUNDS.

Last week we mentioned the expense of a new press to take care of the increased circulation of our publications. This week the need becomes even more imperative, so imperative that we are already negotiating for the press, although the money is not yet in sight.

We have undertaken the printing of a national paper for the N.U.L. It is hardly necessary to emphasize the importance of this step: a national paper will unify and promote the unemployed movement to a tremendous political force. We are fortunate to be able to assist in this work, where many of our comrades are active—BUT WE MUST HAVE FUNDS.

To facilitate our activities we have moved to the new office. It is a great advantage to have our work centralized: to have a place where all our committees can meet. At last we have a little space; the Political Committee no longer has to convene on the editor's desk. The International Workers School, an invaluable instrument in the class war, at last has space of its own, where the classes may meet in some semblance of order.

At risk of becoming monotonous, we repeat, WE MUST HAVE FUNDS. Comrades and friends, we must seize on the magnificent opportunities of the moment, and we must have money to do so!

Subscribe to the Party Foundation Fund now. Subscribe yourself, and press every friend and sympathizer to subscribe to the best of his ability.

Pay your pledges now, and pledge again. Press friends and sympathizers to pledge.

Collect all contributions, all pledges, immediately, and forward them to the national office, IMMEDIATELY.

Comrades, friends, sympathizers: We are faced with a great opportunity and a great responsibility. We cannot fail!

THE NATURE AND CAUSES OF MODERN WAR

CAPITALIST EXPANSION ENDS IN OPEN CONFLICT

By JOHN WEST

(Ed. Note: This is the first of a series of four articles by Comrade West on the problems of the revolutionary struggle against war. The remaining three will be entitled: "The Struggle Against War," "The League Against War and Fascism," and "The United Front!" Do not miss them!)

An integral part of the great aim of the revolutionary movement is the elimination of war. It has become almost commonplace to realize that modern war threatens not merely suffering and death to vast millions, but the actual destruction of human civilization, the thrusting of mankind back into barbarism. No one who, with the lessons of the last war in mind, has followed the recent developments in military technique, can doubt this to be literally true.

In the face of this prospect, it is the revolutionary movement alone that has a solution to offer. From the open war-glorification by Fascism to the futile gesturing of pacifism, all other forces in modern society are not merely powerless to prevent war but in fact aid in preparing war. The responsibility for the struggle against war rests wholly on the revolutionary movement.

The first step in the struggle against war is a clear understanding of the nature and causes of war. A mere pious horror at the dreadfulness of war—which is shared by the great majority of men—is useless, and worse than useless.

AT THE BOTTOM OF WAR

The driving force of the capitalist mode of production is the necessity for the continual accumulation and expansion of capital. This necessity is inescapable. Capitalists must constantly attempt to expand capital, in order to maintain profits. But this attempt comes up against (indeed it is merely the reverse side of) the equally inescapable tendency under capitalism for the general rate of profits to fall. The fall in the rate of profits demands capital expansion, in order to retain an equal or greater total amount of profits; the expansion, however, in its turn involves an increased tendency of the rate of profits to fall, and, consequently, the still further need for capital expansion.

The necessity for the expansion of capital leads to the mighty development of the means of production, to the huge new machines and great factories and mines and railroads, the enormous corporations, the ever-growing monopolies. The expansion is, however, by its nature unregulated and chaotic, for two chief reasons, the first of which is dependent on the second:

(1) It is carried out on a competitive basis, not in accord with a rational and inclusive plan. (2) It is developed with no relation to the needs of a consumer market.

From the point of view of capitalism, the "market" is only the means for transforming commodity-values back into capital-values for further use in the accumulation of capital. The market is therefore necessarily limited not by the potential needs of consumers (which are nearly boundless), but by the conditions of capitalist production itself—by the possibility of using the surplus value realized from the sale of commodities to produce more surplus value.

The tendency to uncontrolled expansion exceeds the limits; the capitalist created market can no longer "absorb" the products of the expanded capital equipment; expansion becomes over-expansion. The over-expansion is temporarily "corrected" by the periodic crisis, during which capital (i.e. the value of the means of production) is destroyed through falling price levels, bankruptcies and material deterioration. The point is reached where capital accumulation can once more proceed "normally"; the tendencies re-assert themselves on a new and still more violent scale, and the next crisis is rapidly prepared for.

Capitalism thus faces: (1) A chronic necessity for the accumulation of capital, i.e. for the re-capitalizing of all present values and for new capital investments; (2) a periodic inability to find markets through which commodities turned out by the capital equipment can, by their sale to consumers, be re-converted into capital. During the decline of capitalism, this second periodic condition likewise tends more and more to become chronic, thus bringing about a lowering of the scale of capitalist operations. The necessity for capital expansion, however, continues in an even sharper form at the more restricted level.

These two conditions explain the fundamental basis of modern (imperialist) war.

DRIVEN TO IMPERIALIST EXPANSION

Capitalists of every major capitalist nation are faced with the following situation: In order to sustain the system which sustains them, they must find continuous outlets for capital investment and re-investment; but the internal market, provided by the capitalist mode of production within any single nation, is not sufficient to re-convert into capital values the values of commodities turned out even by existing capital equipment, much less of new. Consequently, the capitalists of each nation are forced to seek outlets for capital investment (and likewise consumer markets) beyond the national borders.

If we glance even for a moment at the history of the United States since the War, we can see this tendency everywhere manifesting itself.

International Tel. & Tel. builds and operates telephone and telegraph systems in Spain, Latin America, South America, and the Near East. General Electric buys heavily into the electrical industries not only of "backward" countries but of Germany, France and England. New York banks and investment houses exploit the copper mines of Africa and the silver mines of Peru. The Standard Fruit Co. owns and operates the great orchards of Mexico; United Fruit, the orchards of Central America. The American Sugar Refining Co. expands its refineries in Cuba. Curtiss-Wright builds an airplane factory in China. Standard Oil and Texas Co. build oil refineries and operate filling stations all through the Far East, as well as in Bolivia, Venezuela and Mexico. The auto companies build plants in Canada and even (Ford) in England and Germany.

CAPITALISTS VIE ON WORLD-WIDE SCALE

But the capitalists of England, Germany, France, Italy, and Japan are driven by the same scourge.

Since the world is limited in extent, since the areas available for new forms of capital expansion and exploitation are growingly restricted, conflict is not only likely but inevitable. The grandiose battle of the capitalists of the imperialist powers is fought on a world-wide scale. Into the colonies, mandates, "subject nations", "spheres of influence", flow the surplus capital funds, imperiously demanding to be set to work at making profits.

The political arms of the capitalists—the governments of their respective countries—are extended watchfully over the new investments.

They are ever ready to unseat a Central American government, threaten a native prince, wipe out "red bands", stop or start a revolution, send a flotilla of warships or a regiment of marines, resent an "insult to the flag", if necessary set two countries—Bolivia and Paraguay for example—flaming at each other's throats to settle the dispute of Standard Oil and Shell over rights to an oil field.

To expose the foundation clearly, there must be added to this basic drive of capital for accumulation the closely related struggle for sources of raw materials, for control of shipping, for the ability to manufacture in countries where the standard of living is lower than in the home country, and the determination of the home capitalists to keep the home market for their own purposes by tariffs, quotas, and exchange restrictions.

CAPITALIST SOCIETY CONTINUALLY AT WAR

The truth of the matter is this: In the stage of imperialism, capitalist society is continuously at war. This is the essence of imperialism. It is not a question of one war starting, then stopping, to be followed in a decade or two by a new war. It is war all the time, changing only in the form it takes, in the degree of violence.

The economic wars of capital expansion, of tariff and exchange and armament and competitive exploitation reach a point where the attempt is made to find a political solution of the economic and social contradictions through war open and undisguised. Imperialist-inspired wars between subject nations: wars of subjugation by imperialist nations against subject peoples and the converse wars of these peoples against their imperialist oppressors; the world-wide war of the imperialist nations among themselves. But, though producing a "boom" by loosening the bonds on capital expansion, by destruction of existing values, and by credit expansion, the open wars, far from solving the contradictions, only express their depth, and prepare for still more bitter conflict to come.

THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR OF THE WORKERS

And throughout this bloody chaos is fought the war that gives historical meaning to the whole mad spectacle: the revolutionary war of the working class against its exploiters. This war, which, after generations of preparation, began on a world scale with the October revolution, continues within every country in a thousand varying forms, from strikes to armed uprisings to preparations for intervention in the Soviet Union, and will continue until the final issue is decided.

The disguises that war wears—appearing as due to "national" or "cultural" differences, as following from an assassination or an insult to the flag—must not be allowed to hide the fundamental conflicts which are the true source of modern war. Though these other factors may provide the final push that sets open war going or may modify the character of a war, there is nothing in their own nature that must necessarily lead to war. They are the tools of the forces making for war, not the cause of these forces. Nor should we be misled by those who tell us that the present tendency toward "economic pacifism" means the end of imperialism and consequently of imperialist war. The loosening of foreign trade and foreign investment during the crisis, far from removing the imperialist contradictions, only exaggerates them, only increases the relative importance of whatever foreign capital expansion and trade remains and makes ever sharper the struggle to capture and control it.

The general conclusion is inescapable: Modern war is neither accidental nor due to the evil of human nature nor decreed by God. War is of the very essence of imperialist-capitalism, as much a part of capitalism as wage labor. To speak of capitalism without war is like speaking of a human being without lungs. The fate of the one is inextricably bound to the fate of the other.

Will the Steel Workers Strike? Here's Record Under NRA to Date

By DENNIS BROWN

The record of the Roosevelt Administration comes up for inspection by the Insurgents of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, early in February. That record is here presented in a fourteen paragraph calendar statement of facts.

Two courses have presented themselves to steel workers during the past year and a half. One—recommended by William Green and Mike Tighe—has been a reliance upon the benevolence of Franklin D. Roosevelt and the NRA. Tacit admissions have given of an alliance between these labor leaders and the Federal Administration. Cooperation between labor and capital has been their stated policy.

Membership Exerts Pressure The second course toward which the body of the union has moved steadily is independent action. To bring their own coercive pressure upon the employers is what the union masses have been moving toward. That pressure can only express itself in the strike. This movement now finds its leadership in an organized struggle against Tighe and the union's bureaucracy. It was the Rank and File group, whose criticism of Tighe and the NRA was formulated in the famous slogan "National Run Around", now the watchword of all progressive groups. It must however be pointed out that the Rank and File leadership showed serious weakness in its first struggle. Greater resoluteness in the struggle will be necessary to unseat Tighe and Co.

Weighing the Record Many thousands of workers have believed in the policy of Roosevelt-Tighe. But the proof of the pudding is in the eating—and the pudding is on the table. Promises were made, and a promise must eventually be realized or withdrawn. Roosevelt, Green and Tighe must now stand on their record while the steel workers weigh against it the policy of independent militant action.

The following is the dated record of Roosevelt and the labor bureaucracy:

- On October 16, 1933, the National Labor Board induced the Amalgamated to call off the Weirton strike. E. T. Weir signed an agreement providing for an election at which the workers would choose between the company union and the trade union.
- Early in December 1933, the Weirton Co. refused to go through with its election arrangements. The worthy protests of the National Labor Board notwithstanding, Weirton proceeded to conduct an election of representatives under the company union scheme.
- After two months of muddling and buckpassing, the National Labor Board finally referred the case to the Department of Justice (but never recommended to NRA Compliance that Weirton be deprived of the Blue Eagle). At length the Department began to prosecute the case, seeking an equity order which would compel Weirton to submit to an election.
- But—conveniently for the Weirton company—the legal experts of the Department of Justice did not trouble to familiarize themselves with the Anti-Injunction Act of 1932. Thus on May 29, 1934, Judge Neils threw out the case—on technical grounds—and the Department of Justice had to start all over again.

The case was resumed, and is still in the Federal courts. It is now January 1935, well over a year since the trouble began. Judge Neils cannot possibly decide on the case in time to get it before the current session of the U. S. Supreme Court. Thus the NRA will have expired before the election powers of the Labor Boards, specifically, and the meaning of Section 7a, in general, can be decided by the Supreme Court.

Roosevelt's Pledge

On May 30, 1934 (one day after Judge Neils' first decision on the Weirton suit) President Roosevelt, in his executive order approving the execution of the iron and steel code, made the following specific pledge:

"In order to assure the free exercise of the rights of employees under the provisions of Section 7 of this Act and Article 4 of this code, I will undertake promptly to provide, as the occasion may demand, for the election by employees in each industrial unit of representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of collective bargaining and for mutual aid and protection, under the supervision of an appropriate governmental agency and in accordance with suitable rules and regulations."

On June 15, 1934, William Green spoke before the Amalgamated convention and induced the workers to call off the strike scheduled to begin the next day. He appeared as a quasi-official spokesman of the Federal Administration; and he let it be understood, by tacit assurances, that if the strike were called off the workers would have their elections, majority rule, recognition, collective agreements: all they were asking for.

Set Up Steel Board

On the same day Congress passed Public Resolution No. 44 (approved by the President a few days later), authorizing the President to set up boards empowered to call for employee elections to determine collective bargaining representation. Section 2 reads:

"Any board so established is hereby empowered, when it shall appear in the public interest, to order and conduct an election by a secret ballot of any employees of any employer, to determine by what person or persons or organization they desire to be represented in order to assure the right of employees to organize and to select their representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining as defined in Section 7a."

On June 28, 1934, the President, relying on Public Resolution No. 44, did in fact create the National Steel Labor Relations Board, Section 3 of the Executive Order reads as follows:

"Whenever, after its services are invoked by employers or employees, the Board upon investigation, shall find that an election is necessary to determine by what person, persons or organizations employees desire to be represented, the Board is authorized to order and conduct an election by a secret ballot. . . . After each such election the Board shall certify the results to all concerned, and the person, persons or organization certified as the choice of the majority of those voting shall be accepted as the representative or representatives of said employees for the purpose of collective bargaining, without thereby denying to any individual employee or group of employees the right to present grievances, to confer with their employers, or otherwise to associate themselves and act for mutual aid or protection."

We may say then that the creation of the NSLRB signified a truce: the workers agreed not to strike; the government agreed to call for elections, majority rule governing.

10. From the beginning of July 1934 to late in December—a period of six months—the Amalgamated

SITUATION IN CUBA

AFTERMATH IN SPAIN

The terror regime continues on the island of Cuba. As the conflict between the Mendieta-Wall Street regime and its opponents (on both the left and right) increases in sharpness, with bombings and street murders again daily occurrences, the government has placed the country under virtual martial law.

All constitutional guarantees have been suspended throughout Cuba for a period of 30 days. This decision was accompanied by a Cabinet decree calling for the death penalty for all persons convicted of setting fire to cane fields or "sabotaging in any form or otherwise interrupting the sugar harvest". Freely interpreted, this decree can be made to apply to strikers on the sugar plantations.

Tollers Under Imperialism

Imperialism and its puppets are unable to solve the crisis that has held the island republic in its clutches, with ever-increasing privations for the masses, for nearly a decade. The great mass of toilers of city and plantation remember how they were able, during the days of revolutionary upsurge following the overthrow of Machado, to win increased living standards through militant struggle, and are now preparing to press forward once more in order to regain the positions that the Mendieta "counter-revolution" has wrested from them.

The period of the sugar harvest is always the period of most intensive struggles by the Cuban working class, and in this case it coincides with the political crisis brought about by the partial breakdown of the ruling clique.

Mendieta Seeks Allies

The beleaguered Mendieta regime is casting about on all sides for allies. Elements such as the "Auténticos" of Grau San Martín and the semi-Fascist ABC, who under more favorable circumstances would ally themselves with the puppet of imperialism, realizing that a greater future is offered them if they remain in opposition, have spurned every attempt to negotiate. Grau, from his exile in Miami, Florida, has announced that his party "will not accept any formula tending to perpetuate the present regime in Cuba".

While the government casts about in search of a life-line, it is bringing pressure against the left forces on the political field. It is these leftist forces which today represent the main danger for the Mendieta government.

A number of strikes have occurred recently, contributing considerably to the further weakening of the government. If the threatened general strike should materialize, however, it may well become, as in the case of Machado, the lever by which the whole regime can be dumped into the sea.

According to an Official Statement

The following is an official statement made public on Jan. 15 by the governor general of the province of Asturias, eleven thousand miners of the region have either been killed in the recent revolt or are otherwise unaccounted for. The government decreed some time ago, that all miners returning to work, in order to be permitted to do so, would first be required to turn over one rifle to the authorities. A few days ago the Miner's Union of Asturias was declared illegal. It appears that the valiant miners of Asturias who bore the brunt of the armed struggle, are also destined to bear the brunt of the present relatively "peaceful" interlude.

The whereabouts of some of the missing miners is indicated in the same official statement referring to a whole series of rebel groups who are still holding out in the mountainous recesses, and against whom, according to the announcement, a special military expedition is now being sent.

Spanish government officials announce that they have confiscated 80,354 rifles, 35,211 revolvers and 1,026 machine guns, from the workers recently in rebellion.

As the Lerroux regime draws the balance of the Spanish October, its own foundations are being corroded by the internecine struggles now developing within the rightist camp itself. One of the main points of friction from the beginning has been the disagreements arising as to the punishment that should be meted out to the ex-rebels. Some of the rightist forces, especially the Fascists, have been insisting on large scale executions of the leaders of the uprising. The Lerroux government on the other hand has allowed the Left Republican leader, Azana, and others, to go free, while commuting practically all of the death sentences imposed by military court, to sentences of life imprisonment.

It is now quite evident that the struggle of the Spanish working class was at least successful in that it has prevented the Fascists from consolidating themselves in the government. Meanwhile a deep ferment is in process within the ranks of Spanish labor: policies are being reviewed, lessons being drawn; and all indications point towards a renewal of the struggle on a still higher plane in the not very distant future.

In California

EIGHTEEN workers are on trial in Sacramento, California, facing a hostile jury and possible sentences of long terms in prison. They are charged with criminal syndicalism. But no smoke screen of any kind can hide the fact that these workers are prosecuted because they were the active organizers of the agricultural workers of the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys. It is the most elementary working class right which is at stake in this trial: the right to organize into trade unions.

To stir up passions and hatred against the defendants the prosecution has raised the "red" issue and has challenged the right to legal existence of the Communist Party.

A special red-baiting Deputy Attorney General—although defeated in the last election—heads the prosecution, amply supplied with funds by the "Associated Farmers" and the Industrial Association. Religious and racial prejudices are played upon to secure a conviction. The Hearst press is flooding California with anti-red and anti-labor propaganda. And in this atmosphere of fierce reactionary agitation the Sacramento City Manager has publicly taken upon himself the arming of 600 "citizens" to repel an alleged invasion of the city.

The American Legion, the Elks, the Lions, Rotarians, Kiwanis, priests, rabbis, pastors, Boy Scout leaders, real estate brokers, brothel keepers and legislators—one and all are yelling for the incarceration in San Quentin of the eighteen defendants.

In face of this gigantic lynch party one duty remained supreme for those engaged in the active support of the defense: solidarity and unity of all defendants before the capitalist court despite differences of political views. Only utter disregard for working class interests could permit any other course.

For these reasons we accepted the building of a united front in the Sacramento defense as our special task and we have not swerved one inch from the pursuance of this aim. One of the defendants no longer adheres to the Communist Party. He shares the views of the Workers Party; but the capitalist court is no place for the discussion of internal working class differences.

We knew that the accomplishment of a united front in this defense would be no easy task. The pernicious attitude of the Communist Party had made that appear well nigh impossible. When members in their own ranks demanded a united front in this case they were denounced as stool pigeons. All the prejudices, artificially fostered, all the obstacles created by their false policies had to be battered down one by one to make a genuine united front possible in which the participants accept its obligations and carry them out honestly.

At the present moment this united front has been accomplished and a defense committee set up including the Communist Party, the Workers Party, the Socialist Party, the International Labor Defense, the Non Partisan Labor Defense, the Civil Liberties Union and other organizations mutually agreed upon by all concerned. The organizations involved and the defendants are pledged not to raise the internal controversial issues before the capitalist court and the attorneys for the I.L.D. and the N.P.L.D. cooperate in the courtroom.

Will this united front last until the case is through? This we cannot guarantee since it involves more than our party. But we can say that only light-minded charlatans would consciously take any steps or carry out any actions designed to endanger or break the united front defense.

Our position is clear. We fought for the united front from the day we entered the case. We are pledged and we carry it out honestly not only for the sake of one defendant who shares our views, not only for the sake of the other seventeen defendants, but for the sake of the working class—the real defendant at Sacramento.

The C. P. and the Labor Party

AFTER having been the almost exclusive property of the right wing in the Socialist Party for years, the slogan of a labor party has just been taken over bag and baggage by the leadership of the Communist Party.

The leader of the Communist Party, straight from Moscow, rushed down the gangplank of the boat which brought him home, grabbed the first train to Washington, and in the presence of the assembled delegates of the "unemployment insurance conference," set forth the new revelation.

Thoroughly characteristic of the present regime in the Communist Party is the fact that although it has been the policy of that organization for the past seven years to oppose the slogan of a labor party in this country, its leadership never even bothered to inform the membership that a change had been made in the policy.

Up to yesterday, the C.P. bureaucracy looked upon anybody who advocated the formation of a labor party as a deliberate agent of capitalism, a social demagogue and a social fascist. The right wing of the Socialist Party was the special object of C. P. ridicule and attack precisely because it defended the idea of a labor party.

What, then, is the meaning of this abrupt, bewildering and bureaucratic turn-about-face which has been effected in the dark of the moon?

On the lips of Waldman, Panken, Solomon the demand that a labor party be formed, or that the S. P. should initiate or help to create one, signified an acknowledgment that the S. P. had failed even as a party of reformism.

The slogan is a confession of bankruptcy.

On the lips of Browder and his trenchmen, the appeal for a labor party in this country has essentially the same significance. In his "historic" speech in Washington, Browder as much as confirmed this. In effect, he declared:

I think the C. P. is the only party that is good for the working class; but the working class doesn't think so. It does not yet want a revolutionary party. Well, since this is the case, we, the Communist party is perfectly willing to create a non-revolutionary party. The kind that you want. After a while, you will learn that this party is not really the kind you need, and just as we created it for you, we will smash it for you so that you can finally follow the leadership of the only, genuine, real, etc., party.

What other sense can be made of this political abracadabra?

We do not believe it to be the job of revolutionists, who have had the opportunity to thoroughly absorb the lessons of what labor and reformist parties have led to in Europe, to create a reformist labor party in the United States.

We shall return to the question of the labor party in greater detail in forthcoming issues of the New Militant.

Tom Mooney's Freedom

WHEN the United States Supreme Court entertained a writ of habeas corpus for Tom Mooney in November 1934 we said the action was a post election sop to the California working class. At that time the court ordered the state of California to show cause why the writ should not be granted.

Leaving aside the sheer irony of entertaining a writ of habeas corpus eighteen years after incarceration, we remark that our analysis was correct. The court has refused the writ.

The Supreme Court has the colossal gall to inform Mooney that he has not made sufficient efforts to obtain his freedom in the California courts. After eighteen years of appeals and reappeals, after four governors have refused pardon, after the California Supreme Court has declined to review the case!

The Court said that "Mooney had never asked the California court for the writ on the grounds which he now submits," and refused to deny that California would grant him his proper legal rights.

After eighteen years! Ironically, Mooney is sent back to California law at the very moment when it is in the act of railroad-ing eighteen workers in Sacramento—for what? For the crime of organizing agricultural workers!

The Supreme Court is a court of aristocrats and millionaires. Mooney's freedom—the freedom of class war prisoners—is up to labor.

Attack the Enemy

THE best defense is a good offense. Attack the enemy—put him on the run.

This strategy is particularly important to the workers of the United States today.

The employers are pushing the attack on unionism. Section 7a of the N.R.A. title as it has done actually to secure to the workers the right to organize, is to be emasculated or repealed altogether if the bosses have their way.

Mindful of the growing sense of solidarity displayed by the workers in Toledo, San Francisco, Minneapolis and other strike areas in 1934, the National Association of Manufacturers now proposes federal legislation to prohibit general and sympathetic strikes. If the machinists, for example, go on strike over a question of wages, no other workers even in the same shop may stop work if the N.A.M. is to be suited!

The only answer to these proposals to hog-tie and enslave the workers is for them to pick up where they left off last fall—organize in rubber, steel, automobiles, and fight out the issue of union recognition on the picket lines.

Production is for the moment on the rise in these industries. The bosses would like to avoid trouble. The American Federation of Labor leaders must not be permitted in 1935 to prevent or sabotage strikes as they did in 1934. It is because these bureaucrats did all in their power to thwart the militancy of the masses that the bosses have dared to take the offensive again.

Let the workers of Akron, of Weirton, of Detroit, and a score of other centers take the offensive again! Union recognition will not be won in Congress, or in a Labor Board hearing, or in the Supreme Court, but in militant strike struggles.

The Workers Party of the United States pledges its utmost support to these struggles.

is taught in our respectable universities.

That workers are chronically thrown out of their jobs, by technological change, by the business cycle, by seasonal influences—all this is disregarded. Similarly, the New Deal social welfare lads forget that the American worker hardly earns enough to support himself, let alone to save for his old age, and that as he grows older, his earning power declines.

The annuities are to begin at 65. But the worker under modern industrialism becomes aged economically long before he is biologically old.

Fifty-Fifty?

The cost of purchasing the annuities will be divided 50-50, in theory, between workers and bosses. But if the boss does not pass on his share, as wage reductions, something is wrong with the theory of the incidence of taxation as it

Where the old age pension scheme is hollow mockery, the unemployment insurance plan is a straight kick in the pants. To begin with, it will be financed by a 3 percent payroll tax. This means the cost will be shouldered back upon the wage earners, through lower wages or higher living costs. In either case, the wage earning masses will not share wages and hours, as they do today, but in addition they will share the enforced saving.

The plan has been conceived to make sure that the various insurance funds will go bankrupt from time to time. It contemplates not one pooled national fund with an offsetting of risks by industries, regions, and enterprises, but 48 separate state funds; and in each state thousands of individual plant reserves. The evident intent is to encourage state schemes modeled upon the abortion of the Wisconsin liberals. And the Wisconsin plan does not even pretend that unemployment insurance is its primary objective, but addresses itself to coaxing employers into regularizing production and employment. Thus we shall probably have sanctioned, by the Act of Congress, the idea that individual employers can turn back the tides of economic forces.

Democratic Poverty

When the President set up his Committee on Economic and Social Security last June, the Secretary of Labor remarked that not for us any European scheme of economic and social insurance, but an American scheme; not for us any socialistic devices, but democratic devices.

"Security"? Perhaps, if you call it "insurance". "Insurance"? Fine—but be sure it encourages self-help and thrift among the casualties of the economic order, and be ever so certain that it costs the owners nothing. To safeguard the profit system, after all you must first safeguard profits.

ACROSS THE COUNTRY

to write for the Central Labor Union paper.

The Auto Workers' Union has kicked out Ramsey and Bossler and its present leaders make no secret of seeking the help of our comrades. The union is growing rapidly and despite the fact that the Auto-Lite plant itself is still half company union, thanks to Ramsey's influence, the Minger interests hesitate to provoke a quarrel. They've had a lesson!

Five members of an S.P. local drove 60 miles over roads that were a sheet of ice to our Toledo mass meeting. And they weren't sorry!

Toledo branch is growing. Sam Pollock can't be spared for Detroit just now. Ted Selander, however, is going to Columbus to hold down the office of the National Unemployed League of which he was elected treasurer last summer.

DETROIT, Mich.—There's going to be big political news soon from Detroit. It will mean a substantial accession to the W.P. But we'll have to keep the comrades guessing for a while.

Meantime we can report that the Detroit branch has a good start, has the respect and confidence of the best elements in the trade union movement, and with the forces that are being sent in will prove itself capable of handling even as big a situation as Detroit.

Reports on the interesting and complex industrial situation here, the New Militant is getting from other comrades. Capitalism is booming here. Ford working 24 hours a day.

So there's no unemployment in Detroit?

Say, comrade, we said capitalism is booming.

CHICAGO, Ill.—A hall jammed with nearly 400 people, Spartacus Youth with their red sashes, the crowd so interested that we had to get the management of the hall to extend our time, the C.P. and S.P. attempts to answer us so weak that the workers present often roared their derision, the singing of the International and three mighty cheers for the Workers Party of the U.S.—that was the Chicago meeting.

A Hot Situation

It's 10 below zero here meteorologically speaking, but it's a "hot" situation as far as our branches, the Spartacus Youth League and prospects of growth are concerned.

The Chicago branches believe that a district comprising Illinois, southern Wisconsin, eastern Iowa and Missouri and northwestern Indiana, with headquarters in Chicago, ought to be set up soon. Comrade Cannon and I are convinced by their arguments and are recommending action to the Political Committee.

There are a million things to write about Chicago, but here as elsewhere the time is all too short. Besides, I can hear the editor cussing now because this copy isn't in. Better have mercy on us. As I said, it's 10 below zero here, the weatherman says the cold wave is staying for a while, and we're headed for Minneapolis and—the North Pole!

reached in advance. Fearing organization of a proper legal defense, the presiding justice refused to continue the hearing. Since the new defense counsel was unacquainted with the case, the justice permitted Art Preis and Pollock to cross-examine the witnesses. When Duncan was placed on the stand, the cross-examination became so hot the justice quickly ruled these two could not legally carry on the questioning.

The justice refused to permit any testimony on the matter of relief conditions and administration.

Relief Building "Private"

Inable to find a legal basis for the charge of "trespass," the justice ruled that the relief building—rented with public funds for a public agency—was the property of the relief administration only and in that sense "private" property. He ruled that the public could remain in the building until the regular closing time.

George McGee, one of the defendants and fighting Negro leader of the Roosevelt Unemployed League, replied to a question as to why he did not leave the building at closing time. "The closing time of the relief office may be 12 o'clock but when your stomach is empty it's still open."

Mrs. Frederick, a militant Leaguer, asked what right she had to walk up the stairs of the relief building, answered, "Because I am a citizen of the U.S. I believe I have the right to remain as long as it takes to get food for starving children."

Charges are being preferred at once against Duncan before the new state relief administration and a committee of the Ohio Unemployed League will demand his immediate removal.

That Pittsburgh Convention

Tighe Will Maneuver to Hold Steel Delegates in Check - Bill Spang is Opposition Leader

blocking the rank and file revolt within the steel union will automatically liquidate the less organized and developed rank and file movements of the other participating unions.

Will Delegates be Hoodwinked?

Whether or not the delegates will allow themselves to be hoodwinked by these concessions or by any other maneuvers on the part of Green, Tighe and their henchmen is hard to predict. As far as the A.A. is concerned, the rank and file movement seems to be suffering from the same weaknesses that were apparent in the famous Committee of 10 which nullified all its excellent opportunities for destroying the Tighe bureaucracy and rallying the union to a militant struggle against the slow attrition tactics of the steel barons.

These weaknesses resulted from the lack of program, of a common tactic, and a unifying agreement based on progressive union policies. The movement was directed against the person of Tighe rather than the philosophy and tactics that make Tighe possible. The members of the Committee, united by a common dislike of Tighe, were disunited on every other basic point. The rank and file found themselves with an assortment of leaders but with no leadership. It was a comparatively simple business, therefore, for Green to sidetrack the strike movement and to throw the fight against company-unionism onto the laps of the N.R.A. the courts, the lawyers and all the thousand practitioners of pink sentiment and red tape.

Not Likely Again

The rank and file members of the A.A. are not likely to repeat that particular mistake. They have had eight months of the Steel Labor Relations Board and are today in a worse position, if anything, than they were at the outset.

(For a detailed description of what the Steel Labor Relations Board has "accomplished" for the steel workers see article on page 3.)

"Our Men Are Desperate"

In the words of Bill Spang, chairman of the Fort Duquesne Lodge which has been the spark plug of the fight against company-unionism:

"The union will not live through another delay like this. Our men are already desperate. Some of them are hungry—they have kids who are undernourished and wives who face away right under their eyes. Unless our union starts to fight company-unionism with every weapon at its command right now—there may be no one to fight with later on. The men will go back to work."

Bill Spang was one of the members of the Committee of 10. He will be chairman of the "rank and file convention" and one of the leaders of the rank and file movement for the strike and against the Tighe bureaucracy. Hard fisted, courageous, sincere, unshakably honest, Spang represents the virtues characteristic of rank and file leadership in the steel unions. And he represents the weaknesses of this leadership as well—weaknesses that may well prove fatal to the present movement as they were to the Committee of 10.

Bill Spang's Weakness

He does not understand that an opposition movement within a union demands an even more careful organization and consistent leadership than a movement in opposition to boss greed. He will not submit to the discipline imposed by a program, the discipline that obliges every leader to submerge his personal differences, opinions and weaknesses in the interests of the common program and the common cause. He is an individualist, relying upon personal prestige and ability to storm the bureaucratic barricades. He has the man-of-action's contempt for careful planning, for "theorizing" and, in consequence, is fair prey to the very first plan that comes his way—in all probability the worst possible plan.

Such is the plan proposed for A. A. action in the "rank and file convention." The delegates will lay their plans for organization and appoint their own organizers for carrying these plans out.

Tighe is Afraid

"Tighe does not want to organize new locals," says Spang, "because he knows he would lose control. If we left it up to him to send in organizers he would send us guys like the one we had last time who was more congenial to the steel company than to us. We are going to organize the A.A.—Tighe or no Tighe, and then he can sit at his desk and look at the four walls of his office."

In these naive reckonings, the seeds of defeat are already sown. Tighe will not look at those four walls long before he evolves a plan for gaining control of the new unions or for keeping control in spite of the new unions. Actually, that is what his position is, if he is not removed from office. And if the A.A. and file movement within the A.A. is strong enough to follow a plan of organization based on an eventual steel strike in spite of the Greens and Tighe then it is also strong enough to remove Tighe and clean house generally. If it fails to do this, it will also fail to carry out its other plans.

A Golden Opportunity

There is certainly a golden opportunity in the present movement to overthrow the reactionary Tighe and their destructive class-collaborationist policies and to reassert the militant traditions and the progressive history of genuine trade-unionism. The time is at hand for an entire reorganization of the unions on democratic and non-compromising principles. Will the "rank and file convention" achieve these things?

Letters To The Editor

An increasing number of readers write letters to the editors of the New Militant. Most of these letters deal with subjects that will be of interest to a large number of readers. In the future, therefore, the editors have decided to turn over this section of the New Militant to its readers. Conditions for publication are: 1) No letter shall be over 300 words in length. 2) The name and address of the writer must be known to the editors.

START MEETINGS ON TIME!

Dear Comrade Editor:

A party starts out with certain principles, certain tactics, and an organizational set-up.

In the process of building itself, certain "details" are cast aside, even treated with scorn. "There are bigger things" is the answer to these smaller problems.

I would like to bring up one of these "details" for consideration.

In the "left-wing" movement all meetings, parties, gatherings, demonstrations are traditionally unpunctual. Lateness has become almost a fetish.

Originally, perhaps, comrades and workers were so busy, that they could not manage to arrive on time. However, starting a meeting one hour after scheduled time has since come to be a sort of hoary tradition, that no radical party would dare to violate.

Aside from the physical inconveniences of this lateness, it must be remembered that some time, in our career as a revolutionary party, we may come across a "raw worker," one unfamiliar with the ways of the reds. When this worker does come to our meetings, he will come on time. And very likely he will be alienated by the undisciplined fashion in which our meetings are run.

Glance over the correspondence section of every working class paper, union, political, social, and you will read this same plea for promptness, for discipline.

What other working class parties and groups have failed to point out, are the political implications of promptness.

The worker is accustomed to efficiency. His boss makes him come to work on the dot of eight.

We as revolutionists admire the well run machine. We base our ideology upon maximum efficiency. —We fight for an efficient, well-run society.

In order to secure this society, we ourselves must have a well-knit, well-run machine. And punctuality, discipline in meetings, gatherings and demonstrations, is one very important factor in our efficiency.

Aside from the bad psychological effects of lateness, as a political tactic, it is ruinous.

I would therefore advocate that the National Committee take up discipline in meetings as a real issue. That branches discuss and pass resolutions on this subject, and that disciplinary measures be introduced to insure the efficient conduct of meetings and gatherings not only of the party itself, but of mass organizations in which the party participates.

As an agitational "front" this insistence upon punctuality and disciplined conduct of meetings is invaluable. As a party we will be set apart, our efficiency will be symbolized by this innovation.

A month hence, a year hence it will be too late to decide that we're going to conduct our meetings in a more orderly fashion. You can't break down old habit patterns easily!

What do the comrades in the field think about this question? I believe that the New Militant should devote space to it, and lastly, I urge that action be taken. It's easy to nod one's head wisely and say "that's right!"

Let's become the party that meets on time!

—COMRADE A. B. C.

REVIEWING THE NEWS

By BILL SHERMAN

NEW TITLE WANTED

The editors don't like the title of this column, so they got together with the business manager and I am asked to announce that a year's subscription to the New Militant will be given free to the reader suggesting the best title. The editors to decide. Titles must be in by February 15.

The Mooney Case

Again the "courts of justice," this time the highest in the land, played shuttlecock with the life and liberty of Tom Mooney. This time the publicity and protests of the radical labor movement was so strong that the nine fossilized tools of Wall Street had to administer a gentle slap to California "justice," while on a "technicality" they condemned an innocent man to a continued living death. They passed the case back to California, where that other "stalwart representative of American democracy," Governor Merriam, says he is too busy to consider it now.

Where do our "labor leaders" stand? That smug Baptist faker, Bill Green, remains as silent on Mooney as he was vocal when helping to break the Frisco general strike.

"All the News That's Fit to Print"

That's the motto carried on the masthead of the New York Times, and they print a boxed in front page display to the story of the Judge in the Hauptmann case, giving a cough drop to the defense lawyer, and the Shenandoah mine explosion is tucked away on page 9.

Slobbering Over Stalin

Never to my knowledge has there been such servile slobbering over a leader in any section of the labor movement as is found today in articles, speeches and resolutions of the Communist Party of Stalin. Even Olgin's postical praise of America's entry into the World War is surpassed by the following greetings sent to Stalin by the Moscow District Committee of the C.P., which we take from a New York newspaper:

"Long live he who has led our party in the struggle against all enemies of Leninism! Long live he who is teaching the Party daily and hourly the art of discerning the enemy in the very embryo and mercilessly stamping him out! Long live he who has secured the victory of our Party and the iron unity of the Bolshevik ranks! Long live our own great Stalin!"

The Dignity of the Court

The Hauptmann case continues to be the big news in the capitalist papers. It has been turned into a "Broadway success" by the press, by publicity-seeking lawyers, judges, etc. Here is a man on trial for his life, charged with kidnapping and murder, and yet guards have been posted over the hall to stop the gales of laughter that sweep the courtroom. The Prosecuting Attorney, noting that the interest of his audience lagged during the hearing of expert testimony and fearing that attendance would fall, decided to bring in a Broadway burlesque to break the monotony. Such is the dignity of justice in America, the dignity of a waterfront prostitute.

Strikers Versus Labor Leaders

After a militant ten weeks' strike, employees of the Kayne Company (Cleveland) returned to work with the signing of a collective bargaining agreement by the company and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. A Cleveland paper reports that following the signing of the agreement a workers' rally was held in the NEWS Auditorium, which was addressed by Sidney Hillman, President of the A.C.W. "In the evening the union tendered a banquet to Mr. Hillman, officials of the company, city officials and judges." We wonder why the chief of police was left out—or was he?

and bona fide trade unions. However, at the first meeting among those claiming to represent organizations was one man who said he belonged to the American Veterans Association, "only that organization is controlled by agents of the Industrial Association and last night they expelled me and 11 others, but I represent them officially."

Real United Front
The attempt to pack the united front was defeated. Voting together for a real united front policy were the Workers Party, the Socialist Party, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense and the Civil Liberties Union.

A slanderous article had appeared the previous week in the Western Worker, referring to "racketeering" and linking the Non-Partisan Labor Defense with it. Herbert Solow, N.P.L.D. representative, declared he regretted that the I.L.D. did not make some statement concerning this article. After much hesitation, the I.L.D. representative promised a printed retraction in next week's paper.

What do you think of it? Do you like it? Good! Or have you any ideas for a better one? This is the time for all hidden talent to blossom forth. Immortalize yourself as the creator of the revolutionary symbol of America.

Send all suggestions, drawings etc. to the Political Committee, National Office, New York.

LIVELY MEETINGS MARK SPEAKING TOUR FOR WORKERS PARTY

Enthusiastic Crowd Cheers The New Party in Chicago

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 20.—The interest in the formation of the Workers Party is such in Chicago, that over 350 workers turned out to hear Comrades Muste and Cannon speak at the Capitol Building on the program and aims of the party. The audience responded with frequent outbursts of applause.

Muste and Cannon laid down an analysis of the present economic and political situation which necessitated the formation of the new party. They showed that the Workers Party, armed with a realistic revolutionary program, with connections in the trade union centers throughout the country, with a powerful unemployed organization and a well circulated press, bids fair to become THE revolutionary party of the American proletariat.

Communists Believe

A large number of left Socialists listened attentively to the speakers. The Communist Party was also represented by about twenty members, who, surprisingly as it may seem and for the first time, behaved themselves in an orderly fashion and did not attempt, in their usual manner, to disrupt the meeting.

Following the speeches a collection was taken. Over $70 was collected and $25 pledged.

The chairman announced that a speaker from the S.P. and the C.P. might take the floor and present their party's point of view. A prominent section leader of the C.P. got up and set forth to damn and slay the W.P.

Brought Down the House

Much to the amusement of the workers, this worthy deplored the fact that the program of the W.P. was really a communist program stolen from the C.P. on a dark night. He literally brought down the house when he referred to "comrade" Muste (not Mr. Muste) and stated that he regarded him as an "honest man who had made contributions to the American labor movement."

God Forbid!

A left Socialist next took the floor and argued that the W.P. should be in the S.P. today, helping to reform it and revolutionize it. He pleaded that the W.P. should follow the example (God forbid!) of Albert Goldman and enter the S.P.

Comrade Cannon replied to this. Defeating the big talk of tremendous mass contact, he showed how the actual left wing was very small and had no reason to look scornfully upon the W.P. The W.P., he stated, did not deny the existence of a developing left wing. But the best way to help the left wing was precisely by forcing it to fight the S.P. old guard, with a view to splitting them and then of uniting all revolutionists into one party.

Describes Zig-Zags

No less effective was Comrade Muste's reply to the C.P. speaker. He evoked great laughter when he showed the recent zigzags of the C.P. both with regards to the class struggle in general and with the characterization of himself as an honest man, whereas up to recently he had been classified as a black-guard and left social fascist. Muste threw into the teeth of the Stalinists the challenge to defend their policy of terror in disposing of political opponents in the Soviet Union, after the Kirov assassination. He concluded with an appeal for support of the Workers Party.

Waukegan, Ill.—Despite bad weather, 55 workers gathered to hear James P. Cannon explain the program of the Workers Party. The speech was the opening gun in the drive of the Waukegan Branch for new members.

DETROIT—About 150 workers, representing every important political tendency in the labor movement, heard A. J. Muste and James P. Cannon, outstanding leaders of the Workers Party at Jericho Temple Jan. 18. The meeting was the first held by the new party in Detroit. The response was enthusiastic.

In the audience were Socialists, several of them new members who had joined, hoping for a new revolutionary policy in that party; there were one or two lone Love-sonettes, who are still hard at work "reforming" the local Communist party; and a handful of Stalinists. Present also were some of the leading members of the Detroit Branch of the Proletarian Party, many of whom are the most active militants in the Mechanics Educational Society of America, a union of some 20,000 tool and dye makers.

Twenty new contacts were established for the Workers Party at the meeting.

NEW CASTLE, Pa.—A. J. Muste spoke to 60 persons here on Jan. 15. The question and discussion period centered around the policies of the Soviet Union; the collapse of the Second and Third Internationals and the necessity for the Workers Party.

Following the meeting an organizational meeting of the Branch was held. Rocky Lewis was elected branch organizer.

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—Comrades Muste and Cannon helped us get the new party off to a fine start in this city.

Quite a number of youthful, healthy elements of the Cleveland working class were present. The new party is being discussed in every hall and center where workers meet throughout the city.

Textile Strike Looms - Will It Be Another Betrayal by UTW Leaders?

By FELIX GIORDANO

ALLENTOWN, Pa.—The wave of militancy which came over the textile workers last year, and which culminated in the general strike of last September, is far from being dead.

The betrayal of that strike at the hands of the vacillating and inept leadership arouses the workers now more than ever.

It will be remembered that the last convention of the American Federation of Silk Workers, in spite of the top clique, had to promise strike action in case (!) the report of the Industrial Relations Committee appointed by the Winant Board should not be satisfactory.

No report has been made public. But the report may have already been made, and may be now in the hands of the national officials of the U.T.W. and of the American Federation of Silk Workers, without the organizations making it known to the members.

Delegates to Meet

This possibility assumes gigantic proportions in view of the fact that a meeting of delegates from all over the silk industry has been called suddenly for next Sunday in Al-lertown to discuss the possibility of strike action on a national scale.

It seems, then, that the report has been made, and—naturally enough—it is not satisfactory.

But if that is the case, why call a meeting of delegates to talk about it? Why not let the membership of the organization know about it first?

A burning question now confronts the silk industry. Is this strike to be a repetition of the debacle of last September? Is the same group of bureaucrats that were responsible for that shameful betrayal, going to be in charge of this strike?

Francis Gorman, the official head of the last strike, has recently made utterances to the effect that the textile workers have been betrayed in the confidence they put in the Government.

That sounds very much like an attempt to rehabilitate himself with the workers.

It suggests that the silk-rayon strike, which seems quite certain, may be only the prelude to a new general textile strike to follow either immediately or closely after it.

The question comes up: Can the present U.T.W. leadership conduct another textile strike?

The workers who saw their fellow-workers die in the deep South and in Rhode Island only to have the strike called off when it was still on the upswing, and without any gains, will they forget the lesson of only a very few months ago, and again follow the same kind of leadership? Can they be rallied to follow a general who is so ready to sound the retreat?

On the other hand, there is no possibility to change now, even mildly, the leadership of the U.T.W. If a strike call is issued, the same men will be at the head of it.

Way Through Strike Committee

It appears evident that if any results are to be obtained by the next strike, be it in the silk-rayon or in the whole textile industry, the only way is through a militant, progressive, clear-sighted Strike Committee—ready to follow the U.T.W. leadership so long as it shows firmness and militancy, but ready to continue the strike in spite of the U.T.W. when the same officials show—as they will—weakness and uncertainty, and lose from sight the situation.

This Strike Committee must be representative of the membership and close to it, coming immediately from its ranks. It must be composed of the most clear-sighted elements in the unions, ready to push on the fight when the fighting is good. This does not mean that it should be composed of adventurist elements, who—mistaking a defeat for a victory—will continue (or try) to push on a fight that has lost morale.

These are the two evils between which the textile workers must steer.

Weakness and reactionary tendencies on the part of the leadership will prove to be the workers' own defeat.

But romantic adventurism will prove equally as destructive by distorting the truth, pushing when retreat would be wisdom, giving hopes to the masses in the face of doom.

Will the textile workers be able to secure such leadership? Only if such leadership is theirs can they hope to achieve any gains.

Sop to Akron Labor Hides Company Aim

AKRON, Ohio, Jan. 26.—Good-year, Goodrich and Firestone threw Akron rubber workers a bone in the form of a three cent per hour wage increase last week.

This was belittled by the companies as having come through the tireless efforts of the company unions.

The announcement came as a surprise to the red apple boys whose first knowledge of the plan came from the evening papers.

At the same time, tire production is rapidly shooting toward the 1929 peak.

The rubber barons are obviously trying to stage off union militancy with the wage sop while building up a huge inventory toward the time when strike action breaks out.

Meanwhile Dr. Coleman C. Clarity, head of the A. F. of L. rubber workers' council, continues to play the old shell game with an angry and impatient rank and file.

A few more passes like sabotaging the Firestone strike vote, which was lost by only 25 votes, and palavering with the National Labor Relations Board—especially after its own confessed impotence in labor disputes, and the Firestone rank and filers are going to take the medicine show out of his hands.

And once they do that, they aren't going to fool.

Leaves Communist Party for Workers Party -- Tells Why

"To me it is becoming increasingly evident that the banner of proletarian revolution is now in the hands of the Workers Party," says Harold Smith, resigning from the Communist Party.

The letter of the section membership committee to Comrade Smith and his reply to the district committee are published below, without further comment.

Jan. 18, 1935

Comrade Smith:

Please call at Section 5 this Wednesday, Jan. 23, 7:30 P.M. to see the Section organizer about the statement that you made in our Section that you are in favor of Trotsky and that he is the only true disciple of Lenin. As this is the second notice that we are sending you, if you do not answer by Wednesday, you will be expelled from the C.P. and publicly exposed as an enemy of the working class.

Membership Committee, Section 5, District 2

Charles Krumbeln, District Committee C.P., U.S.A.

My reasons for resigning from your party I may state briefly.

1. Your party no longer applies the teachings of Lenin but the arbitrary decrees of Stalin and his picked crew. Your party is dominated by a bureaucracy and as a direct result, sectarianism keeps you separated from the working class.

2. Since the suppression of the best minds and spirits of the revolution, your officialdom has accumulated a long list of failures. . . .

3. The Party's trade union policy, its united front tactics, its amonous with the League of (capitalist) Nations, its concessions to the French and American bourgeoisie, indicate too clearly the headlong march to the right.

4. When your apparatus grows, it swells with the pus of the petty bourgeois. The backbone is non-proletarian and flabby.

5. You are no longer capable of self-criticism, and having become inflexible, you no longer need polemics. You have very mysteriously caught the knack of avoiding any and all mistakes. Subsequent events invariably prove that the latest debacle of proletarian defeat shows the correctness of the party line.

These are some of my reasons. Your letter informing me that if I fail to see the organizer by Wednesday I shall from that day become an enemy of the working class, is a happy bit of humor. The simple fact of the matter is that by returning my membership book some two weeks ago, I resigned from the C.P.

It is known of course, that you do not recognize a resignation. But on this point there appears to me much discord, i.e. on what you recognize and what the workers are actually doing.

You say I will be "exposed." May I ask—exposed to whom? And exposed in what connection?

I ask my friends and comrades inside the C. P. to recognize the political surge when such sterling proletarian revolutionists as Zack, Strong, Taylor, Terry etc. are making the turn. I ask them to study the platform of the Workers Party so that they may really be able to judge. To discard the "disciple" bugaboo, and begin to study with free heads. To recognize that the monster Fascism can be destroyed not by blind obedience but by democratic centralism, by the widest polemics and by genuine individual initiative.

To me it is becoming increasingly evident that the banner of proletarian revolution is now in the hands of the Workers Party.

The real disunity is the disunity of working class leadership and the achievement of unity rests with these leaders—or with the workers, if they fail.

This is the basic problem within the unemployed movement and in every other section of the labor movement. It cannot be solved by "accommodations," "coalitions" or by "federations" of unemployed organizations in the name of an abstract autonomy, but only by the most thoroughgoing and uncompromising elimination of all differences in theory and tactic.

Confusing the Problem

The problem has been confused by the very natural inclination of every leader or body of leaders to lay their own plans and aspirations on the doorstep of the plans and aspirations of the workers.

Thus, in the very worst days of the "United Front from Below" when every minute of that practice pushed unity back a year, the C.P. leadership shouted that "the workers were crying for unity"—meaning thereby that the workers were crying for the "United Front from Below" and the subsequent destruction of every organization but the Communist Party!

And thus, every pompous manifesto of the socialist old guard speaks in the name of the "workers"—who are apparently not afraid to defy the bayonet and the machine gun in a strike but fear to oppose imperialist war even on paper because it might annoy the police!

Even the Weisbordites, all 6 of them, weave their incredible phantasmagorias in the name of those same "workers"—who are prevented from embracing Weisbord only because they are handcuffed by Gitlow!

Workers Cannot Deviate

The workers need a clear revolutionary program and a consistent revolutionary leadership. They are not concerned with deviations. The workers themselves cannot deviate, however much they may be led to bark at tinsel moons temptingly dangled over them by the Roosevelt, the liberals and the fascists. In the end there is only one path that leads to the goal—the revolutionary path. When the workers realize this, they will set up the cry for unity.

But they will mean, not their own unity (for it is by the recognition of their own unity that they find the revolutionary path) but the unity of their leadership. The leadership will either lead the way to revolution and the workers world by the shortest and most direct route, or fall by the wayside with the thousand Kerenskys at al.

Nothing finally can destroy the essential unity of the proletariat. It is said that failure to unite against Fascism results in Fascist "unity"—that is, the concentration camp. This is true, but not final. The unity of the concentration camp can be destroyed, but the workers are indissolubly united by a single interest and a single goal. Unity can be delayed, obstructed, fed into the lunatic byways and the reformist highways—but it cannot be destroyed.

This is the conception of unity held by the National Unemployed League. It underlies the NUL program for achieving unity in the unemployed movement. But before we come to that program, we will review briefly the united front experiences of the NUL to date.

The Struggle for Unity

The experiences of the NUL in the struggle for unity may be classified for the sake of convenience as follows: a) the united front on specific issues, b) organizational and organic unity.

In reality, however, this classification is not altogether valid.

The united front is, or should be, a transition measure towards organic unity within a particular field, i.e., the unemployed movement, the trade unions, etc. (The S.P. practice, which strictly limits the united front to "specific issues" is comparable to the lady of high virtue who limits her lover to a single kiss. Neither lovers nor workers will stand for this sort of teasing, finally.) Nor is there any "specific issue" confronting the workers on which they can unite as separated from any other issue on which they, presumably, cannot unite. There are issues that do not immediately involve organic unity, but organic unity is the goal of every genuine united front.

The united front on specific issues is the preliminary to the testing ground of organic unity. That has always been the understanding of the NUL. Thus, at the first Columbus convention a united front was entered into with the Unemployed Councils WITH A VIEW TO CALLING A UNITY CONVENTION. Failure to carry out the united front successfully would result in failure to achieve the unity convention.

Testing the Councils

At this time the famous open letter of the C.P. to itself in which the united front from below was seemingly repudiated had hardly dried off the press. There was to be no double-dealing, no stabbing in the back. Issues were to be met squarely. The right of criticism was not abrogated, but confined to the work at hand.

The NUL accepted this agreement in good faith, recognizing then as now that dualism in the unemployed movement was one of the greatest impediments to progress. But almost at once evidences of bad faith on the part of the Councils began pouring into headquarters.

In Columbus itself, Council leadership blithely continued to damn the leaders of the NUL as if there had never been a united front.

In Toledo, where the Councils and the Leagues had united to carry out a relief-work strike, the Council leadership promptly forgot about the strike and concentrated on printing exposures of the social fascists.

In Pennsylvania, a "red-herring" was deliberately foisted on the Allentown League which might have destroyed that organization.

Patience—Another Letter

When the NUL complained of this sabotage, the leaders of the Councils explained that the new tactic, i.e., the abandonment of the United Front from Below had not yet trickled down to the rank and file. Only time and patience were required. But in the weeks following, the back-stabbing and sabotaging increased rather than diminished and the patience of the NUL came to an abrupt end when a letter from the N. Y. district of the Communist Party to the Toledo Unemployed Council fell into its hands.

The letter called on the Councils to make every use of the united front, not to win the relief strike, but to smash the Leagues!

When A. J. Muste read this letter to the Cleveland Trade Union Conference that same year in the presence of most of the top leadership of the C.P., the only answer was their complete silence. Only a rank and filer in the rear of the hall was heard to mutter: "How in hell did he get that letter?"

Real Story in Relief Paper

ALLENTOWN, Pa.—Angered by the Pollyanna relief paper put out by relief officials, transients in the Allentown Transient Shelter put out their own uncensored paper.

"The first two pages of the last edition were taken up entirely by those persons who are not on relief and who get a regular income," they wrote. "One article pleaded with us to have sympathy and tolerance. One stated that because Dawes, the banker, predicted an upturn in business, every transient would get a break—if he had the patience."

How do transients fare?

"They check us out for refusing to do insulting and degrading work; for being sick too often, for not taking 3 more shots after losing our medical card, for not seeing a notice on the Bulletin Board within an hour after it is posted, for not signing food and lodging orders on the specified hour, for telling the truth, for knowing too much, and for non-cooperation, which can mean a multitude of things," the uncensored paper said.

WORKERS' EDUCATION FOR ALLENTOWN

ALLENTOWN, Pa.—A united front between unions and unemployed Leagues was instrumental in obtaining a State Emergency Relief project in Workers' Education for Allentown. Classes will meet in union and League headquarters and will start Feb. 4. Courses will be offered in Public Speaking, Writing, English, Labor Dramatics, Labor Problems, Labor History and Current Events. A workers' library and reading room is to be opened, all Allentown labor organizations co-operating in its upkeep.

The project, which calls for 14 teachers, is under the supervision of Bill Reich, educational director of the Lehigh County Unemployed League and former instructor of Labor Education at Commonwealth College. An enrollment in excess of 500 is expected.

Garage Strike Ends in Gains

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—On Saturday night, Jan. 19, the membership of Local Union No. 382, Garage Mechanics, voted to accept the strike settlement as drawn up by committees from the employers and the union. The settlement terms are approximately the same as those upon which the St. Paul strike was ended: a minimum of $55 an hour for mechanics; a minimum of $18 weekly for washers, greasers, runners and attendants; time and a half for overtime; 30 hours a week guaranteed; union recognition; no discrimination, etc.

The settlement represents real gains for the workers in Minneapolis garages and auto body shops. Not every one of the demands was won with this strike, but with the relationship of forces it was certainly the best agreement that could have been obtained. Hundreds of workers, furthermore, have come into Union 459 and 382 during the last two weeks. Both organizations now have a firm foothold in their industry.

Act Against Chiseling

On Sunday an overflow mass meeting of garage workers was held at the General Drivers Local 574 auditorium. Among the speakers were Bob Cramer, editor of the Minneapolis Labor Review, Herman Husman, International representative, Henry Schultz, secretary of the State Employees Assn. and Farrell Dobbs, business agent of Local 574. A broad committee was elected, at the meeting to check up on the bosses, beginning early Monday morning, to see that no chiseling on the workers takes place.

Bridge that Gap!

NO REVOLUTIONARY labor organization has ever been able to make any progress by the efforts of its members alone. Without their devotion, self-sacrifice, zeal and activity, the movement would of course be inconceivable. But while they bear the greatest part of the burden of work, they cannot assume the whole of it. The rest must be taken off their shoulders by—the sympathizers, the unaffiliated friends of the movement.

The number of sympathizers a working class party has and the vigor with which they come to its aid—these are the tests of the party's success. The response of sympathizers to the appeals for support which the party must make from time to time, indicates the influence the party has radiated and the prestige it enjoys.

Answering the most urgent need of the hour, some of the best forces in the American revolutionary movement have joined hands to launch the new party. They do not include altogether "green hands", amateurs, dilettantes, but men and women who have given their best years to the working class movement. In it, they have gained a vast store of experience and ability which is now at our disposal. Not only do they incarnate the best and richest traditions of the revolutionary movement in this country, but they bring to the Workers Party the living proof of its ability to lead stormy struggles of labor. Minneapolis, Toledo, the battles of the unemployed—which directly preceded the formation of our party—are symbolic of the work which it is going to carry on in coming days.

And what magnificent prospects for work there are! Reports which come to us every day from all parts of the country speak eloquently of the inexhaustible possibilities. Our meetings are larger than ever before. Our organizers are insufficient in number to meet the growing demand. Automobiles, steel, rubber, mining, transportation—the big and basic industries of the country—are sending in urgent appeals for assistance in organizing, in preparing for the great battles with which the year 1935 will be filled. Our press is leaping forward in circulation and ever increasing numbers of workers are proving the favorable impression that our party's views and activities are making on them.

How shall we meet this growing demand? How are we to profit by the splendid opportunities that confront us? How are we to satisfy the requests for more speakers, tours, organizers, literature?

The wheels of the party machinery must be lubricated for greater speed and efficiency. Our Party Foundation Fund campaign is calculated to do just that.

Every party member is called upon to make the maximum sacrifices. They must pay their dues regularly. They must do their union work. They must do their work in the organizations of the unemployed. They must assure the regularly increasing distribution of our press and periodical literature. They must organize our meetings. They must arrange special affairs. They must contribute special donations from time to time, running as high as two-days' wages in the present campaign.

They accept these burdens cheerfully. The revolutionary movement is their very life's blood and they are always ready to do their utmost for it. But the need is greater than even their efforts suffice to meet. And that is why we must appeal for supplementary aid from our sympathizers who, for one reason or another, are unable to join our party.

Do we need to labor the point? We don't think so. Every friend of our movement, we feel confident, will respond generously and speedily to our appeal. The money is urgently required. Your contribution will help make it possible for the party to accomplish all those jobs imperiously facing it. And the speedy giver—gives doubly.

Booker T. Washington-He Pleased the Bourgeoisie

By SIMON WILLIAMSON

Booker T. Washington, the founder of Tuskegee Institute, and the chief promoter of industrial education for Negroes, did much to curb the militancy of the Negro worker in this country by making him contented with existing economic conditions.

Washington taught that if the Negro were to better his condition in America he must become an efficient workman through education of his hands as well as his brain in the use of the crafts and remain willing at all times to render a "fair day's" work for a "fair day's" pay. However, he was always to content himself with a wage lower than that received by the white workers in the same craft. His philosophy was somewhat the same as that of Samuel Gompers in the American Federation of Labor. He sought to make black labor subservient to white labor. He advocated job consciousness in place of class consciousness.

Helped Exploiters

The white bourgeoisie of the South and North accepted Washington with open arms and heralded him as the champion for the advancement of his people. They saw in him a man capable of suppressing militancy and enabling them to continue in peace their schemes of robbing and exploiting the Negro and white masses. Washington was, moreover, cognizant of this fact.

Tuskegee, the school that he founded, teaches the use of technical crafts that have been replaced by new technical devices. It is endowed by millions of dollars coming from the coffers of white millionaires in this country, who profit through the exploitation of Negro toilers in the South.

Washington represented the corrupt type of Negro middle class leadership that came to power during the reconstruction period. Unlike Douglass and Pinchback he put up no fight for equal citizenship and the right to suffrage for the blacks. He was apparently happy and contented with the grand-father-clause laws that deprived the Negro workers of their right of franchise in the southern states. In the midst of it all he told the Negro toilers to be contented and "cast down their buckets" where they were. He encouraged them to become property owners and businessmen despite the hostility of the white landlords and business men of the South.

Got Additional Glory

In speaking once of social equality for Negroes, Washington said: "In things industrial we can be as close as one, but in things social as separate as the fingers on the hands."

This pleased his white financial masters and they covered him with additional honor and glory in the form of more endowments for his institution. They well knew that so long as such ideas were shoved down the throats of the Negro and white workers there would be little danger of unity and their position as robbers of the American workers, would be secure.

Washington later sought to strengthen the position of the Negro middle class through organizing the Negro Business League for the purpose of discovering new means of robbing the Negro toilers of whatever the white bourgeoisie failed to take from them. From this movement grew the philosophy of the petty Negro bourgeoisie of patronizing, by Negro workers, businesses owned by Negroes. They knew the glories that could be derived from segregation by the individual once they could win the confidence of their group.

He Twisted History

Washington falsely interpreted history. He taught, in the face of the Negro participation in the struggles of the Knights of Labor in 1869 and in 1890, that the Negro's interest was "purely economic" and had nothing to do with politics. He ignored the fact that in those years Negroes had led a determined struggle for political equality and the rights of suffrage.

He modelled Tuskegee after Hampton, the school from which he graduated, and sought to develop a skilled and efficient Negro labor force that would remain loyal to its

THE STRUGGLE AGAINST WAR

Pacifism No Aid, But Helps the Militarists - Only through the Class Struggle Can War be Fought

By JOHN WEST

(Ed. Note: This is the second in Comrade West's series of four articles. The remaining two—"The League Against War and Fascism" and "The United Front and War"—will follow in the next two issues of the New Militant.)

Even a brief study of the nature and causes of modern war proves that war is an essential part of capitalism. The inner conflicts of capitalism lead and must lead to war. All Marxists, and in fact many pseudo-Marxists or even liberals, accept this conclusion.

Nevertheless, there have been the most serious misconceptions in following out the consequences of this conclusion so far as they apply to the struggle against war.

The most serious mistake made in the attempted struggle against war comes from the wide-spread belief that this struggle is somehow "independent" of the class struggle in general, that a broad union of all sorts of persons from every social class and group can be formed around the issue of fighting war, since—so the reasoning goes—these persons may be all equally opposed to war whatever their differences on other points. War is thus lifted from its social base, considered apart from its causes and conditions, as if it were a mystic abstraction instead of a concrete historical institution. Acting on this belief, attempts are made to build up all kinds of permanent Peace Societies, Anti-War Organizations, Leagues Against War, etc.

TO END WAR WE MUST REMOVE CAUSE

This kind of attitude is about as effective as it would be for doctors to treat the high fever in acute appendicitis by putting the patient in an ice-box. The only way actually to get rid of the high fever is to remove the cause of the fever—that is, to take out the diseased appendix. The same thing is true for war: the only way to get rid of war is to remove the cause of war.

Putting screens around the rotting supports of a building will not improve its foundations. It will, in fact, do just the opposite—it will divert people's attention from the need for new foundations, and therefore make it all the more likely that the building will collapse.

War is not the cause of the troubles of society. The opposite is true. War is a symptom and result of the irreconcilable troubles and conflicts of the present form of society, that is to say, of capitalism. The only way to fight against war is to fight against the causes of war. Since the causes of war are part of the inner nature of capitalism, it follows that the only way to fight against war is to fight against capitalism. But the only true fight against capitalism is the revolutionary struggle for workers' power.

It therefore follows that the only possible struggle AGAINST war is the struggle FOR the workers' revolution. Marxists must be absolutely clear on this point. There is no "separate" or "special" struggle against war. The struggle against war cannot be divorced from the day-to-day struggles of the workers so far as, in their historical implications, these lead toward workers' power. No one can uphold capitalism—whether directly, as an open adherent of the capitalists, or indirectly, from any shade of liberal or reformist position—and fight against war, because capitalism means war. Only a revolutionist can fight against war, because only a revolutionist takes the road to the overthrow of capitalism.

To suppose, therefore, that revolutionists can work out a common program "against war" with non-revolutionists is a disastrous illusion.

Any organization based upon such a program is not merely powerless to prevent war; in practice it acts to promote war, both because it serves in its own way to uphold the system that breeds war, and because it diverts the attention of its members from the real fight against war. There is only one program against war: the program for revolution—the program of the revolutionary party of the workers.

SOCIALIZED ECONOMY WILL END CONTRADICTIONS

The workers' revolution can and will eliminate war because, by white master. To accomplish his objective Washington bowed to all of the prejudices of the bourgeois South. Knowledge of the peculiar problems of the wage earners has never been taught in either Tuskegee or Hampton. They specialize in the philosophy of the white master class.

Although the Negro Business League was practically a failure by 1900 the false philosophy of Booker T. Washington's "education" still penetrates large sections of the Negro masses and must be eradicated before large sections of Negro workers in the South will enter the ranks of organized labor in a struggle to annihilate capitalism.

overthrowing capitalist economy and supplanting capitalism with a socialist economy. It will remove the causes of war. Under socialism there will no longer exist the basic contradictions that lead to war. The expansion of the means of production, under the ownership and control of society as a whole, will proceed in accordance with a rational plan adjusted to the needs of the members of society. Socialism will remove the limits on consumption, and hence permit the scientific and controlled development of production. Thus, under socialism, war will disappear because the causes of war will have been removed.

PEACE PLANS AND PACIFISM

Since this is the basic nature of the struggle against war, the attitude of a Marxist toward any "official" bourgeois "peace plans" is self-evident. The World Court, the Washington Treaty, the Kellogg Pact, the League of Nations, whatever their pretensions, are actually expressions of the irreconcilability of the imperialist conflicts.

Far from being instruments of peace, they are, in fact, part of the preparation for imperialist war, stamping grounds where the great powers can jockey for the most advantageous position for the start of open conflict. If at times they seem to settle a war situation "peacefully", this is only because the interest of the dominant powers is an immediate outbreak. Postponement serves only to assure a greater conflagration when the time comes. They serve, in point of fact, as additional means whereby the great powers can carry out their imperialist aims.

This is above all true of the League of Nations, which was formed to preserve the Versailles Settlement (that is, formed as an instrument of aggression against, and subjugation of, the defeated nations) and as a part of imperialist unity against the post-war revolutionary drive of the workers, and which is utilized now to maintain French hegemony on Continental Europe and the world position of France and England. How meaningless it is, is well enough illustrated by the withdrawal of Germany and Japan at the first real issue.

The League will keep peace as long as peace is to the interests of the powers that control the League. It is into this den of imperialist robbers (as Lenin called it) that Stalinism has led the Workers' State!

But if Marxists must separate their position sharply from official bourgeois peace plans, they must distinguish themselves no less clearly from all forms of pacifism. The revolutionary struggle against war—the struggle for workers' power—is at an opposite pole from pacifism. A Marxist is against any and every war undertaken by the capitalist state of course, just as the Marxist is the implacable enemy of the capitalist state—the political representative of the class enemy—on every occasion.

But it is the business of the Marxist, upon the outbreak of imperialist war, to work to turn that war into a class war, a war of the masses under the leadership of the working class for the overthrow of the capitalist state and the establishment of the rule of the working class.

Likewise, it is the business of the Marxist to support actively the revolts of colonies against their imperialist oppressors, and the uprisings of all oppressed and exploited races and nations, since these are directed against the power of the imperialist states—just as he supports strikes and any other manifestations directed against the capitalist class or its government.

War is not an abstraction; wars are a social institution, concrete historical phenomena. The final aim of Marxists includes the elimination of wars of all kinds. But they know that this can be accomplished only through one particular kind of war—the class war—since only through the class war can capitalism be overthrown and the causes of war thereby removed. This requirement is due not to the wishes of Marxists but to the actual historical situation.

PACIFISM AIDS WAR

Marxists must, therefore, expose and seek to prevent all kinds and forms of pacifism—all theories and organizations, that is, based on a mere "anti-war" program.

Pacifism is not merely powerless against war—since it is not based on genuine social organization nor a clear analysis of the causes of war. In practice it aids war: by spreading illusions about the nature of war and the fight against it; by shifting the energies of honest opponents of war to a fictitious fight against it; by sugar-coating the realities of capitalist society and thus making them—including war—more palatable; by subordinating the working class to middle class individuals and ideas; by preparing the betrayal of the masses in the next war, when outstanding pacifist leaders will decide in the crisis that this war is different from the last war, that it is for democracy, culture, God, or what not—and call for support of the government.

No, the pacifist way is not the way to fight war. In the struggle against war, properly understood, every militant demonstration, every broad mass labor defense fight, every well-led strike, every step in the workers' advance to power, is worth a thousand Peace Leagues.

Long Waits, Small Benefits Feature of Insurance Bills

By HUGO OEHLER

The post-war period has witnessed the rise of a permanent army of millions of unemployed workers in the leading capitalist nations. One after the other, these countries have been forced to adopt some form of unemployment and social insurance. The last to even consider, let alone adopt an unemployment insurance plan, is the United States. Although unemployment for the last four years has fluctuated around 16 million, the States and the Federal Government and the bosses have tried to keep unemployed relief on the basis of charity. They have attempted to ignore it as a social problem.

But the prolonged crisis, the failure of all relief measures, the failure to stimulate industry through government subsidy and the increased mass pressure of the working class has at last forced the capitalists and their government to consider the question of unemployment insurance. They hope to give a few crumbs as possible, accompanied with a press campaign that creates the impression that Social Security is at hand.

If concessions must be given—then give a fake unemployment insurance plan. That seems to be the slogan. The bosses hope, thereby, to hold off more important concessions, such as the six-hour day and the five-day week with no reduction in pay.

They Call It Insurance

The various plans of the bosses and their government revolve around bills which, when passed mean nothing to the workers. These bills have long waiting periods, short periods in which the relief is given, small and inadequate amounts of benefits with discriminating clauses, to be administered by the bosses, with many of the working class excluded, and funds to be obtained through a tax on the workers or the employers and the employees. Relief in name, but not in fact!

A few of the many plans are the Wisconsin Act, the Bill proposed by the N. Y. State Federation of Labor, the William Green Plan, the Wagner-Lewis Bill, the Roosevelt Plan and the Lundeen Bill.

With the exception of the Lundeen Bill, the plans are attempts to side track real unemployment insurance. The Wisconsin and Wagner-Lewis Plan and the William Green Plan endeavor to obtain the funds from the employers, but these bills have so many clauses that they nullify the better sections that they are inadequate to say the least. All three bills exclude many classes of workers. The Wisconsin plan is for industrial workers only. All three plans have long periods of

A year of Struggle in France

February 6 will mark exactly one year since the political crisis that changed profoundly the course of the class struggle in France. On that date, utilizing as a pretext the Stavisky scandal that had stirred the masses to the depths, the forces of reaction accomplished by a coup d'état the overthrow of the "radical" socialist government of Daladier and its replacement by force by the Doumergue government. The rioting of the reactionaries on February 6 was answered by the tremendous demonstrations of the working class in the week following.

But the Doumergue government, aided by the capitulation of the petty bourgeois parties, remained in power and proceeded to establish a dictatorial, anti-parliamentary regime. Doumergue, attempting to prepare the way for fascism more rapidly than class forces would permit, was in turn voted out of power by the attenuated parliamentary regime still existing, and his prototype Plaudin took office as premier. Plaudin carries out the function of opening the road to fascism.

The United Front

The course of events, the imminent menace of fascism, aroused among the masses a strong sentiment for militant action. The lessons of Germany and Austria were too near at hand for the workers to permit a reactionary victory without strong resistance. By the pressure of the masses the two major working class parties—the Socialist and the Communist—were compelled to enter into a united front to combat fascism. The Communist League of France (Trotskyists) threw its forces into the French Socialist Party in order to exert its influence in the united front to counteract the opportunist policies of the bureaucracies of the two parties by proposing and fighting for revolutionary policies leading towards the defeat of fascism and the taking of power by the working class.

Alliance with the Bourgeoisie

The policies pursued by the leaders of the two parties in the united front have tended not to lead the masses in militant struggle, but on the contrary to lull them into inaction. Both bureaucracies, starting with a non-aggression pact not to criticize each other at all, are unwilling to aim at establishing workers' power—the only method of defeating fascism. Instead, the two leaderships prefer to uphold bourgeois democracy, the one because of its entire nature historically, the other due to the needs of Soviet diplomacy to maintain the French military alliance.

Recently the Communists took the initiative in adding to the united front the Radicals and the Radical-Socialists, both parties of the petty bourgeoisie. The Socialist Party, taking its cue from the C.P., has accepted this situation without much opposition. This is the surest way to give the victory to the reactionary forces and to bring about the bloody defeat of the proletariat. Under the guise of the common interests of the youth, the Young Communists of one Paris District have actually held meetings in common with the fascists organized in the Patriotic Youth.

The Anniversary

The French masses are waiting expectantly for February 6. It is possible that the fascist Croix de Feu and Francistes and other organizations may attempt, as they have threatened, to demonstrate their power anew on this date. This would undoubtedly bring a fresh current of struggle and resistance into the ranks of the proletariat. Unless the workers are aroused from the apathy into which they seem, on the surface, to have sunk in recent months, fascism may march forward at faster pace. The recent riots at Chartres give the first signs of renewed street battles which will take on a wider mass character in the days to come.

Sugar Workers Strike in Porto Rico

A dramatic strike movement grips the island of Porto Rico, where the colonial slaves of Wall Street have again rebelled. The sugar plantation workers were the first to strike. One by one the majority of the sugar centers of the island have been paralyzed. Stevedores and truck drivers have struck in solidarity with the plantation workers. The movement is marked by great militancy: canfields are being burned; clashes between workers and scabs are hourly occurrences; many arrests have been made. On Jan. 19 six boats operated by scabs were scuttled. Finding the forces of capital and the colonial administration pitted against them, the strikers resorted to sabotage as a weapon of struggle.

The great number of strikes that have swept the Caribbean area since the outbreak of the Cuban revolution 18 months ago, indicates the increasing radicalization and organization of these toilers in Wall Street's colonial domain. The United Fruit Company's banana workers in Costa Rica and Colombia have been active and at the present moment, which is the period of the sugar harvest, the sugar workers of Cuba, Mexico and Veracruz are striking hard blows against their exploiters. The major weakness of the movements is the lack of coordination between labor in these countries.

Greater unity of action between the workers of the various countries is essential for victory.

Roosevelt Program

If the workers needed any further evidence that the Roosevelt program is for the bosses and against the workers, the Social Security bill now before Congress promises such evidence in overwhelming abundance. Four billion dollars is to be appropriated for public works to be carried out under the President's personal and exclusive direction. Thus three and a half billion are to be taken off the relief rolls and put to work. We submit the following damning indictment of this program:

1. It makes scabs of those who take jobs under it. The President talks openly of paying $50 per month, about $11 per week, on these jobs. As a matter of fact, not enough money is being appropriated to pay that much. In many cases, therefore, especially outside the biggest cities, men and women will get as little as $5 per week. This constitutes scabbing on the standard of the entire American working class.

2. By the same token, the program means the pauperization of the entire working class, while profits pile up in the hands of a few who are enabled by the grace of Roosevelt to luxuriate in Florida again as they did in the good old days of the Coolidge-Hoover boom.

3. Roosevelt is made a dictator over the lives of millions and enabled to proceed with building a mighty political machine.

4. Since no specific provision is made as to what the money is to be spent for, it will enable Roosevelt (i.e., the American imperialists) to go ahead with a big naval and military program.

Let the unemployed organize to fight the Roosevelt scabbery Panzerization Program. Let them demand the 30-hour week and $30 weekly wage on all jobs. Let the employed workers, the unions, the farmers, the masses everywhere support the unemployed in this fight!

Abject poverty, utter slavery, will be the lot of all unless the Roosevelt program is killed!

Hearst and the Bosses

WILLIAM Randolph Hearst is crusading against the "Reds" for the protection of his interests, his newspaper monopolies, his California barony and the honor of his movie queen.

The steel companies are fighting the "Reds" for the protection of their interests, their company unions, their untrammelled freedom to exploit labor and their right of making as much profit as possible with as little return as possible.

Michael Tighe, in common with all of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats, is fighting the "Reds" in the steel unions for the protection of his interests, his right of controlling the union as he sees fit, his determination to avoid any kind of militancy even if it means the destruction of the union.

The "Reds" are the common denominator, the universal bogey for all these interests. Here is the proof.

The Duquesne Times, organ of the Carnegie Steel Company of Duquesne, Pa., reprints a Red-baiting editorial from the Hearst Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph with this note:

"The following article should be published in every loyal newspaper in the United States. And if results are not favorable communities should adopt the same method that for a time was in vogue in the early history of California. There are plenty of vacant trees, and hemp these days can readily be produced." (Duquesne Times, Friday, Jan. 4, 1935.)

The Journal of the Amalgamated Steel Workers in its last issue publishes an editorial aimed against the "Progressive" movement in the union. It charges the movement with being a communist affair and calls on all workers to "stamp out the reds in your locals".

In the one case the steel bosses are fighting the steel workers, calling them "Reds", trying to create a lynch psychology against them. In the case of Tighe, he is fighting the more militant steel workers, trying to create a lynch psychology against them by calling them "Reds".

In both cases, William Randolph Hearst supplies the philosophy and the ammunition.

That is how "Red" becomes the name of every worker who fights exploitation and labor-fakers. As one of the Jones and Laughlin Mill steel workers expressed it:

"When they call us 'Reds' it only means that we are not dummies. When the steel bosses yell 'Red' it means that we are asking for union recognition. When Tighe yells 'Red' it means that we are fighting for union democracy. So why should we kick? That's what we are doing, isn't it? And the more they yell, the more we're going to do it!"

THE PARTY AT WORK

THE TOLEDO BRANCH

The Toledo branch is carrying out a program of action of its own.

This program was not formulated in exact terms on paper, but in real life every action undertaken brings the branch forward ever more as a distinctly leading political force in the class struggle.

In many respects it constitutes a model of an active party branch.

In all important labor events our comrades are in the forefront, not merely in the sense of a unit taking its post collectively. And the important thing is that results are obtained.

Take, for example, the recent relief actions of the Wood County Workers and Farmers.

Strenuous efforts were made by the authorities to isolate our comrades who were in the leadership, and to single them out for special punishment. They did not succeed, because our comrades had made themselves a completely integral part of the movement and the determined reply: "If one goes to jail, we all go to jail," won the day. Not only did the attempts to single out for special punishment fail, but the demonstration settled some of the grievances that were pending.

After the demonstration the branch members took an inventory. How was the trial conducted by the defendants? Had they been sufficiently effective in their testimony? Was the demonstration sufficiently well organized to bring out the collective will of the participants and the full force of their unity of action? These subjects were analyzed. Lessons were drawn that will serve for action in the future.

The Toledo branch is prompt in reporting every event, the trade union progress in the city, the strikes and the position taken by the branch. With these comrades, the latter is not merely a theoretical question. What the Toledo branch says and does has important bearing on the course of the general movement there. Branch members continue to be the leading militants in practically all union actions.

The Auto-Lite union is gaining strength and has adopted a distinctly progressive course. Long ago the reactionaries, Ramsey and Bosler, were eliminated from office.

Mike Tighe and his reactionary administration is in control of the central union apparatus. He has turned thumbs down on the conference. He will certainly attempt to strike a deadly blow at the progressives. Would it not be reasonable to assume that in a choice between this administration and the progressives the whole of the A. F. of L. officialdom, when called upon, will support Tighe against the latter, and reinforce the weight of the blow? Certainly, that can be expected, and it can be met effectively only through the power of organization.

We suggest, therefore, that the very first duty that the progressives owe to the union and to the steel workers is to organize themselves as a separate and distinct force within the union and each member of this movement accept the discipline imposed by majority decisions.

This organization should extend throughout the local lodges with a progressive group organized in every lodge. Naturally this would require that the progressive movement establish a medium of publicity and propaganda, to win the union and build it up to embrace all workers in every steel mill in the country.

To understand what this means, it is necessary only to refer back to the Auto-Lite strike of last summer. It enjoys prestige in the general movement because the workers know that when it promises support in a struggle it also carries it out with telling effect. Our comrades have proven themselves to the unions as a political force, capable of charting a correct course and winning victories.

By committing themselves to this point of view on Section 7a, the labor boards sealed their own doom. They would have to be scrapped, so the Administration became convinced. For the time being, it would now appear, the strike wave has exhausted itself (although forces are still at work in iron and steel, automobile manufacturing and cotton textile which may soon lead to new blowups). In the belief that the strike movement will continue on the decline, the Administration is preparing to get rid of the boards, a useless luxury, which at the same time, spoil the works. The President's Jennings ruling is the first step in that direction.

NEW STRIKE-BREAKING LEGISLATION

Suppose, however, that the drive for labor self-organization breaks through the straitjacket of the National Run Around. What then? The most likely move is that an effort will be made to replace Section 7a by new legislation calling for the compulsory arbitration of strikes. The mask of voluntary partnership between labor, management and government will be dropped, the brutal truth of capitalist coercion will reveal itself full-face. The labor boards will be divorced from their powers (on paper) of telling anti-union employers how to behave, and will be restricted in function to one task alone: suppressing direct working class action. The necessary laws are already being formulated by draftsmen official and unofficial. They will be launched as soon as expedient, under the smoke-screen, no doubt, of amending and perpetuating Section 7a.

A Bold Policy for Progressives in Steel

Retreat Before Tighe Would be Fatal - Militants Must Organize Their Forces to Unionize Industry

THE call for a conference, issued by the progressive district leaders of the steel workers' union, to be held in Pittsburgh Feb. 3, is an act of significance. Much depends upon what this conference decides to do. No doubt it represents a culmination of resentment produced by a whole series of grievances that found no satisfactory solution, neither through the appeals made to the National Steel Labor Relations Board nor from any action of the official union leadership of Mike Tighe and Co. The necessity for this conference therefore grows out of the situation under which the steel workers live and work.

The rank and file steel workers demand action. They want a union that can serve as an effective weapon of battle against the powerful and rapacious steel trust. A serious responsibility rests on the progressives who have taken the leadership in organizing this conference.

This leadership has acquired many excellent attributes, but it suffers from weaknesses and shortcomings. Now it is called upon to propose a solution of the grievances of the rank and file and to blaze the trail for a union that can speak in the terms of power—the only terms understood and recognized by the steel barons.

We feel that this progressive leadership will welcome suggestions merited by the experiences of the class struggle. Therefore, we venture these suggestions.

Organize Progressive Forces

Up to this moment the progressive forces have fought for their ideas and conducted their activities entirely through the officially recognized union machinery, proceeding in the main from their entrenched positions in the districts. This has served as a source of strength and enabled them to enlist widespread support from the union membership. But it has also led to certain weaknesses, owing to the fact that they lack cohesion, the discipline and above all the organization of a separate and distinct course.

Mike Tighe and his reactionary administration is in control of the central union apparatus. He has turned thumbs down on the conference. He will certainly attempt to strike a deadly blow at the progressives. Would it not be reasonable to assume that in a choice between this administration and the progressives the whole of the A. F. of L. officialdom, when called upon, will support Tighe against the latter, and reinforce the weight of the blow? Certainly, that can be expected, and it can be met effectively only through the power of organization.

We suggest, therefore, that the very first duty that the progressives owe to the union and to the steel workers is to organize themselves as a separate and distinct force within the union and each member of this movement accept the discipline imposed by majority decisions.

This organization should extend throughout the local lodges with a progressive group organized in every lodge. Naturally this would require that the progressive movement establish a medium of publicity and propaganda, to win the union and build it up to embrace all workers in every steel mill in the country.

A Bold Policy

To build the union as a fighting weapon it is necessary to have a bold policy and carry it out courageously. Bean-shooters are of no avail. No reliance can be placed on the National Steel Labor Relations Board. Clarence Irwin, president of District No. 6 of the Amalgamated Association, pointed this out in a recent issue of the Progressive Steel Worker. He said that any program for organizing the steel workers which is less than an industry-wide movement is worse than futile.

An aggressive national campaign of organization is long overdue. The favorable moment may disappear. The A. F. of L. should be called upon to make good its promise and support a campaign of organization financially. But to leave the direction of this campaign to Green and his lieutenants would be no better than to leave it to Grandmother Tighe.

Financial support from the A. F. of L. should be conditioned upon the districts of the Amalgamated Association selecting its own organizers, the activities of organizers to be supervised by the districts. The Tighe administration has proven itself unfit for this. Needless to say, adjustments should be made in initiation fees, etc., to make it possible for all workers to join the union.

A National Strike

A campaign of organization inevitably brings forward the question of a nation-wide strike to win union recognition. Piece meal efforts will not do. But a nation-wide strike in the steel industry is a gigantic task. It cannot be posed lightly-mindedly or faced without the most serious preparation and leadership. Nor will it do to back down in the manner that happened last summer. Another such back-down would stop the union progress and growth for a long time to come.

Leadership in organization and preparation for a nation-wide strike can come only from the progressives. It requires instant attention. The steel trust will not grant union recognition willingly and it will not be granted by mere appeals based upon the NRA. Organization and preparation for a strike must be approached in terms of power—the power the workers have when they are united to wield it.

Powerful Allies

Organization of the steel industry is a key question for the whole American trade union movement. The steel workers have powerful, potential allies. A serious struggle in steel would have widespread repercussions in many unions and would secure untold support.

The coal miners union is directly affected by the present open-shop move that the steel trust is attempting to enforce in the captive mines. The progressive steel workers should pursue a policy looking toward the establishment of a firm alliance with the coal miners. In our opinion an appeal should go out from the headquarters of the Amalgamated Association calling upon the coal miners' union to make common cause with the steel workers in a nation-wide strike for recognition of the steel union and for the granting of its demands, together with recognition of the miners' union in the captive mines.

This appeal should also go out from the districts of the A.A. to the districts of the miners union and it should be followed up by an intense agitation among the rank and file coal miners. From the miners an effective response is certain when they are properly approached.

Unemployed Allies

Among the potential allies of the steel workers, count also the unemployed organizations. The jobless workers realize that they must make common cause with the unions in their struggles. Look at the effective manner the unemployed workers have helped on the picket line in recent strikes. A call from the A. A. to the unemployed organizations in the steel territories to help prevent scabbing, and to assist on the picket lines, would produce results. We have no doubt that the unemployed organizations themselves would lose no time, as soon as prospects of a strike appeared, in preparing their own members to lend all possible cooperation.

Retreat is Fatal

Above all, however, it is necessary to recognize now, in the problems that the steel workers' union now faces, that any retreat would be fatal. No further vacillations should be tolerated.

It is time to have done with the treacherous, bureaucratic schemes of the Tighe administration. It is necessary to recognize that none of the demands of the steel workers, and that the actual building of the union, cannot be accomplished without direct, persistent struggle against the Tighe administration as well as against the steel trust.

The Tighe administration has thrown down the gauntlet to the progressives. It is up to them to pick it up and to make it a fight to the finish, to clean this whole administration out of office. This is an absolute prerequisite of a powerful steel workers' union.

force. It looks like the next big achievement for Minneapolis.

A regular and a special meeting of the party branch, a party meeting well attended in spite of 30 below zero weather, a rousing banquet at which sympathizers contributed a substantial sum to the Party Foundation Fund, a meeting of several hundred students and faculty members of the University of Minnesota, a forum in St. Paul and another in Minneapolis, a meeting of the Northwest Unity Conference, the organization of militant unionists in these parts—these items contributed a part of the speaking schedule here! But as suggested above, the weather was cold and bracing, so we have survived.

In fact—we had better make it public lest the comrades conclude that Comrade Cannon and I have gone plutocratic or that the party has come into a fortune—we look like new men. Some of the trade unionists here clubbed together and fitted the two of us out with brand new suits, union label and all!

At the Branch E.C. meeting Sunday morning twelve new members were enrolled. It is expected that a party office will be opened soon. Our stay here ended as might have been expected in this region where one strike follows on the heels of another. Eight or ten of the comrades were in my room at midnight for a last chat. The telephone rang. Miles Dunne was wanted. Fargo, N. D. was calling. Miles has organized the drivers there. They are on-strike for union recognition. The call was from a newspaper man in Fargo and conveyed the news that a few hours before the police force, which has sworn in 300 special deputies in that town of about 25,000 inhabitants, had appeared at union headquarters with warrants for Miles Dunne and two local leaders. The union men refused to open the doors and give up their leaders. So the police shot tear gas bombs through the windows, rounded up 94 strikers and threw them into jail. They did not arrest any of the women and children of whom a considerable number were in the hall. The warrants against Miles Dunne and the other leaders charge rioting and inciting to riot. Thus our gathering was transformed into a council of war. Strike and defense plans were mapped out.

The Workers Party, Local 574 and the other unions in Minneapolis, the organized farmers around Fargo, will get those drivers out of jail and call the bluff of the Fargo reactionaries who think that terrorism can stop the militant labor movement of the northwest. The Non-Partisan Labor Defense may be called upon to help.

CP Jeopardizes Liberty of 18

honestly this conference can succeed only in accomplishing a further split. This separate conference is to be held Feb. 10.

Already several A. F. of L. progressives who were ready to respond to an honest call have indicated that they will attend no conference on Feb. 10. The general disgust which will result from the Stalinists' behavior will undoubtedly weaken the whole defense movement. The N.P.L.D., however, is carrying on, and will build a united front of all honest militant elements.

Thus far the N.P.L.D. has succeeded in taking two I.L.D. prisoners out of jail, in bringing into the case Albert Goldman whose legal capacity and excellent courtroom judgment is proving invaluable in this difficult case, in popularizing the case as a whole, and in forcing the I.L.D. into the open on its various sabotaging and disruptive policies. If other organizations continue to back up this fight, the defendants may yet see a mass movement behind them and not be left to the tender mercies of their capitalist enemies or their Stalinist "friends".

At this moment the N.P.L.D. is badly in need of funds to pay the expenses of Attorney Goldman and other bills incurred in the Sacramento work. Answer the disruption of the Stalinists with a contribution to the N.P.L.D.'s Sacramento defense funds. Despite and against Stalinism, throw your weight behind an honest, fighting defense movement.

trap! Witness the Weirton strike, the Budd strike, the Harriman strike, et al.

Their best was hardly good enough, however, to cope with the recurring and persistent upsurge of militant labor. No matter how hard the boards sat on the lid, the pressure blew it off. Thus the San Francisco, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, and Toledo strikes, the captive mine and the national textile walkouts. But in the performance of strike-breaking, their chief function, the boards were diligent and conscientious.

Unfortunately for their continued existence, the two major boards—first, the National Labor Board, then the National Labor Relations Board—took Section 7a at face-value. They not only sought to suppress strikes, they also issued decisions, which if put into effect, would have compelled employers to recognize and deal with trade unions. But the employers simply ignored them and the government made not the slightest move toward enforcement.

By committing themselves to this point of view on Section 7a, the labor boards sealed their own doom. They would have to be scrapped, so the Administration became convinced. For the time being, it would now appear, the strike wave has exhausted itself (although forces are still at work in iron and steel, automobile manufacturing and cotton textile which may soon lead to new blowups). CAPITOL NEWS LETTER

Labor Bureaucrats Howl as Roosevelt Disregards Auto Union

By JACK EIDER
WASHINGTON. — For once in their lives, the bureaucrats of the A. F. of L. spoke the plain and simple truth when they howled that the newest version of the automobile code had been "imposed" not on the employers, but on the workers.

Did the President consult with organized labor before extending the code, for the third time, without the formal pretense of a public hearing?

He acted as if the Labor Advisory Board—executive arm of the A. F. of L.—simply did not exist.

Did the President accept the advice and counsel of his National Industrial Recovery Board?

By a vote of 5 to 2 the Board recommended that the code be scrapped rather than renewed on the basis proposed by the Automobile Manufacturers' Association.

Did the President ponder upon the joint report submitted by his two disinterested experts, Messrs. Henderson (Research and Planning) and Lubin (Bureau of Labor Statistics)?

Their report, he blithely informed the press at large, had been "lost" in the shuffle of papers on his desk.

One readily sympathizes with the A. F. of L. leaders in their discomfiture and dismay. But what on earth did Mr. Green and Co. expect? They had their chance to assert the claims of labor in the automobile industry last March when the rank-and-file workers were pressing for a nation-wide strike.

Faced to face with the threat of direct mass action, the President wavered in decision, the A. F. of L. leader so well, assisted by Green's stupid betrayal, that the workers have been groaning ever since under the burden of works councils, proportional representation, and the ineffable Wolman Board. Rather than drop the class collaboration ideal (that famous partnership among management, government and labor) the A. F. of L. leaders sold out the strike. They entered the agreement of March 25, 1934, with their eyes wide open, fully aware that the President's settlement meant a complete tactical route for the United Automobile Workers.

Thanks to that sell-out by its leaders, the A. F. of L. has lost most of the power which it once commanded among the robots whom General Motors, Chrysler and Ford find it convenient to employ. Today the federal unions in the automobile industry are pitifully weak, low in membership, downcast in morale, torn by internal strife, the theatre of a bureaucratic scramble for offices and emoluments.

The President, after all, is a consummate master of Realpolitik. Why should he pay the least attention to a negligible quantity? Why should he disturb himself for the benefit of a ghost?

We can leave Green and Co. to their agonies. They have the capacity to discover, but not to learn. What is more important, is that the rank and file workers should profit from the lesson. They have nothing to rely on but organization and force. They can organize what is worth fighting for, only when they are ready and able to fight for it.

There is no hope for them in the New Deal's professions of belief in "social justice," "economic planning" and the "redistribution of wealth and income." There is still less hope for them if they trust to Messrs. Green, Collins, Dillon, etc. And by fooling around with the apparatus of official labor boards, they merely paralyze their ability to strike.

Fantastic Evidence Used by State in Labor Trial

SACRAMENTO, Feb. 4.—Most of this week's session of the trial of 17 defendants charged with criminal syndicalism has been taken up with testimony and cross examination of 70-year old William Hanks, stool pigeon hired last April by Prosecutor McAllister to frame-up the union.

The prosecution's attempt to make capital out of Hanks' fantastic claims that he had been driven out of Sacramento in September at the point of a gun by persons he believed to be communists was turned into a farce by Hanks' thick-witted remarks.

Hanks declared he "didn't think it was necessary" to notify police that he had been intimidated. Asked why he didn't telegraph local authorities of his plight when he reached Omaha, Nebraska, Hanks replied: "Well, there's communists there, too." He decided, he said, to stay out of town because there "was a big communist convention in Sacramento September 20, and I didn't know but that I might be hurt."

More Defendants Bailed

Five defendants bailed out on Thursday by the International Labor Defense. Only one defendant had been previously bailed out by the I.L.D. It was only after the Non-Partisan Labor Defense had bailed out two of the chief defendants, Jack Warnick and Caroline Decker, and was about to bail out Nora Conklin, that the I.L.D. bailed five out, including Conklin. The prisoners had been in jail over six months. Eight others, including industrialist Donald Blochman, are still in jail. The funds loaned to the Non-Partisan Labor Defense for Conklin were earmarked for her and were withdrawn.

George Hedley, director of the Northern California Civil Liberties Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union, has sent a letter to the Western Worker, protesting its lies about the break-up of the union front last Saturday. The C. P. broke up the united front by repudiating the call for a conference signed on January 21 by the Socialist party of California, the Workers party, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the Communist party, the I.L.D., with Hedley as chairman. Instead the C.P. laid down as an ultimatum that the only call for the conference must be an earlier one issued by the I.L.D. and signed only by four C.P.-controlled organizations, none of them unions.

All the non-communist organizations are continuing in their efforts to build a campaign of organized labor to save the Sacramento defendants.

MASS MEETINGS BUILD P.A. UNEMPLOYED LEAGUE

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—New locals of the Pennsylvania Unemployed League in Allegheny County are forming rapidly as a result of mass meetings being held all over Greater Pittsburgh. The P.U.L. is waging war on a relief cut.

This cut was hidden behind a change from the despised commodity relief system to cash relief, for which the P.U.L. has been fighting for three long years. By arbitrarily establishing a lower "budgetary deficiency" standard, the relief administration is now able to send the average family a weekly check of $2.50.

Want Plenty? Nice, Easy Secret Way--Its Utopian

Would you be able to use about $15,000 a year? To be got by a secret, mysterious process?

The Utopian Society, Incorporated, can tell you how--almost. The Utopians want to change the economic set-up of the United States and end poverty.

They make it easy. All you do is just realize that plenty is possible and swear allegiance to the Constitution of the United States. You are then given a mystic number to be known by—7 by 123 by 7a—and asked to bring your friends. Everyone raises his right hand to the American flag, tucked on the wall in a room with the blinds down, and swears to support the Constitution. The ritual is respectable. You are even blindfolded by a lady. A Voice speaks from behind a screen. Whispers. Mystery. Awe. It's done! The Utopian movement has jumped forward again by leaps and bounds.

Not Enough Flags
The effort to end poverty the easy way may be retarded, however, for there are not factories to make enough flags. The Chambers of Commerce and the American Legion must have flags. Also the bankers and industrialists are hot for flags. But the cotton industry should boom, and that may help. Serious-

Judge's Trick Approved by Union Leaders

Stay of Injunction Gains Time for Bosses in Waterfront Fight

The battle of the New York truckmen and longshoremen against the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants Association has just begun. Last week's one day rank and file strike forced Justice Humphrey to postpone decision on the threatened injunction restraining collaboration of the two unions until this Tuesday. The injunction as finally handed down contains a stay until an appeal can be made in March to the Appellate Division.

This stay grants absolutely nothing to the truckmen. It is nothing more than a trick to give the merchants and shippers time to mobilize against the union; to save the face of the union leaders, Cashal and Ryan by giving them a breathing space between now and March, and to postpone action until the attacks of the bosses, by the trickery of the union leaders, and by the long wait, the uncertainty and confusion attendant on an appeal. The stay will not prevent for a moment the wholesale laying off of union truckmen which has been going on for the last month, under the mere promise of an injunction.

A Lousy Plot
The terms under which the stay was granted reveal the whole lousy plot. "It is to be operative," said the New York Times, "only during the good behavior of the defendants."

Under the terms of a gentlemen's agreement the plaintiffs agree not to enlarge their non-union personnel and the unions agree not to molest non-union crews already at work.

What a farce! The stay on the injunction remains in force so long as the bosses refrain from firing union men. If they fire union men the stay is inoperative and the injunction comes into force.

What a Victory!
If the merchants try to break the union the court will "punish" them by enforcing the injunction! In other words the court says to the merchants, "You mustn't take that easily, because if you do take it, we will give it to you." This is what Lyons, secretary of the Joint Council, Joe Ryan, president of the I.L.A., and MacGuire, attorney for the unions all hail as a victory sufficient to warrant calling off the strike.

To quote Joe Ryan—"The most pleasing part of the stay is that while it prevents us from making any demonstration until the appeal is heard, it also guarantees that the practice of discharging union employees will have to be stopped in the interim."

What is Ryan pleased about? He is pleased that the rank and file is prevented from demonstrating. He is pleased that the merchants have "guaranteed" not to discharge union employees, by the "guarantee" of the very injunction they applied for.

The bosses and the union leaders are following exactly the same tactics which broke the auto strike, which broke the steel strike; the tactics of hesitation, compromise and deception. Instead of the usual phony "impartial" board, like the auto board, the "impartial" Appellate Court is the machine used to crush the strike and break the union.

The truckmen and longshoremen's unions are in the greatest danger. Unless a broad rank and file movement, well organized, is started, headed toward a militant strike, regardless of all the legal maneuvers of the bosses and the unions' leaders, a strike set and called to throw the whole question of injunctions, stays, "gentlemen's agreements" out of the window, the unions will be smashed.

Truckmen! Longshoremen! Act now, or you are lost.

The Department of Agriculture, so reports run, has just discovered that the A.A.A. program is divorcing thousands of share-croppers from the soil.

An army of special agents has been sent into the field (Arkansas and other states) to go through the motions of "investigation and adjustment."

As never, the Department of Agriculture suspects that something has gone wrong with the program to make it bear so heavily on the poorer of the tenant farmers.

Mass Meeting Calls Hearst Labor Enemy

Audience of 2,500 Indicts Millionaire Publisher and Red-Baiter

William Randolph Hearst, multi-millionaire publisher, arch-jingoist, and friend of all munitions makers, was indicted as "Labor Enemy No. 1" in a statement unanimously adopted by 2,500 workers, students and friends of labor at an anti-Hearst meeting at the Central Opera House, New York, last Sunday. The meeting was called by the provisional committee for Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

Speakers included labor leaders, college professors, noted liberals and heads of student organizations who had been assailed in the Hearst press for "subversive activities". They denounced the "stool-pigeon" campaign Hearst has been waging against them, made clear the anti-labor, anti-culture character and purpose of his attacks, showed clearly his pro-Nazi and pro-Mussolini sympathies and revealed him as the prime mover and instigator in the prosecution of the 17 labor leaders in the Sacramento criminal syndicalism trial.

Among the speakers were Professor Sidney Hook, chairman of the Department of Philosophy and Professor James Burnham, professor of philosophy, both of New York University, Professor George S. Counts, professor of education, Teachers' College, Columbia University; Luigi Antonini, vice president of the International Ladies' Guild, chairman of the American Civil Liberties Union; Heywood Brown, newspaper columnist; Morris Milgram and Monroe Sweetland, organizers of the Student League for Industrial Democracy; Carlo Trevello, anti-Fascist editor of Il Mattino; Felix Morrow, secretary of the provisional committee for Non-Partisan Labor Defense. George Novack of the provisional committee was chairman.

Telegrams of greetings were read from two of the Sacramento prisoners, Jack Warnick and Norman Mil.

The "indictment" passed at the meeting read, in part: "We, 2,500 workers, students and friends of labor, assembled in mass meeting, accuse William Randolph Hearst of being an enemy of labor and culture. Like Hitler, he is using the power of his press to make systematic attacks upon all that is progressive in American life. . . . We call upon all members of every class and cultural organizations to bring this indictment to the attention of their fellow members in order to broaden the struggle against Labor Enemy No. 1, William Randolph Hearst."

Hence the hallowed (hallowed in the blood of 25,000 Communards—D.E.) dignity and authority of rulers have occurred such odium on the part of rebellions subjects that evil minded traitors—have boldly raised impious hands against the very heads of states (Hitler, for example?)."

"With such doctrines spread far and wide and such license in thought and action it is no wonder that men of the most lowly condition, of humble home and lowly workshop, should fix eager eyes on the abodes and fortunes of the wealthy."

"They (still the Socialists) in good sooth cease not from asserting that all men are by nature equal, and hence they contend that neither honor nor respect is owed to public authority, nor any obedience to laws, save those sanctioned accord-

Father Coughlin Adopts Popes' Fake Liberalism

By DAN EASTMAN

"Father Coughlin," says L. B. Ward, one of his apostles, "bases his social and economic philosophy on the liberal encyclicals of Pope Pius XI and Pope Leo XIII."

Pope Pius XI, the present incumbent, who gained his knowledge of politics and economics while scaling mountains (he is the author of a textbook on the Climbing of Alps) has done very little but elaborate the basic thesis laid down in the encyclical of Leo XIII, On Social Evils.

On December 28, 1878, seven short years after the "hallowed" heads of the French government had shot down twenty-five thousand men, women and children, Parisian workers, because they dared to abolish night work in bakeries and institute an eight-hour day in the name of socialism—seven short years after the cold-blooded slaughter of the Paris Commune, that kindly shepherd, Leo XIII, produced his famous "liberal" encyclical. Let us quote:

Leo Takes Sides
"In short they (the Socialists), spurred on by greedy hankering after things present, 'which is the root of all evil, which some covet have ever from the faith,' they attack the right of property, and

'Leaders' in Dilemma Still Cling to F.D.R.

By ARNE SWABECK
Labor widens rift with Roosevelt, announces recent capitalist newspaper headlines. This, of course, refers to the official American Federation of Labor family. It appears that William Green—usually so soft spoken—together with the more beligerent John L. Lewis has made some strong remarks on the action taken by the President in extending the automobile code. Advertised by the Federation officials as "Labor's hope and strength", Roosevelt now turns around and kicks these labor officials in the pants. He feels he can afford to do so. The automobile agreement of March 25 last year put the manufacturers on the offensive while the automobile unions still suffer from the demoralization of the policy pursued by the A. F. of L. Executive Council.

The Executive Council faces a dilemma. Organization of the unorganized under its leadership has come to a stop. The "perfect" equilibrium of cooperation of labor, industry and government is coming tumbling down over the heads of these labor officials like a house of cards. Instead of striking out boldly like real leaders and utilizing the favorable mass sympathy for organization they stall and sabotage in fear of the consequences of the struggle. Now these craven souls feel that they have been let down. Dangers threaten their position from two directions.

A Dilemma

Obviously the government is moving toward some form of compulsory arbitration in labor disputes while the rank and file union membership is showing increasing signs of discontent and restlessness. A most damning indictment of the A. F. of L. officials is contained in the rather frank statements publicly made, that in the inner circles of the administration it is felt that the A. F. of L. cannot organize the basic industries—steel, rubber and automobiles.

Militant Bureaucrats

Despairing of obtaining a benevolent hearing for union recognition from the powerfully entrenched monopoly capitalists the Federation officials are turning their attention in the other direction. And these despairing officials are becoming aggressively militant when they face the large scale rank and file rebellion they see brewing on every hand. It is no secret that they are still, despite their announced rift, toying with the idea of coming to an agreement with Roosevelt's proposed industrial truce of no strikes. Only the open shop and company union employers demand too much. They demand a complete surrender and the Federation officials cannot remain unmindful of the move into from the ranks, so they move into action, not in reality against the employers but against the rebellion in order to head it off.

At this moment the otherwise soft spoken officials are preparing to reinforce their blast against all opposition and against all progress, whom they label "reds", with a campaign of expulsions, beginning in the very fortress of the basic industries, in steel. All local lodges of the steel workers union that sent delegates to the recent Pittsburgh progressive conference they threaten with outright expulsion. Make no mistake about it; their next step will be outlawing of strikes. This is the most serious feature of the present situation.

The Auto Agreement
In several respects the automobile agreement of last year entered into by the Federation officials became a turning point. It was a blow to the whole trade union movement. It advanced the automobile manufacturers into a position of being the spearheads in the struggle against organization of the unorganized in the basic industries. This agreement provided that any group of workers may be represented in conferences for collective bargaining with the employers. In other words, it legalized the company union and put the trade unions on the defensive. The trade unions, of course, had rich possibilities of embracing the great majority of the workers and becoming the recognized spokesmen of all the workers in the industry. Due, however, to this treacherous agreement these possibilities were frittered away, as the recent elections in the Detroit automobile plants, conducted by the despised Wolman Board, show.

Two Results
In these elections conducted in twelve different plants, 60,000 workers were eligible to vote. A total of 53,771 ballots were cast and the voting gave the following results: Voting for unaffiliated representatives, 40,143; for employers'

Should Revolutionists Build A Labor Party?

By HUGO OEHLE

Leftward-moving workers who have broken or are in the process of breaking with the past are looking for weapons of struggle to the left of the Democratic and Republican parties.

Reform and utopian movements and middle class movements as well as fascist movements are springing up and taking root in the minds of the disoriented masses who know by hard experience that something is wrong.

Every prolonged depression in the past increased the political activity of the working class. Reform and utopian movements spring up on the heels of economic and social dislocation. These movements were washed away with the first signs of the return to prosperity. But the present crisis continues. Government and private measures to stimulate business fail. The condition of the working class becomes worse and discontent increases. Hoover's promises could not be realized and Roosevelt's "plans" for the forgotten man are more and more seen as plans for the "forgotten" financiers and industrialists.

In this fermentation the slogan of the Labor Party is brought forward again. As yet it has not taken root in any substantial section of the working class nor has a crystallization taken place. However, the new opportunist right turn of the Communist International and its sections and the issuing of the instructions for a Labor Party campaign bring the subject to the fore for clarification.

Labor Parties and Reform

In the period of capitalist development the Labor Party took root in Europe as the handmaid of reform, as the concession for class peace through the policy of class collaboration with the capitalist overlords. These reformist labor movements took on different forms in various nations all the way from Labor Parties based upon collective membership through trade unions and other workers' organizations to the Social Democratic movements of individual membership. In the pre-war period they constituted the progressive and liberal opposition parties championing the cause of labor, humanity and what not. In the post-war period these parties became the left covering of the capitalist governments for the reorganization of Europe and for the prevention of the extension of the October revolution. They were labor governments in name but capitalist dictatorships in reality. Since the rise of Hitler and fascism in Europe this has become plain for everyone to see.

Capitalist Decay

But the post-war period revealed another striking fact in regard to the Labor parties and the parties of reform.

Developing capitalism could grant reforms, and such were granted to the degree of the pressure of the working class, and the labor leaders of the reactionary trade union movement and the labor party movement held them up as special concessions these "leaders" had obtained "for" the working class. But the post-war period marked a deepening of the decay and decline of capitalism. Many of the leading capitalist nations were in no position to grant further reforms. Instead the very life of the different capitalist nations after the war period demanded that they reduce and take away concessions from the workers, in order to compete with imperialist powers on the world market for capital investments, commodities and raw material.

Every concession wrung from the capitalists in this stage rests upon an entirely different basis than the previous reforms. The reforms in the period of capitalist growth were used to bribe a part of the working class to enable the capitalists to have a free hand against the majority of the working class and the colonial people. The most outstanding representative of reform during this period was the Second International.

Reform Base Disappearing

The economic base of reform parties has been wiped out by the conditions of capitalist decline. But it was not a uniform process which accomplished this condition. In America the whole process lagged behind European developments. The permanent miserable conditions confronting the American workers since the beginning of the present crisis were at far deeper levels in Europe even before the first world war.

The elimination of the economic base of reform parties did not mean the immediate liquidation of these parties. The parties had developed into complex systems and definite parts of the superstructure of capitalism whose organizational and ideological structure could not be killed so easily. Even after their economic base was lacking these reformist parties served as the instruments to save European capitalism from the proletarian revolution.

"New" reforms were the price to be paid by the capitalists as the "lesser evil" to maintain power. Developments have shown that such concessions, especially since Hitler seized power, can be wiped out with the stroke of a pen.

The sweep of developing American capitalism enabled her to build a whole network of special means of bribery without the aid of a large layer of labor agents within the workers' ranks. While a relatively small number of skilled workers was placed on a high level, the oppressed races and foreign born workers within the country, and the colonial people, paid the hand of robbers super profits. This was not a difficult problem for the American capitalists due to the country's natural resources and high degree of exploitation of labor.

The millions of American workers were unorganized and labor's participation in politics was confined to the two old parties. While social-reformism flourished in Europe it was not even budding in America. It bloomed and withered in Europe before its American counterpart had a chance to walk upright.

The radical political movement of American origin was first a labor reform movement, next an agrarian movement of the eighties, to be followed by a more confused and heterogeneous agrarian movement in the first part of this century. The urban middle class that has been broken by monopoly capitalism joined forces with it and produced the various hybrid movements such as the Farmer-Labor parties and the La Follette movement.

Credits for Russia-- A Slogan for U. S. Labor

By TESS HUFF

In a newspaper, among the letters to the editor, recently I ran across a letter something like this: "Dear Editor—Why doesn't the United States grant the Soviet Union long term credits, so she can buy American made machinery, which is needed in the Second Five Year Plan? The capital goods industry in the U. S. are at a low ebb and men need work. The Soviets want credit. What is the trouble?"

In a newspaper, last week, was a letter from a business man. The business man complained that the U. S. was getting very little trade from Russia and ended by saying: "At the time diplomatic relations were established between our government and Russia, it was said that Russia would spend 10 billion dollars for American goods. This was absolutely untrue and our government should break off relations with Russia immediately."

Well, it A Bit Mixed Up is a bit mixed up, as you may see. Incidentally, the business man failed to mention credit, and no nation can carry on trade without credit. It is true that the Soviet Union needs machinery and wants credit. Likewise it is true that capital goods factories in this country need orders. It is also a fact that since the day of diplomatic recognition, in November 1933, trade with Russia has steadily declined.

The paradox becomes more and more glaring, the more you consider the case. The fact is that the United States not only needs Russia's business, but that it has credit powers it doesn't know what to do with. At the same time Russia, of all the major nations, is probably the only one which still has a clean credit slate. Since the proletarian took power in 1917, and started out on a grand scale to build up Russian economy, requiring big orders of machinery and goods from any and every corner of the world, every debt contracted has been paid when due. And at the present moment, despite the world depression, Soviet capacity for payment is greater than ever before.

Why the Deadlock?

Why then the deadlock? What has happened since the Roosevelt-Litvinoff talks in Washington, in 1933? Why did credit and trade, much talked of then and badly needed by both countries, not materialize?

The answer has to do of course with politics.

The answer is that the Roosevelt-Litvinoff talks, which were apparently so amiable, turned out in a "misunderstanding", a misunderstanding on which both nations are standing. Roosevelt, and Wall Street, still insist upon the payment of debts owed by the Czarist and Kerensky regimes. This was the money, much of it, advanced by American capitalists, which was used to finance the various White armies in their unsuccessful attempts to overthrow the young proletarian government in 1919-21.

The Soviet insistence, however, is that the White House talks were of another tenor. Both debt claims, those of the U. S. against Russia, and those of Russia against the U. S. (claims which grew out of America's intervention in Russia in 1918, when the U. S. sent expeditionary forces on Russian soil and against the proletarian government) were to be mutually adjusted at a later date. Meanwhile normal trade relations were to go forward.

Since the day of recognition the American government has stood pat, making no attempts either to negotiate a settlement of the claims or to establish a basis for trade and long term credits with Russia. And Russia refuses of course to obligate herself for the payment of the

In last week's New Militant Comrade Louis Breier in the 4th installment of his History of the National Unemployed League dealt with the question of unity. Comrade Breier's article does not represent the position of the Workers Party. The Party's position on unity will be put forth in an article by Comrade Max Shachtman in a forthcoming issue of the New Militant.

It was not even budding in America. It bloomed and withered in Europe before its American counterpart had a chance to walk upright.

The radical political movement of American origin was first a labor reform movement, next an agrarian movement of the eighties, to be followed by a more confused and heterogeneous agrarian movement in the first part of this century. The urban middle class that has been broken by monopoly capitalism joined forces with it and produced the various hybrid movements such as the Farmer-Labor parties and the La Follette movement.

(This article will be continued in the next issue of the New Militant.)

Food Workers Bare Union's Alliance with Schultz Gang

An Example of the New Trade Union Policy of the Communist Party

(Introductory note by Joseph Zack)

The Food Workers Industrial Union (split off in 1932) by the Communist Party from the Amalgamated Food Workers) started as an "ideal" Red union. With less than 2,000 members it endorsed the Communist party and addressed demands to the bosses that could not possibly be obtained without the widest organization.

This policy brought the union close to liquidation. The food workers wanted a union; by tradition and as a result of their experience with the American Federation of Labor, they were inclined to join an independent union. The writer, then secretary of the Trade Union Unity Council, in 1931 endeavored to reorganize the union to suit the needs of the rank and file. Jack Rubin became secretary.

Today, with the C. P. swinging to the right, Rubin, along with Gold, Potash and others, wants to be in line with the party or perhaps a step or two ahead. In the name of flexibility and practicality, they are introducing class collaboration policies of a kind familiar in the A. F. of L.—a policy as sure to ruin the independent unions as the policy of Red unions did before.

It is very well to be practical and to take advantage of quarrels between bosses and labor fakers—but not at the expense of the workers and the prestige of the union. If the union is to live in the workers' interests, the Stalinist bureaucracy must be halted.

By a Group of Progressive Food Workers

Mystery, telephone conversations in Rubin's office, conferences, maneuvers—only the top fraction of the Communist Party is in on the secrets, and not all of it. Some of these "insiders" think Rubin is clever—delicate politics must be played in secret. Others are dissatisfied. The active rank and file is suspicious—a suspicion that may flare into a hurricane.

On the other side of the alliance, Concher and Co. do quite a bit of talking which permits down to the masses as element. To calm the class-conscious rumor, the mysteries are finally theorized into a "united front."

And since there are still some doubts, Stachel, of the C. P. Political Bureau, is brought to the Central Opera House meeting (Dec. 17, 1934) to declare it "kosher."

What is this United Front?

The "united front" that Stachel boasts about is a "gentleman's understanding" behind closed doors, between Rubin, Stachel, Concher, Pincus Goldstein and Co., officials of A. F. of L. Locals 302 and 16 and the Industrial Union. The rank and file know very little about it.

Why? Because it is a shady, unprincipled alliance between the leaders of the Food Workers Industrial Union and one of the racketeering gangs in the food industry in control of Locals 16 and 302, and in hand with the new Metropolitan bosses' association in the cafeteria and restaurant trade.

This racket into which the Industrial Union got hooked through Rubin and Stachel could not stand daylight because it is not in the interests of the workers.

C. P. "Unity" in 1935

Let us examine a bit the united front allies of Rubin and Stachel, Radek and Concher, A. F. of L. leaders of Local union 16, during the general hotel strike in 1933 took out an injunction against the Amalgamated Food Workers. It is naive to suppose that suddenly they have turned honest labor leaders, working for unity?

We also know that J. J. Williams and Pincus H. Goldstein, officials of the Industrial Union, after getting what they wanted three months ago forced their members in spite of the fact that the bosses had conceded the majority of the strikers' demands.

Only a year ago these officials expelled 12 opposition members who carried out inside the A. F. of L. the major part of the Industrial Union's program. In short, beginning with 1929 and continuing to a few months ago, Williams and Goldstein acted as open strike breakers for the bosses' association in the cafeteria industry.

Jules Martin who acts as a politician behind the scenes for the new Metropolitan bosses' association, and is the real theoretician and inspirer of this united front, is one of the big capitalists in the trade. Dave Krumholz, organizer for the Metropolitan, is his lieutenant.

These, then, are Rubin's allies. Every progressive worker in the food industry knows that the organizers of Locals 16 and 302 are connected with the Dutch Schultz mob.

It is also an established fact that in April, 1933, the books of Local 302 showed that $2,500 was turned over to Jules Martin, who worked hand in hand with Dutch Schultz, after a conference between the gang and Local 302 officials in a midtown hotel. To this day special monthly taxes are collected in Local 302 which go directly to the gang.

The new Metropolitan Cafeteria and Restaurant Association is the offspring of this alliance between A. F. of L. officials and gangsters. It was the old United bosses' association which inspired the creation of Local 302 in 1929 in order to break the cafeteria strike led by the Amalgamated Food Workers. The unions created by the old association are now used by the Dutch Schultz gang and Jules Martin, who want to get the real gravy for themselves and keep the International union out. By getting control of labor, and through it, of the bosses' association, they expect to work the racket both ways, at the expense chiefly of the workers.

What can you workers think of the united front policy of the C. P. if it can so easily become a cover for these maneuvers? Some will say, Beal among them, what do we care as long as we get something out of it? Now Beal, a leader of the top fraction, darling of the mobsters who was repeatedly brought up on charges of corrupt practices, and whitewashed—Beal gets something out of it. But how about the workers?

Some Pertinent Questions

Is it not a fact that in the Sherman Cafeteria settlement, the exact terms of which are not known to the rank and file, the following conditions exist:

1. The wages of the workers earning $14 to $16 per week have been increased in spite of the fact that they are far below standard.

2. Those who worked during the strike and were accepted into the union afterward are keeping their jobs while the militants among the strikers are being weeded out one by one? Thus far the union has done nothing about it.

3. The company hires and fires practically at will, and gradually all companies "protected" by the Metropolitan association are being allowed this privilege?

4. As soon as the Sherman Cafeteria broke with the old United association and joined the Metropolitan, the strike was called off by the union with a 90-day period for negotiations?

Considering the past of Concher and Co., would it not be fair to allow the rank and file to decide whether it wants this kind of a united front?

What about the recent Silver Cafeteria settlement, whereby the shops are being divided 50-50 between the Industrial Union and its allies? Is this a policy of uniting the workers into one union, or is it a process of systematic division into two unions with the bosses playing one against the other and the bureaucrats maneuvering the bureaus, each group blaming the sins on the other?

If these are the methods, have we not a right to suspect the purpose for which the special monthly taxes are being collected in the Industrial Union? Is it not for the same purpose for which the A. F. of L. Local 302 collected a $2. monthly work tax? Why don't we get a regular and aboveboard accounting?

The strengthening of inner democracy goes hand in hand with such policies. Food workers, be on guard!

St. Louis Socialist Finds Workers Party Is Realistic

SP is Hopeless, He Says -- In N. Y., E. Martin Leaves Weisbord Group To Join W. P.

"I am resigning from the Socialist Party and joining the Workers Party of the U. S., the only party which at the present time offers the working class effective and realistic leadership on the basis of a correct program," writes John Burfeindt of St. Louis.

Another comrade, E. Martin, formerly of the Weisbord group, joins the Workers Party because it is the only party working effectively for a new international of labor.

Their letters follow in full:

St. Louis, Mo.
January 29, 1935

Comrades:

The experience of the world labor movement since the war convinced me that social-democratic and reformism can only lead the workers to defeat and fascism. My experience in the Socialist Party has convinced me that the S. P. has not abandoned reformism; that, both locally and nationally, it compromises continually with reformists and reactionaries on the political and trade union fields and in its own ranks; and that it is hopeless as an instrument of revolution, due to its unbroken tradition of character of its so-called left wing.

I am therefore resigning from the Socialist Party and joining the Workers Party of the U. S., the only party which at the present time offers the working class effective and realistic leadership on the basis of a correct program.

—JOHN BURFEINDT

January 5, 1935

Comrades:

As a member of the Communist League of Struggle, I worked towards the creation of a new revolutionary party and a new (4th) International.

Weisbord is incorrect in saying that the fusion of the C.L.A. and the A.W.P. is similar to the entry of the Communist League of France into the S.F.I.O. In the United States a Fourth International party has been founded by the merger of two independent groups on a Marxist basis.

The "leadership" of the C.L.S. with its sectarian attitude and bureaucratic domination, tried to squelch criticism of Weisbord's interpretation of many principle questions, by saying that at this time the C.L.S. could not tolerate any "negations" concerning them. In other words if you didn't agree with the leader your criticism was negative.

Having abandoned the position that the C.L.S. was the "one and only truly Trotskyist" group and that "Trotskyism is the Leninism of today" (see pamphlet "What is Trotskyism," by V. Bush) Weisbord now counterposes Trotskyism to Leninism, in the same way that the Stalinists do.

Only a few months ago Weisbord ran to the conference called by Gitlow for the formation of a new party. Today Gitlow is in the Socialist Party and the C.L.S. having split, Weisbord remains with his family of nine, the fruit of three and a half years of independent "mass work."

Although many comrades were in favor of sending a delegation to the Unity convention, no discussion was held on this subject and not even an observer was sent.

These are my reasons for leaving the C.L.S.

I accept the Declaration of Principles adopted by the new party convention, and apply for membership in the Workers Party. Whatever shortcomings exist in the new party can be ironed out within the bounds of party democracy. Every one claiming to work towards the creation of the Fourth International must realize that only by joining the Workers Party and becoming active in it can they contribute towards this goal.

WORKERS' SECURITY?

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 8.—Anthony Romaglia, president of the National Unemployed League, in a talk on "The Roosevelt Security Program" Sunday evening, pointed out the effects of the "Program" on the unemployed and employed workers of the country. He showed how in each instance every step in the program meant another lowering of the American standard of living.

Romaglia explained that where the National Unemployed League was strongest as in Ohio and Pennsylvania, the relief authorities found it impossible to put over their schemes for pauperizing the workers.

Late Episodes in Kirov Assassination Analyzed by Trotsky

A TRIAL BALANCE OF THE STALIN AMALGAM

By LEON TROTSKY

Conditions now permit us to elucidate briefly the latest episodes of the investigation relating to the assassination of Kirov as well as the amalgams (or more exactly, series of amalgams) interwoven with this affair.

1. The mysterious consul has now turned out to be a Latvian consul; our supposition that a petty consul of a tiny nation would be chosen for the amalgam has been fully confirmed. However, it became necessary to name the consul—obviously because of diplomatic pressure—and this necessity threatened to blast the amalgam: for, who would believe that a consul of Latvia is the organizer of world intervention against the U.S.S.R. A new version had to be found: the Latvian consul was, as a matter of fact, the agent of Hitler. Quite possible. But how then to connect Trotsky with Hitler? Stalin did not even attempt to provide an explanation. He left his hirelings abroad to excite themselves as best they could. But the hirelings are incapable of giving more than nature has endowed them with.

WHY WAS ZINOVIEV ARRESTED?

2. The Zinoviev group was arrested in connection with the Kirov assassination. Yet the indictment does not so much as let out a peep concerning a single one of the Zinovievists arrested in Moscow. But why then are they arrested? The foreign lackeys now besmirch Zinoviev with mud as shamelessly as in 1923-25 they crawled on their bellies before him.

3. What charge, politically, may be brought against Zinoviev, Kamenev and their friends? Their capitulation. By this act of political cowardice, they drove the revolutionary youth into a blind alley. The youth has been left without perspectives. At the same time, under the ponderous lid of bureaucratic repression, the youth is not permitted to think, live, or breathe. Under precisely those conditions, the terrorist moods breed. Only the growth of genuine Bolshevism, on a world scale, can instill new hopes into the Soviet revolutionary youth and safeguard it from taking the road of despair and adventurism.

1926 PLATFORM OF RUSSIAN OPPOSITION CITED

4. The gap between the terrorist group and Zinoviev and his friends was to be bridged by the "platform of the Left Opposition" of the year 1926. Citing one of the accused, who obviously mouths the formula of the G.P.U. examining magistrate, the indictment proclaims the "ideological" succession from the "new opposition" of 1926 (the Zinoviev faction) to the Nicolaev group. But how to link this up with the consul, intervention and the terrorist act?

The "platform" of 1926 has been published in every language. The attitude towards the U.S.S.R. was there set forth with exhaustive clarity. The lackeys, it is true, do not have to bother pondering over this. But class conscious workers, even at this date, can profit much by acquainting themselves with the 1926 document. Upon acquainting themselves with it, they will draw the specific conclusion that while the bureaucracy did appropriate the most progressive measures from the program it had vilified, the Leninist terrorists could never derive from this Marxist document any justification for senseless adventurism.

5. There is a specific historical stretch to this attempt at connecting the Left Opposition with the idea of intervention. In 1917, Milukov, Kerensky and Co. accused Lenin, Trotsky and other Bolsheviks of being agents of the German General Staff, and serving the interventionist plans of the Hohenzollern. In its time, this moronic calumny made a tour of the entire world. Stalin has been unable to think up a single new word. He slavishly repeats the hoary calumny about the leaders of Bolshevism. He is only the pupil of Milukov and Kerensky.

6. When, in March 1917, I was arrested by the British naval authorities and incarcerated in a concentration camp in Canada, Lenin wrote in Pravda (No. 34, April 1917):

"Can one for a moment believe in the veracity of the dispatch which the British government has received, and which purports that TROTSKY, the former chairman of the Petersburg Soviet of Workers' Deputies, in 1905, a revolutionist, who has unthinkingly devoted himself for decades to the service of the revolution—that this man is involved in a plan subsidized by the German government? This is indeed a deliberate, and unheard-of, and unconscionable vilification of a revolutionist!"

These words were written before I joined with Lenin, prior to my election as chairman of the Bolshevik Soviet in 1917, prior to the October revolution, the civil war, the creation of the Third International, and the founding of the Soviet state. Today, after a lapse of eighteen years no agents of British counter-espionage, but Stalinists are repeating this very same "deliberate, and unheard-of, and unconscionable vilification of a revolutionist!" This simple juxtaposition reveals best of all the poison of lies, vilification and fraud which the Stalinist bureaucracy is pouring into the world working class movement!

"WE DO NOT BELIEVE THE INDICTMENT"

7. The fourteen who were accused in connection with the Kirov assassination were all shot. Did they all participate in the terrorist act? The indictment answers this question in the affirmative, but does not adduce even the semblance of proof. We do not believe in the indictment. We have seen with what brazen and cowardly tendentiousness it has injected the name of Trotsky into its text; and how deliberately it passes in silence over what happened to the consul's provocation regarding the "letter."

It is much easier to implicate in an affair a dozen or so impenetrable Y.C.L.s than to implicate Trotsky. Who are these Y.C.L.s? We do not know. There is not much difficulty in executing unknown Y.C.L.s. Among the number there must have also been G.P.U. agents: the very ones who had arranged to bring Nicolaev together with the "consul" and who had prepared the amalgam, but who, at the last moment, proved negligent, and allowed Nicolaev to fire the fatal shot. The physical elimination of these agents became necessary in order to remove embarrassing participants in, and witnesses of the amalgam. But, among those shot there may also have been Y.C.L.s who were simply critically minded. The task of the amalgam was: to terrorize completely the youth, which was thirsting for independence, by showing it that the slightest doubt about the divine blessings which flow from Stalin, or about the immaculate conception of Kaganovich would meet, hereafter, with the same penalty as terrorist acts.

8. The foreign agents of the G.P.U., who often pass themselves off for friends of the U.S.S.R., and who compromise the real friends of the U.S.S.R., accuse everyone of being in sympathy with (!) the terrorists, who has a critical attitude towards the repressions which have taken place. A revolutionist can feel nothing but contempt for these feeble methods. It is indubitable that the enemies and stealthy opponents of the October revolution utilize the utmost, for their own aims, the confused and contradictory statements, as well as the summary measures of repression. But this circumstance should not at all impel us to blind ourselves to the dual role of the Soviet bureaucracy, which, on the one hand, guards (in its own fashion) the conquests of the October revolution against the class enemies; and which, on the other hand, tigerishly defends its own economic and political privileges against criticisms and protests by the advanced workers.

G.P.U. IS TOOL OF BUREAUCRACY

As a tool of the bureaucracy, the G.P.U. directs the weapon of terror both against the counter-revolutionists, who threaten the workers' state, and against the Y.C.L.s who are dissatisfied with the absolutism of the uncontrolled bureaucracy. Identifying itself with the workers' state—in accordance with the ancient formula, "I am the state!"—the bureaucratic upper crust portrays the terror against the party and the Y.C.L.s as terror against the counter-revolution. This is the very goal that the venomous amalgams are intended to achieve.

9. What is here involved is not so much the struggle of the Soviet bureaucracy against Trotsky and the "Trotskyists"; but the question of the moral atmosphere of the world working class movement. The vile amalgam constructed around the "consul" who, apparently, was in the simultaneous employ of three governments, stands today as one of a number of ordinary and normal measures utilized by the Stalinist bureaucracy in the struggle for its caste positions. In 1921, warning his most intimate comrades against electing Stalin as general secretary, Lenin said, "This cook will prepare only peppy dishes." At that time there could, of course, be no reference as yet to the poisoned dishes of the amalgams. To whom are they being offered today? To the workers. The Stalinists are systematically poisoning the world proletarian vanguard with lies. Can the interests of the workers' state possibly be damaged by this? But this is demanded by the rapacious interests of the uncontrolled bureaucracy, which seeks to guard at all costs its prestige, its power, and its privileges, by means of terror against everyone in the ranks of the proletariat who thinks and acts differently.

REAL DEVIATION TO SOVIET UNION MEANS STRUGGLE AGAINST BUREAUCRACY

10. However passionate may be one's devotion to the Soviet Union, it must not be blind; or else it is worthless. The development of the workers' state proceeds through contradictions, internal and external. The forms and the methods of the workers' state have already changed several times, and they will continue to change in the future. The bureaucratic stage, for which there were objective causes, is exhausted.

The absolutism of the bureaucracy has become the greatest brake upon the further cultural and economic growth of the Soviets. The lackeys of the bureaucracy who deny its regime play a reactionary role. The Marxists—revolutionists set as their task to free the world

By JACK WEBER

THE PLUNDERING OF CHINA

GERMANY—REARMED

The Plundering of China

The sequence of events in the East makes perfectly clear that the denunciation of the Washington naval treaty by Japan was merely a way of serving notice to the imperialists that the militarists of Japan intended to go forward more rapidly in their plundering of China. The attack on Chahar is a further step in the encirclement of China and advances the Japanese army closer to Inner Mongolia and the caravan route along which China might secure help from the Soviet Union. Following the brazen assault on Chahar, there came the "conversations" in Nanking between Japanese Minister Arimoto and Chiang Kai-Shek. The demands made on the Chinese hangman of the proletariat are exact repetitions of some of the notorious twenty-one demands made in 1915 with the purpose of reducing China to the status of a Japanese colony. China must withdraw from the League of Nations (so that it cannot appeal for help to the other powers), she must substitute Japanese advisers in place of the American and European military, economic and engineering advisers, the Chinese army must be "remodeled" and all military equipment bought from Japan, Manchukuo must be recognized, and the Chinese must accept a new railroad loan from Japan. These are the demands made public. In addition it is required that China see "eye to eye" with the Japanese militarists in regard to the international situation in the Far East. The coming war against the Soviet Union is too close at hand for the Nippon generals not to seek in advance to guarantee themselves against attack from the rear. Every move made in China thus takes on the character of preparation for the war against the workers' state.

A Victory for Hitler

It was a foregone conclusion that with the coming to power of Hitler in Germany, the fascists would commence a program of rearmament in violation of the Versailles Treaty. For fascism, the outright and most violent form of the dictatorship of finance capital, can only retain power nationally by waging war internationally so as to expand its markets and thereby preserve the decaying national capitalism.

The protests of the powers victorious in the last war fell on deaf ears while Hitler proceeded with the program of militarism in Germany. At first quite hidden, the war preparations became more and more an open diplomatic "secret" that created consternation in the chancelleries of France and Britain. The meeting in London between the premiers of these two countries has resulted in a substantial victory for Hitler. Flandin has agreed with the British to abrogate the arms clauses of the Versailles Treaty, except that which calls for the demilitarization of the left bank of the Rhine. Germany will have to rejoin the League for this forced concession, a meaningless gesture which Hitler will not find difficult to make. Hitler can now devote his sole attention to the preparations for the attack on the Soviet Union.

What effect all this will have on the relations between Soviet Russia and imperialist France remains to be seen. All the great diplomatic victories of Litvinov—at the expense of the world proletariat—may soon crumble to ashes.

proletarian vanguard from the fatal influence of the uncontrolled bureaucratic clique, in order subsequently to aid the workers in the U.S.S.R. to regenerate the party and the Soviets, not by means of terrorist adventures which are doomed beforehand, but by means of the class conscious mass movement against bureaucratic absolutism. January 12, 1935.

The League Against War and Fascism

By JOHN WEST

(Ed. Note: This is the third in a series of four articles on war. The last, "The United Front and War," will appear in the next issue of the New Militant.)

During the past year and a half, the American League Against War and Fascism (which is the counterpart of Leagues organized in many other countries) has been presented to the American public as the means for fighting against and preventing war and fascism. Its success in enlisting popular support has not been conspicuous. Nevertheless, in a number of cities the League has made progress. After a temporary lapse in its activities, it has re-opened a vigorous campaign. What attitude are Marxists to take toward the League? It is essential to be clear on this. Not merely so far as the League itself is concerned, but with further reference to any organization of this type.

There are two different kinds of argument advanced in support of the League. The first, which is the position of the League itself and of its sponsor, the Communist Party, is that the League actually constitutes the most effective means for fighting war (in these articles I am not concerned with the fight against fascism). The second argument is put forward by those who maintain that the League, while not in the final analysis an effective means for fighting war, should be supported because through it an "approach to the middle classes" is possible. On the anti-war issue, it is maintained, revolutionists can unite with members of the middle class and can, through this means of approach, gradually win them to alliance with the revolutionary movement.

Both of these arguments are profoundly and disastrously mistaken. The argument usually heard against the League is a mechanical and sectarian manner by the Communist Party. Though this argument has some force, it is far from the root of the matter. Even if mechanically dominated by the Communist Party, Marxists would have to support and build the League if it actually were an effective instrument against war. We must analyze further.

THE FALLACIES OF THE LEAGUE

To begin with, certain organizational features of the League must be kept in mind: (1) It is a permanent organization; (2) It permits and encourages individual membership; (3) It not merely advocates certain actions to be taken against war, but puts forward a program against war; (4) This program is in part political—e.g. it advocates, in a confused way, the abolition of "the profit system."

A book would be needed to make clear all of the errors in the conception of the League. However, with these organizational features in mind, I shall outline certain of the chief fallacies.

1. The League, in spite of the pretentious language of its publications, is a pacifist organization.

Its fundamentally pacifist character can be seen at once in the fact that the League attempts to isolate the struggle against war, to treat it as a "special" or "independent" struggle, apart from the revolutionary struggle for the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of a workers' state. While it is true that in certain circumstances, united actions against war, involving various social groups, are possible, it is not and cannot be true that Marxists can under any circumstances unite in program against war with any other groups or individuals. We have already seen that there is only one program for the struggle against war—the revolutionary program for the overthrow of capitalism; and to this program only Marxists can subscribe.

In addition to theory, the agitation and activities of the League make perfectly clear its pacifist nature. We find the same old pacifist hokum—loud yelps for "disarmament," support of the "munitions inquiries," "anti-war pledges," calls for "congressional investigations," and the rest. Broken down ministers and fake liberals find themselves immediately at home in the League, and are pushed as its most prominent members and speakers. Fight, the magazine of the League, publishes just the kind of pictures and articles that get across with the Women's Club Peace Societies.

And like all pacifist organizations, the League is actually aiding the development toward war. It obscures the analysis of the causes of war, diverts the real struggle against war into harmless channels, provides a safe middle class conscience troubled by the horrors of war, and prepares to leave the working class helpless—both ideologically and organizationally—when a war situation arises.

At that time, the League, built upon the sands of vague pacifist sentiment instead of class organization, will be blown away by one puff from the capitalist state. Its preachers and liberals will take the stump for the government, recruiting the masses to the new war "to end all wars" or "defend the shores of our sacred land" or whatever it may be.

2. The League is a horrible parody of the united front as Marxists understand the united front.

The united front, properly understood, is a tactic whereby working class and at times certain middle class organizations, differing in program, nevertheless unite on certain specific actions upon which all are agreed, while retaining their full organizational and programmatic independence. There is no such thing as a permanent united front, nor a "united front in program." How could there be? There is nothing in common between the Marxists and the League, and on any other important issue, or on program of any other group or individual. The one possibility of "union" is on specific actions. Nor can a Marxist party join in a permanent united front, which would necessarily mean giving up organizational independence.

3. The League involves a complete misunderstanding of the relation of the working class to the middle class.

It does not represent a united front with middle class groups and individuals, but a capitulation to the middle class. The program, activities, and agitation of the League are precisely the program, activities, and agitation of middle class pacifism, and at a vast political distance from Marxists. In any correct united front with middle class individuals and groups, the working class goes ahead on the basis of specific actions immediately acceptable to both, but keeping its program intact, and demonstrating through the united front—not that an amalgamation, i.e. a compromise, can be reached between a middle class and a working class program, but that only the working class program, the revolutionary program, is able to solve also the middle class problems. In the League, the working class program against war surrenders to the middle class program. And, in addition, working class members are subordinated to middle class members.

4. The League, because of the kind of activities it engages in, and because of the political implications of its program, becomes a substitute for the revolutionary political party.

The political jargon of its program is the usual reformist twaddle, exactly in line with paragraphs from the Platform of Progressive Parties, etc. etc. etc. Becoming an individual member of the League and building it is just like building any kind of reformist political organization.

REVOLUTIONARY PARTY IS FIRST TASK

War will be defeated only by the revolutionary struggle of the workers; and this struggle will succeed only under the leadership of the revolutionary political party. The business of a Marxist is certainly not to build up a reformist group—whose historical role, we ought to know by now, is to make smooth the road to war and reaction—but to build the revolutionary party. This is the only political organization a Marxist has any right to join or support. And to build the revolutionary party is his first and greatest task.

5. The League encourages a crowning confusion by linking automatically together "war and fascism."

While it is true in a sense that "fascism means war," it is a complete illusion to suppose that fascism is the cause of war. By emphasizing the relation between fascism and war, as the League does, it suggests that the war danger from non-fascist nations is remote. But it is capitalism that causes war. Fascism means war only in the sense that the triumph of fascism marks a deepening of capitalist contradictions which likewise indicates the nearer approach of war as an attempted solution.

By linking fascism and war, the League plays into the hands of the bourgeois propaganda that declares Hitler and Mussolini to be the war-makers, and "democratic" England, France, and the United States the defenders of peace. Thus is prepared the self-outlet of the workers of England, France and the United States to the next war of their peaceful democratic governments.

Furthermore, this association of fascism and war fails to distinguish the great differences between the tactics of the struggle against war and the struggle against fascism. This it is not the business of these articles to elaborate, but it is sufficiently indicated by the fact that fascism is incompatible with and involves the destruction of not only the revolutionary party but of all reformist parties, all independent trade unions, etc.; whereas war, as the last war proved conclusively, is entirely compatible with the continued existence of reformist parties and the trade unions.

Much more could be said about the confusions, errors, and deceptions of the League. But space now only to ask and briefly answer one final question: Where and why did an organization of this kind arise?

THE POLICY OF STALINISM

The answer is not a matter of conjecture. We know the record. The Leagues (here and in other countries) are the conception of the foreign office of the Soviet Union. The American League was first proposed in this country by the representative of the Communist International, to a group of non-party individuals—even before it had been presented to the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the U. S. Brother himself, when he was first told about it, before he had had a little chat with the C. I. representative, rejected it as "pacifist." The League follows directly from the whole policy of Stalinism. The building of socialism in one country demands peace; peace will be secured by treaties and deals with capitalist governments, by joining the League of Nations, and, quite naturally, by pacifist propaganda.

Squarely opposed is the Marxist conception: The Workers' State will be defended by the strengthening of the revolutionary movement in the capitalist countries. This will prevent intervention in the Soviet Union, because the capitalist states will not be able to risk intervention if a strong revolutionary movement can, with the aid of the Red Army, turn the war of intervention into a class war for the overthrow of the capitalist state. And, when the revolutionary movement is sufficiently developed, it will take the offensive.

The Soviet Union is finally defended by attacking the real building of socialism will be accomplished in the only way it can be accomplished—by the extension of the revolution. This is the only direction of defense. In any other direction lies disaster, and the world-wide triumph of reaction.

Open Letter

To All Members, Friends and Sympathizers:

Two months ago the Workers Party of the U. S. was launched through a merger of the American Workers Party and the Communist League of America. This launching was greeted with great enthusiasm in New York by a mass meeting of more than one thousand. Subsequently the same expression of enthusiasm was reported at the Muste-Cannon meetings throughout the country.

Unfortunately however, this enthusiasm has not as yet expressed itself concretely in material assistance. At its first meeting after the merger, the National Committee outlined a Program of Action consisting of 11 points, some of which have been partially executed as follows:

PROGRAM OF ACTION

Tasks:

1. Double the Party membership in six months.

Achievements:

Gains made in New York City, Minneapolis and Boston almost doubled. Philadelphia increased by ten; also Chicago and Los Angeles. Reports from other branches not in yet.

2. Raise $5,000 in sixty days.

Only about 35 percent raised thus far.

3 and 4. Build the circulation of the New Militant and the New Internationalist.

A six-months campaign for each of the publications is now in progress. Lack of funds greatly hampering the promotion work.

5. Organize two coast to coast tours and two as far west as Minneapolis and Kansas City.

Muste and Cannon just completed a short tour. Response very good but financial returns only sufficient to cover their expenses. As soon as sufficient funds are on hand, another national tour will be organized.

6. Establish Party concentration district organizers in New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Detroit, the South and the South.

Two organizers were sent to Detroit and have been maintained on a minimum basis until they could get work in automobile shops so as to become rooted in the industry and therefore more effective in their work. One organizer is being maintained in the silk area of N. J. and Eastern Pa. Chicago is getting a full time organizer and one is maintained in the steel section.

7. Organize a national Party educational system—including the first semester of a resident school in New York.

The New York resident school begins February 18, with twelve courses scheduled. Plans for a national training school for workers to begin May 1 if the funds permit, have been completed. The term is to be eight weeks with scholarships to 20 different units of the Party. Maintenance per student will cost about $5 a week. Anyone particularly interested in this phase of our work, can contribute for it and the funds will be kept for that specific purpose.

8. Publication of at least one popular agitational pamphlet per month, elaborating some point in the declaration of Principles or dealing with some urgent political question of the day.

The first of this series in preparation is a pamphlet by Leon Trotsky, on the Kirov assassination. Lack of funds has made it impossible to get out others dealing with American problems, such as the trade union and the unemployed questions. Send your contribution for this fund, and the Party promises at least three pamphlets to follow in quick succession.

9. Build and consolidate a National Youth Organization.

The Party has appropriated a subsidy for this work and the Youth reports progress—slow but sure.

10. Help to launch an organization of the Left-progressive wing in the trade unions.

Progress made, but public information cannot be given at this time. In Minneapolis however, definite steps have been taken for the constitution of a "national organization of militant and progressive union forces", as indicated in a resolution adopted at a conference of the Northwest Unity Conference, consisting of 50 delegates representing 10,000 workers. The conference met at the headquarters of Drivers Local 574. There are other possibilities for this work in other parts of the country. But without the necessary funds, even this part of our Program will remain on paper only.

11. Extend and strengthen the National Unemployed League—and work toward united action by the unemployed and final unification in one solid organization.

On this, the final point of our Program we can report that the NUL has decided to issue a weekly paper which will probably be called FREEDOM'S CALL within two weeks. A number of our comrades are the leading force in this organization, and are giving good account of their activities in Ohio, Pennsylvania, the south-western states from Kansas to Texas and in the deep South. Imagine what could be done with a few more dollars!

Every Party member who is employed is pledged to pay two days' pay toward the Party Foundation Fund and every unemployed member a minimum of twenty-five cents.

How much can we expect from every sympathizer?

The Program of Action, good as it is, will remain on paper only, unless we raise the full $5,000.

If you have not yet made your contribution, or if you can make an additional one, won't you do it TODAY? Help realize the program in full. You may make your contribution for any special point and the funds will be used according to your wishes.

OUR NEEDS—CONCRETELY

We need at least $500 in the treasury before we can begin to organize a coast to coast tour; $40 per student before we can offer any five field organizers for the next two months; and a few hundred dollars to execute the other points in the Program. We will however feel content if our sympathizers contribute these immediate sums. The rest of the money will come from our own members.

We plead with you—help us NOW. Don't delay. Fill in blank below. (Space does not permit a report of the receipts this week. A full report will appear next week.)

Danger in Sacramento

DANGERS threaten the Sacramento defense. We must be on guard.

The Non-Partisan Labor Defense, since its entry into the case, in support of all the defendants has pursued a clear, principled and straight-forward policy. This policy has been based on the following platform:

1. Win acquittal for the defendants. 2. Fight out the case on its real issue—the right of labor to organize—and prevent the State from hiding the real issue by turning the trial into a Red hunt. 3. Thereby draw in the support of the trade unions and the working class generally. 4. Maintain a solid working class front before the capitalist court.

As a result of the vigorous efforts of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the case was raised from the dump where the International Labor Defense had left it, bail was secured for defendants who had been lying in jail for six months, and the case itself was brought publicly before the working class. A united front agreement, embodying the N.P.L.D. position, with the Workers Party, the Socialist Party and the Communist Party all participating, was formally entered into, and had an excellent prospect of broadening rapidly.

In the midst of the trial, the Stalinists broke the united front agreement, and are now carrying on a slanderous and vicious attack against the N.P.L.D. and the Workers Party. Nevertheless, the N.P.L.D. refused to allow the solidity of the defense to be broken.

In this trial, all the machinery of the capitalist class—from the blare of Hearst's publicity to intimidation of the jury to organization of vigilantes to testimony of the most contemptible stool pigeons—is being used to convict the defendants. The provocation is extreme, and it takes firm political judgment to stand up against it. The provocation of the State, in and out of court, must be met by a principled working class defense. If the defense attorneys allow themselves to play into the hands of the State in their conduct of the trial, they will jeopardize the fate of the defendants, prevent the real issues from being made clear, and antagonize mass support on the Pacific Coast.

Let the I.L.D. and the Communist Party, take warning. We will fight with all our strength to preserve the unity of the Sacramento defense. But we are not going to stand idly by while Stalinism leads the working class to another in the long series of Stalinist-led defeats.

For the acquittal of the Sacramento defendants!
For labor's right to organize!
For a united defense!

"Planned Economy" in the U.S.

SOON we will enter the third year of the New Deal policies pompously heralded again and again as a method of planned economy. With every step taken in this whole scheme one note is repeatedly din into our ears: Business is on the road to recovery. What do actual facts reveal?

Following upon the heels of the N.R.A. came the A.A.A., the P.W.A., the C.C.C. and all the lesser ventures. In the main they were all part of a general scheme designed to strengthen monopoly capital at the expense of the working class.

It is true there have been certain signs of what is called an upward trend in business. Most impressive is the record of net profit gains made by the monopoly corporations. The Analyst of January 11 informs us that for 190 companies representing the basic and key industries in the country, the net profits were $320,635,000 for the first nine months of 1934. This compares with $182,096,000 for the same period in 1933 for the same companies. Profits were almost doubled in 1934.

But what happened to the unemployed? The statistics of the A. F. of L. which cannot at all be said to exaggerate, presents the following picture, according to its own finally revised figures: It gives a total number of unemployed in November 1934 of 11,469,000 which is 429,000 higher than its figures given for the same month in 1933. Net profits are rising and unemployment is increasing. Such are the results of the business recovery under the New Deal.

Of course, this has nothing in common with planned economy. It is capitalist production for profit wrung out of the surplus value produced by the workers, those who are employed. Any expansion that takes place is on the basis only of capital investments where the rate of profit is the biggest regardless of the need of employment and regardless of the need of food, clothing and shelter for the masses.

Planned economy means the exact opposite. It means first of all the total elimination of unemployment. But that is possible only under Socialism, only after capitalism is overthrown and the working class has taken power. That is our goal.

A Watchdog of Capitalism

JOHN L. Lewis barks again. This time he barks for William Randolph Hearst. Hearst wants to head up the reactionary forces in the country and hog-tie labor.

Mr. Lewis' yappings in behalf of the Hearst campaign appeared in Hearst's New York American, on February 9.

Nothing could reveal more clearly the true nature and worth of the President of the United Mine Workers of America.

Mr. Lewis fears the rank and file coal diggers. They are becoming more militant, and they are apt to get him in bad with the big business boys—the coal operators. They might even dump him overboard, should the opportunity arise! This explains why the "great leader" accepts money from Hearst and lets loose a broadside in the Hearst campaign—against militant coal miners, whom he labels agitators and Reds.

In some coalfields, particularly in West Virginia and Kentucky, sheriffs and company gunmen make a practice of bustling agitators out of the county and giving them "grim warnings." . . . Lewis recounts this with satisfaction. But to suit Hearst, Lewis lies. He tells the Hearst readers that the coal miners, not the company gunmen, are responsible for this! Less than two months ago deputy sheriffs in Harlan, Kentucky, entered a hotel and beat up two U.M.W.A. organizers who were holding a conference.

In identifying himself with the Hearst campaign John L. Lewis reveals himself again as an enemy of labor. He is, indeed, one of the well-paid watchdogs of capitalism.

On the Flying Trapeze

THE resolution adopted at the Central Committee meeting of the Communist party held Jan. 15 to 18 is an interesting, yes amazing document. It deals with three points—the trade union question, the united front and the labor party. On each of them the C. P. is executing a right about face. The "man on the flying trapeze" has nothing on the Stalinists when it comes to flying "through the air with the greatest of ease."

For years the C.P. has asserted that the A. F. of L. unions are company unions, that they must be smashed and that independent "revolutionary" unions must be built all along the line. Anybody who objected was a counter-revolutionist, social fascist, etc. Now everybody must go into the A. F. of L. and the "revolutionary" unions must be liquidated.

For years "the united front from below" was the C. P. policy and with it went the great "theory of social-fascism." But in the latest pronouncement there is not a word about this dominant tactic and leading theory of the last decade. Tossed overboard! In dealing with the Social Democrats, the comrades are now instructed to avoid "the replacement of argument by abuse."

Just last year an Independent Federation of Labor had to be built in the U. S. Anyone opposed was an enemy of the Soviet Union and conspiring to assassinate Stalin. Now "it is inadvisable to put the question of forming an Independent Federation of Labor"—delicately put at that!

For years anyone who talked of a Labor Party was a counter-revolutionist, etc. He was preventing the workers from rushing into the C. P. Now the C.P. proposes to take the initiative in forming a Labor Party, though it is hard to tell through the fog of words they use just what the concrete program is to be.

Does this amazing resolution of the C. P. in which every single one of the leading policies of the party in recent years is thrown overboard, in which, therefore, the utter failure of the party is implied, does it contain any straightforward Leninist admission of this failure? Does it have anything to say about the havoc wrought in the American labor movement, in one union after another, in the unemployed work, in the defense work, by the insane disruptionist and adventurous tactics of the C. P.?

On the contrary. On the basis of the repudiation of its entire past program, the C. P. comes forward claiming to be the revolutionary vanguard and leader of the American working class! "Everything we have done is wrong; the American workers have repudiated it, even we have to toss it all overboard now; therefore we are the only safe guides, the only revolutionary party. And anyone who now dares to stand for what we stood for yesterday is a counter-revolutionary assassin of Kirov!" That is the C. P. argument today.

In thinking that the American masses will "fall" for such an amazing performance, they once again insult those masses. The workers will not forget what destruction has been wrought these many years by the so-called Communist party. They recognize the leopard despite the tawny power he has sprinkled on his spots. Everywhere they are flocking to the banner of those who long since pointed out the destructive and ruinous role played by the C. P. They are flocking to the banner of the Workers Party of the U. S., the revolutionary vanguard of the American masses.

Father Coughlin Re-echoes Popes

ing to their own good pleasure. . . .

"The Socialists wrongly assume the right of property to be of mere human invention (!) repugnant to the natural equality between men; and, preaching the community of goods, declare no one should endure poverty meekly, and that all may with impunity seize upon the possessions and usurp the rights of the wealthy."

It's More Profitable

"More wisely and more profitably (!) the church recognizes the existence of inequality amongst men, who are by nature unlike in mental endowment and strength of body, and even in amount of fortune (even!) and she enjoins that the right of property and of its disposal, derived from nature, should in the case of every individual remain intact and inviolate."

"Therein," says R. Mugglesbee, another sycophant biographer of the Radio Descon, referring specifically to the above "liberal" encyclical, "therein Father Coughlin found the nucleus for his sermons on social evils."

Father Coughlin was born Charles Edward Coughlin, of Irish parents, at Hamilton, Ontario, in 1891. He was educated in parochial schools, and later under the Basilian order of monks. During the course of his education he showed great interest in social and political problems, and doubtless regarded his mind with the above and other even more entertaining papal dictums.

It might be noted that while Father Coughlin never ceases to inveigh against "international socialism," "internationalism" and on this very date (Jan. 21) against entrance into the world court as an instrument of "international bankers," he is not himself an American citizen by birth, nor, so far as I can find by naturalization. He was born in Canada and remains a Canadian.

Father Coughlin's career begins properly with his installment as pastor of the parish of Royal Oak, a little town some twenty miles outside the industrial city of Detroit. After wandering from city to city for a number of years he was appointed, in 1926, to the position which he still holds, by Bishop Gallagher of the Detroit Diocese.

NPLD Statement on Sacramento Case

The following statement on the part it has played in the defense of the 17 workers being tried in Sacramento under the criminal syndicalism laws of California has been issued by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense—Ed. Note.

The Non-Partisan Labor Defense, hitherto active in the New York labor movement, was called into the Sacramento case by Norman Mini, one of the defendants now facing a long term in San Quentin, who was not in accord with the policies and practices of the Communist Party and the International Labor Defense.

We responded by bringing from Chicago the experienced labor attorney, Albert Goldman, to defend Mini and to cooperate in the defense as a whole. We raised $6,200 and liberated Jack Warnick and Caroline Ducker after they had spent six months in the wretched Sacramento jail. We began a press campaign which has brought the Sacramento trial to public attention in other states and stimulated trade unions and other organizations to voice opposition to the persecution of workers "guilty" of organizing a union. We have arranged a mass meeting in New York at which prominent union leaders, writers and educators will speak. In many other ways we have aided the general defense cause.

On the suggestion of American Civil Liberties Union officials, conferences began several weeks ago in San Francisco, resulting in the setting up of united defense machinery, including our organization, the I.L.D., several labor unions, the Socialist Party, the Workers Party of the U. S. (to which Mini belongs), and the Communist Party. An agreement was reached covering plans for a mass meeting, a publicity campaign, fund-raising, the barring from court of factional issues, the calling of a broad supporting conference, etc.

The defendants were gratified to learn that they were to have the support not merely of the usual C. P.-ruled set-up of "innocent clubs" and paper organizations, but of a genuine and broad united defense which might appeal for aid to the whole labor movement and all progressive elements. Our organization carried out its obligations to this united defense in every respect.

The Communist Party-controlled delegates, however, after repeated breaches of faith, and despite many concessions made by other groups for the sake of unity, deliberately smashed the united defense. At a committee meeting on January 26, acting apparently on orders from New York, they violated every agreement previously made with the other delegates. This they did despite the unity appeals of Dr. George P. Hedley of the Civil Liberties Union and two of the I.L.D.'s defendants who were present. A policy frankly designed to bar the cooperation of any delegate unwilling to accept Communist Party orders, was laid down as an ultimatum. Thereupon C.P.-controlled delegates called for "a united front under the leadership of the C.P. and I.L.D." They thus drove all non-C.P. delegates out, including the Socialist Party, Workers Party, Non-Partisan Labor Defense, and A. F. of L. union observers present and prepared to participate in a genuine united front defense.

The Communist Party and the Western Worker, seeking to shift responsibility for this unfortunate break-up, have completely misrepresented what happened on January 26. The real truth can be testified to, not only by delegates present and free of Communist Party control, but also by three members of the Civil Liberties Union and Mr. Clark of the Oakland Labor Council, all of whom were present as observers.

ZACK TOUR

Comrade Joseph Zack, who was expelled recently from the Communist Party and joined the Workers Party is about to start a national tour. The schedule of his visits is as follows:

N.Y. MEMBERSHIP MEETING

TUESDAY, FEB. 12th AT 8 P.M.

A joint membership meeting of all the New York branches of the W. P. will take place this Tuesday evening, 8 P.M., Feb. 12 at Irving Plaza Hall. The National Secretary, A. J. Muste will give an important report on his recent national tour. Admission to this meeting will be by membership book only.

REVIEWING THE NEWS

By BILL SHERMAN

A New Militant Sub for the Best Title

Feb. 15 is the deadline for titles. Two tearful titles by Taylor: "Head 'em and Weep" and "The Weekly Weep". Among others, Ratcliffe for Brisbane, By the Way, Now that You Mention It, High Spots and Otherwise, Side-lights on the Class Struggle, Covered Wagon, False Alarms, Low-down on Highspots, Lie Detector, Unexpurgated, and the following letter:

"Dear Comrade Sherman: A hot vapor of anarchy has always hung over America. Added to this obnoxious condition was the practically free distribution of 'American Baloney'—the daily news. Today American workmen are becoming fed up with it; and the vapor is fast condensing to cold water. The atmosphere is really stimulating. Your column, a catalyst to the vapor, must have a fitting name. So I take the liberty to suggest a few names; here goes: 1. Real World. 2. World as Is. 3. America the Real. 4. True News. That's all, Comrade. N. Y. Bronx N.Y.L."

Tommy Malloy, Labor Leader

It was the largest banquet ever held in the Stevens Hotel, Chicago. Judges, police captains, and a representative of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, a representative of Tammany Hall, politicians, labor leaders, business men, gangsters, all were well represented. Tom Malloy, head of the Chicago Moving Picture Operators Union, was leaving to attend the 1930 British Trades Union Congress as representative of the A. F. of L. and his "friends and admirers" had gathered to say bon voyage and also to present him with $26,000 for his expenses. A judge hailed Tommy Malloy as "an ambassador from the best citizens of America to the people of Europe". A special song, "Bon Voyage Tommy Malloy" was written and sung for this occasion. The Chicago FEDERATIONIST grew lyrical in describing the event. Tommy went to Europe, came back to denounce "reds" and to face an indictment for "conspiracy to murder". He could always beat the "legal rap" but two of his erstwhile gangster "friends and admirers" presented him yesterday with slings from a sawed-off shot gun, and Tommy Malloy is dead. He was one of the "same" labor leaders, a typical representative of the gangster racketeer that dominated the A. F. of L. and still dominates a large section of it. So, Bon voyage, Tommy Malloy. May your fellow paraffined labor fakers soon join you.

Well! Well!

"We know that the A. F. of L. is a workers' union and not the bosses' union" writes a steel worker in the Daily Worker. Evidently this worker doesn't believe what he reads in the Daily Worker, which for five years has reported over and over again that "A. F. of L. is a bosses' organization with Fascist leadership and not a workers' union."

NATIONAL JIG SAW

Secretary of Labor, to the plea of a West Virginia miner's wife who described the appalling conditions of hunger, starvation and death in the feudal company towns of that state.

FASHION NOTES: "I don't spend more than $20,000 a year on clothes," said Mrs. Harrison V.H. Hains, recently voted America's best dressed woman. . . . TOY WORKERS STRIKE IN SECOND WEEK; GAINS WON

NEW YORK, Feb. 8. The staffed-toy workers have now entered the second week of their strike. The picket line is still unbroken and the flying squads are functioning with the same effectiveness as at the beginning of the strike.

Two of the largest shops, in the union before the strike, have returned to work with all their demands granted. The rest of the workers are still out, demanding: union recognition, increase in wages and a forty hour week.

The bosses' association has at last come out into the open and agreed to deal with the union.

The Association has been meeting continuously for the past few days. A few of the shops have already signed up with the union. The bosses are beginning to crack. All that is needed now is one last concerted effort to smash the bosses and make them recognize the union's demands.

JOIN THE WORKERS PARTY.

ACROSS THE COUNTRY

With Cannon And Muste

The tour is over! Comrade Muste reports herein on the final meetings and his impressions of the whole tour. Comrade Cannon, during the tour, was called to California and is now in Sacramento.

By A. J. MUSTE

DAVENPORT and MUSCATINE, Ia.—It is when one meets a small group such as the one at Davenport that one sees most clearly, perhaps, how thorough training in revolutionary theory can hold a group together in the face of the greatest obstacles and discouragement. If other branches made a showing in proportion to their membership in mass meetings, Chicago and Minneapolis would get out a thousand and New York five thousand.

At the Davenport meeting we had our first open encounter with an American Legion anti-Bolshevik propagandist, a gentleman who sought to pin "the destruction of the home" and "bloody revolution" on us and who did not consider it pertinent when we pointed out that capitalism had robbed the workers of their homes, had murdered millions in the World War, in White Guard and Fascist pogroms, etc.

At Muscatine the workers in an unemployed union seemed not a bit shocked when told that under the new Roosevelt bill project workers would get only eleven dollars per week. After the meeting I learned they were getting only five or six dollars and figured that eleven would represent a hundred percent increase in the wage standard. To this has the proud American working class been reduced!

Crowded Hours in St. Louis

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—The standard, not to say classic, Stalinist mimeographed leaflet distributed at our public meeting gives "the new line" of the C. P. on us, at least for that day: the workers are warned to beware of "ultra-revolutionary parties" such as the W. P.

A conference with workers who want to discuss the details of the W. P. program, one with a group of progressive trade unionists, two meetings with middle class sympathizers, a business meeting of the branch, and a public mass meeting are crowded into 36 hours here.

Workers in St. Louis want to be organized, but the Federal Auto locals and others have lost membership. There is no one to give direction. A young officer in one of the new locals tells his experiences: "An A. F. of L. representative was sent in to our Local. He made a speech. I thought it was a good one. Then I got home and my wife asked me what he had told us to do. I thought and thought, and then I woke up and realized he hadn't told us a thing to do."

St. Louis Branch W. P. has added some members and has some good prospects on the list.

ILLINOIS MINE FIELDS.—Shacks, dirt, poverty. Here one realizes again that Columbia has indeed fallen low. In one mining town, P.M.A. members on strike over two years still believe in the P.M.A. which supplies them with about fifty cents worth of relief a month, and regard Allard, Pat Ausbury and Jack Battuello as union wreckers! But that will not last much longer. All the indications here confirm the reports which have been received in the National Office recently to the effect that the prestige of the militants in the P.M.A. is rising rapidly.

Meetings in Gillespie, Pana, Bullitt which takes in Tovey and Kincaid also, and Springfield. The Gillespie meeting was held in the S.P. hall. Here for the first time on the trip the C. P. turned out in force. They should have spared their pains, for their record in the Illinois mine fields has thoroughly discredited them. In both Gillespie and Springfield the most serious and active workers turned out to our meeting, asked numerous questions and urged the Workers Party to send an organizer to Illinois. That call must be heeded.

"Best Political Meeting Yet"

COLUMBUS, Ohio.—The best political meeting yet held in Columbus from the standpoint both of numbers and of the level of questions and discussion. Dick Harrington was on hand. For months he posed as a non-partisan in the unemployed organizations and came

CAPITOL NEWS LETTER

Roosevelt Held up Auto Labor Report until Code Was Renewed

By JACK ELDER

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Acting on the principle of sentence first and verdict afterward, the President renewed the automobile code one week before the Henderson-Lubin report on employment and labor conditions in the automobile industry was made public. Now that the report has been released, it is easy to understand the President's suppression strategy. Joint product of the researches of the N.R.A. Division of Research and Planning and the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the study demonstrates plainly:

Not one solitary advantage, large or small, has accrued to the automobile wage-slaves as the consequence of the labor provisions of their code.

Let the report speak for itself. To begin with the "speed-up", vicious and unrestrained, is the universal practice throughout the industry. "There is no set speed for a conveyor line even after production has been pushed up to what is regarded as a maximum." Workers, "at present speeds, cannot go to the toilet and cannot even get a drink of water." The "fear of lay-off is always present (in the minds of workers) even if it is not definitely brought there by the foremen. The speed-up is thus inherent in the present situation of lack of steady work and an army of unemployed waiting outside"

BITTERLY OPPOSE PAYMENT PLAN

Pass to methods of compensation. Few workers are paid on a straight hourly basis or by individual piece work. The typical method of payment is the "group bonus plan", to which method the workers are "bitterly and unalterably opposed", because of "the simple but to them all conclusive fact that they do not know how much they are receiving." The logic of the compensation is a secret, known to the boss alone, who keeps the books. "Even if the method is understood there are so many employees in a group and so many shifts in the number from day to day, that it is impossible for an employee to figure out his earnings." What is more, the group bonus payment plan acts as an incentive to the workers' speeding up one another. "The men are driven to earn a bonus and after working for weeks to reach a speed which would give them a bonus they find their rates cut so that a bonus is out of the question."

Workers must come to shop "as much as an hour early to prepare work for the day". During the noon lunch interval "material must

C.P.'s Attack on Mini Decried in Sacramento

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Feb. 11.—That the prosecution's immediate aim in the criminal syndicalism trial is the crushing of trade unionism in the rich valleys of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers has become crystal clear during the fourth week of the presentation of the state's case. As the fifth week opens, the state nears completion of its testimony and "evidence".

During the first weeks of the trial the prosecution utilized Communist party literature as a smoke-screen. Under this cover, it now begins to sneak up on the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Union, or its successors, since the union has been smashed by the terror.

The testimony presented by stool-pigeons, sheriffs and prosperous farmers (i.e., employers of migratory workers) is that Pat Chambers and Caroline Decker, union leaders, openly advocated the use of armed force in various strikes, and provoked violence. Many of the witnesses were obviously lying and cross-examination shot their testimony full of holes.

Stool Pigeon's Testimony

The testimony of M. Harris, a stool-pigeon who had been in the Communist party was also featured. This gentleman, who soon after joining the C. P. was made secretary to the section organizer, with access to all party records, is connected with the Associated Farmers (i.e., mortgage-holding banks), the Industrial Association of San Francisco and the State Criminal Identification Bureau.

Leo Gallagher, International Labor Defense attorney, has made no headway in wiping out from the juror's minds the prejudice which middle-class provincials inevitably bring to such a trial. One of the jurors openly criticized Gallagher's method of cross-examination. The fact that the complaint was unjustified is less important than the fact that this and other jurors are full of resentment and antagonism against Gallagher. The effect of Gallagher's openly declared policy (now confirmed by the Western Worker) of not talking to the jury but to the 112 spectators is plainly visible.

Having, after a series of ineffectual counsels and warnings, publicly dissociated himself from Gallagher's ill-starred tactics, attorney Albert Goldman of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense is compelled to sit back generally in silence while Gallagher proceeds entirely according to the conceptions of the Western Worker which calls the jury a "villainous jury".

Warnick Defends Mini, Raps 'Western Worker'

Ed. Note: The author of the following statement is one of the 17 workers being tried for criminal syndicalism in Sacramento. Arrested on August 13 he was held out by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense after the I.L.D. had let all the defendants except one rot in jail for six months.

Warnick is twenty-eight years old, the son of a blacksmith. He worked his way through the Universities of Washington and California. In 1933 he was San Jose section organizer of the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union and was active in the cherry and pear strikes in the Santa Clara Valley, the Redwood City mushroom strike and the San Joaquin cotton strike.

Warnick recently criticized the Communist party for its actions in smashing the Sacramento united front. Now he speaks out against the Communist party attack on a comrade who stands in the shadow of San Quentin. His straight-forward statement is a crushing answer to the Communist Party slander campaign against Mini.

Warnick's Statement

"No brief or excuse can be held for a class-conscious worker giving any information whatsoever to the police. That is why Norman Mini should be severely condemned for his statement given at the time of his arrest last August to Neil R. McAllister, chief prosecutor, in the Sacramento criminal syndicalism case.

"However, any attempt, such as is being made by the Western Worker, to characterize the statement of Norman Mini as a 'confession' and the act of a 'cowardly, treacherous stool-pigeon', must be equally condemned.

"I am convinced from my close acquaintance with Mini in jail and during the last months, that Mini did not give the statement with evil intent. I am certain that he neither attempted to save himself from a prison term, nor consciously gave information against his fellow-defendants. Neither do I think the information he gave is damaging to the revolutionary movement. What he said consisted of facts which we have always disclaimed to hide. The rest was merely his personal opinion.

"Norman Mini made a stupid mistake. But it is not a fatal mistake and he should not be crucified for it.

SOCIALISTS VIOLATE AGREEMENT

Now Take Steps to Launch Sectarian Defense Organization

With cynical disregard for existing written agreements binding the Socialist party to united action to launch a labor defense organization, the S. P. appears now to be engaged in setting up a "Labor and Socialist" imitation of the I.L.D.

The New Leader of Feb. 2 announced that a conference to launch a permanent labor defense organization will be held March 15 in the headquarters of the I.L.G.W.U. and that a call for that conference is being sent out to "trade union, Socialist and fraternal organizations". The announcement did not state by whom the call will be issued. The impression one gets from reading the announcement is that the call will be issued by the New York Socialist Committee for Promotion of Labor Defense. It may or may not issue the call. Some other body may do that. A number of organizations—trade union or fraternal—may sign the call. All that is important but not decisive in determining the significance of the conference.

The announcement of this conference follows by a week the announcement of the formation of a Socialist Committee for Promotion of Labor Defense as a step in the direction of the formation of such committees in other cities where the Socialist party is organized and the formation of a Labor and Socialist National Defense Committee. The conference, therefore, must be considered as a part of this policy.

A "Plan for a Labor Defense Organization" was drafted about a year ago by representatives of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the Communist Party Opposition, the Left Poole Zion, the I. Martello Group, the Workers Party and the Socialist party. The plan specified how the organization was to be launched. A Conference Committee of representatives of organizations endorsing the plan of the Provisional Committee for Non-Partisan Labor Defense, and leading trade unionists was provided for. Its function was to "organize and carry through a conference of invited representatives of as many organizations as are interested in the plan as here set forth at which conference the defense organization is to be set up and then publicly launched." In preparation for the conference the committee was to "draw up a draft constitution and declaration of principles", "formulate resolutions upon policy", "carry on preliminary negotiations with organizations and outstanding individuals, in order to draw them into the conference", "select a name

United Opposition Needed against Tighe

Lack of Preparation Brought Present Progressive Movement in Steel to Disaster

By ELMER COPE

In defiance of an expulsion threat made by President Mike Tighe of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, delegates and members from 78 locals met in Pittsburgh February 3 in a conference called to consider steps toward the organization of the steel industry. Similarly, about seventy miners from Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia, in face of ouster action by their officialdom, met in joint session to plan united action with the steel workers.

The call for the conference was issued at a meeting held five weeks previously, attended by regularly elected delegates from three district organizations of the Amalgamated Association. At this meeting six international officials also attended. Though the officials defended their policies they established the legality of the conference by promising to issue the call for the February 3 meeting.

The Leaders

The initiators of this progressive movement are by and large the same militants who took over the 1934 annual convention of the A. A. and forced through a program for general strike action, over the protest of the international officials. This original movement collapsed after a re-convened convention held two months later had—under pressure from President Roosevelt and Bill Green of the A. F. of L.—rescinded the strike action of the previous convention. Last fall the movement took a new lease on life and under the leadership of Clarence Irwin of Youngstown, and William Spang of Duquesne together with Louis Morris of Canton, Mel Moor of Weirton and others began to rally the progressives for the nation-wide organizing campaign which the officialdom had completely abandoned. The new locals were disintegrating rapidly. All organizers had been withdrawn from the field and the locals left to shift for themselves. The steel trust began a new offensive of terror to strengthen the company unions. The National Run Around was hitting on all cylinders. The labor boards, in which the Tighe bureaucrats had placed their entire reliance, failed to deliver the goods in all major cases. In Weirton, Duquesne, McDonald and Warren, the union became entangled in prolonged court action, morale was shattered, and general confusion prevailed.

The Feb. 3 Conference

In an effort to find a way out approximately 400 steel workers came to the February 3 conference. It is not known how many were officially delegated to represent their respective lodges. The fact that the bureaucrats, after first indicating that they would tolerate the conference, launched an attack outlawing it, undoubtedly kept many delegates away.

It is significant that the bulk of those attending came from lodges where unemployment is high and working conditions most desperate. The lodges with signed contracts, mostly in the tin plate divisions, were cool toward the movement and had no significant representation at the conference.

There is no doubt that the conference, although the majority of delegates came from the Pittsburgh-Youngstown-Canton-Weirton area, expressed the dissatisfaction of the workers in the industry with the inaction of the Tighe machine. The conference illustrated that the job of building a real, national progressive movement in steel has just begun. The vitally important Chicago-Gary district had one representative, no one attended from the Portsmouth, Ohio section, and the entire Michigan area was without a spokesman.

Resolutions

"The steel workers can not depend upon labor boards and other federal agencies but must rely upon their own organized strength," read the main resolution adopted. "We reaffirm our belief in the principles of the A. A. and the A. F. of L. which are principles of struggle." The resolution provided for the establishment of a committee to seek the cooperation of the executive boards of the A. A. and of the A. F. of L. for a general organizing drive.

A detailed program of action called for mass meetings, publicity, unemployed relief committees, ladies auxiliaries and a supporting committee of liberal and professional elements. Another resolution was adopted petitioning the A. A. executive board to liberalize dues payments and provide exemptions for unemployed workers in order to meet the emergency.

Tighe Goes Into Action

Hardly had the conference adjourned when the delegates were informed that Spang and his Duquesne lodge had been expelled, and that the A. A. attorney, Ogburn, had been instructed to withdraw the Duquesne case which was then

SCHOLARSHIP CONTEST TO NEW YORK WORKERS

To the person who sends in the largest number of subs between this date (February 16) and March 2 the New Militant will award a free scholarship consisting of three courses in the International Workers School. These courses may be chosen by the winner subject to the capacity of the classes. Ten yearly subs or equivalent will be the minimum in order to qualify. In case of the similar scholarships will be awarded to each typing contestant.

Relief Bill Will Drive Wages of All Labor to $12 Minimum

Prevailing Wage Clause Defeated by Order of Roosevelt

In order to understand the action of the Senate Appropriations Committee in amending the Roosevelt Work Relief Bill it is necessary to understand the financial implications of the amendment.

On Thursday, Feb. 7, the Roosevelt Bill, which provided full time employment for 3,500,000 heads of families at $50 per month (30c per hour) at a total yearly cost of four billion dollars was introduced.

An amendment by Senator Adams, providing a continuation of the present home relief at a yearly cost of two billion dollars was defeated by a 10-10 tie. Senator Adams' amendment represents big business sentiment, as embodied in a resolution of the National Manufacturers Association several months ago, for cheap government and a balanced budget.

Prevailing Wage Amendment

At the same session of the Committee the "prevailing wage" amendment was introduced and passed by a 12-8 vote. This amendment provides for the payment of wages at rates prevailing in the locality where work is undertaken. This was calculated by the Budget Bureau to be 80c per hour as an average for all localities and all sorts of work to be undertaken.

The vote for this amendment, 12-8, is rather startling as it shows two Senators who stood out for the Adams' amendment (10-10 vote) as the cheapest method of taking care of the unemployed, switching to an amendment which on the face of it is even more expensive than the original measure proposed by Roosevelt.

Roosevelt Opposes It

How does it happen that two advocates of cheap relief and two advocates of "expensive" relief get together on the amendment? And why does President Roosevelt greet this amendment which receives support from both camps as an amendment which "defeats the whole purpose of the relief bill"?

First to take the problem of the agreement between the cheap relief and the "expensive" relief factions: The fact of the matter is that the amendment, while it provides higher wages, would not necessarily cost more than the original bill, and might even cost less!

The original bill contemplates full time employment for 3,500,000 heads of families at $50 per month (30c per hour). On this basis total wage payments per month would be $175,000,000. At the same time the cost of materials, according to the estimate of the Budget Bureau, would be $160,000,000 per month, a total of $335,000,000 per month, or approximately four billion per year.

The amendment provides "prevailing" wage payments (80c per hour) but it says nothing about full time employment. This leaves two possibilities. The first, which attracted the proponents of "expensive" relief, is for full time employment at prevailing wages. This would involve a total yearly expenditure both for wages and materials, of some six billion.

The second possibility, which attracted the proponents of cheap relief, is for part time employment at prevailing wages, part time such as to make the monthly payments total $50 per worker. Under this plan the monthly payments for wages would be, as under the original bill, $175,000,000. At the same time, since the work would be part time, the cost of materials would only be $80,000,000; the total monthly expenditure $255,000,000, slightly more than three billion per year!

The Three Proposals

What does the unemployed worker stand to gain from each of these possibilities?

The best proposed plan is that for full time employment at prevailing wages. A plan which would cost six billion per year.

The second best is for part time (62 hours per month) employment at prevailing wages. A plan which would cost three billion per year.

The third choice is the President's proposal for full time employment at 30c per hour. A plan which would cost four billion per year.

Why does the President choose and support the last plan which is the worst so far as the workers are concerned and which is only second best so far as total government expenditure is concerned? Against the first plan, it is true, he may argue expense, as it calls for an appropriation of six billion instead of four.

But even leaving the first plan out of consideration, what argument can be advanced against the second plan, which actually will cost one billion less than the original proposal?

The Sweatshop Argument

The argument advanced by the President, through his agents, is that under the second plan, although it costs one fourth less, the government will receive in return only one half as much construction because workers will be on part time instead of full. Thus the President of the United States, of this great Democracy, for, of, and by the people, is reduced to bargaining like any common little sweatshop boss!

The President admits that the government is nothing more than a glorified sweatshop, whose first and principal consideration is not the welfare of its workers, nor even the welfare of its taxpayers (who will pay the extra billion) but the amount of profit it can squeeze out of its citizens!

While this argument reveals the complete degradation of the state under the capitalist system, it does not fully explain the tenacity with which the President clings to his plan. There is another reason which he doesn't mention, not even in a whisper, for preferring payment at 30c per hour instead of at prevailing rates.

If the President is willing to argue like a vulgar street peddler, it is because he does not dare mention the real purpose of the bill.

Legalizing Scabbing

The bill is intended to drive down the wages of all labor, employed or unemployed, organized or unorganized, to drive all wages down to the slave level of 30c per hour, $12 per week.

What other reason can the President have for insisting on his plan, which is least advantageous for the workers, and only second best from the point of view of taxpayers in general?

His purpose is clearly recognized in at least two quarters. Speaking for the Building Trades Employers Assn., C. G. Norman, in pleading that public works be put under private contract said, "The contractor is not averse to using labor from relief rolls." Not averse!

A.F. of L. Helpless; Strike Action on PWA Only Course for Labor

How they would welcome the opportunity to pay $12 per week instead of the present scale of $12 per day.

And the A. F. of L., recognizing that the bill threatens its very existence, has hastened to make its feeble and ineffectual protests. To quote the New York Times, "The full force of the A. F. of L. as represented by William Green, president, and the executive committee, was brought to bear on the Senate Appropriations Committee in an effort to have it write the prevailing wage requirement into President Roosevelt's $4,000,000,000 work relief program."

"The Federation President declared the adoption of the relief program without the McCarran (prevailing wage) amendment would wreck the prevailing wage scale throughout the country."

The Outlook

As the matter stands at the present writing the Senate Committee, under pressure from the President, has voted 14-9 to reconsider the amendment which it passed last week. There can be little doubt that the President will finally succeed in having the amendment totally withdrawn. The ineffectual bleats from the A. F. of L. officialdom, if the past is any indication, will have less than any influence.

There is only one course for the workers, both unemployed, and employed, for both are threatened, and that is to organize militantly for strike struggle against the attacks of the Administration.

How the A. F. of L. Actually Betrayed the Automobile Workers

A Story from Detroit that Blasts Green's Class Collaboration Policy

By Special Correspondent
DETROIT, Mich.—Less than a year ago, Detroit was in the throes of a crisis. The automotive workers, who had been called "the lowest paid mechanics of America," who for five years had silently suffered unemployment, cruel speed-ups and constant wage reductions, suddenly revolted. Paralyzing the movement in steel and textiles, they knocked into the A. F. of L. federal unions by the thousands.

Last Spring
By the beginning of 1934, the federal locals in the Michigan area alone had grown to some 60,000. By March, grievances had so accumulated that sentiment for a strike swept through the industry from city to city. A general strike was threatened at Fisher Body; the plants at Flint, Pontiac, Lansing and Cleveland overwhelmingly passed strike votes. The Hudson plant at Detroit, the Buick at Flint, the Chevrolet, Hupp, Dodge, Cadillac, Chrysler, Packard, Plymouth, Nash plants—all were ready for the walkout.

The arrogant executives of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce for the first time in years had the "jitters". London editors were bombarding the Detroit papers with questions. In the White House Roosevelt was spending sleepless nights and working overtime.

Today
Today Detroit is quiet. The papers gleefully record the change and point out the "peaceable nature of the automotive worker when given the advantage of the secret ballot to express his heartfelt desires". More than 90 percent of the workers participating in the recent Automobile Labor Board's elections voted for candidates unaffiliated with any union. The A. F. of L. received only 5 percent of the total.

Does this indicate that the auto workers, grown wiser during the year, have become immune to unionism, as the capitalist press would like to convince us? Well—

By March 5 of last year, 200,000 auto workers in Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio and surrounding areas were waiting for the signal to strike, to battle for their demands for union recognition, 20 percent wage increase, 40-hour week, time-and-a-half for overtime, reinstatement of discharged union employees, etc., etc.

When enthusiasm was at its height, the A. F. of L. agreed, at Roosevelt's request, to postpone the strike until after the hearing of the National Labor Board March 14.

Waiting tensely for this decisive date, local after local voted to strike if a satisfactory agreement was not reached then.

March 14 arrived. That very day the bosses, desperately striving to halt unionization, "voluntarily" announced the 36-hour week with pay increases. "Ford Brings Back the 36 Day," screamed the headlines.

And on that very day, the Labor Board hearing broke up when representatives of Hudson Motor Co. and General Motors walked out after reading a statement that they were not committed to accept any ruling of the board.

A. F. of L. Acts
The 200,000 men awaiting the order to down tools thought that now even the die-hards, Collins and Green, surely must act in the face of this sham and defiance. But no! Hugh S. Johnson, still NRA dictator, was placed in charge—and again Collins agreed to a five-day postponement.

The season was drawing to a close; evidently the strike was to be negotiated to death. But the workers, inexperienced, were still hopeful, still did not see through the tricks of their leaders.

On March 20, the day before the new deadline, the Detroit Free Press blazoned a front-page editorial: "Don't Wreck America". "The issue is largely an academic one," it smugly assured the underpaid workers, "a difference of opinion over an economic-political philosophy. . . . No matter which side wins . . . the wage scale and the hours will remain the same."

Next day, March 21, the president announced he would personally take charge of the negotiations, and asked Collins for a postponement. Green wired Collins to agree. "This time the strike is postponed— indefinitely!"

Capitulation
Five days later, March 25, the A. F. of L. leaders capitulated to the administration, agreeing to the creation of the Automobile Labor Board and proportional representation, which meant legalization of the company union, and signed an agreement which made absolutely no provision for union recognition, hours, wages or anything else.

The strike was called off. . . . The workers, many of whom were having their first trade union experience, were left hanging in mid-air.

The "settlement" came toward the end of the season. With the aid of the press, the A. F. of L. bureaucracy helped the administration create the illusion of the impartiality of the Automobile Labor Board. Instead of concentrating on building a union and fighting for workers' demands, it shifted the problem to lodging complaints with Dr. Leo Wolman, head of the board, and waiting for a vote on representation.

After the sell-out, the workers left the A. F. of L. almost as fast as they had entered it a few months earlier. Thousands were reported as leaving on their membership books in disgust. Many even temporarily lost their faith in unionism. The A. F. of L. was forced to withdraw Collins from Detroit, so great was his disrepute. And the bosses made a drive for the company union.

The Anti-Labor Board
For nine months, the Auto Labor Board listened to complaints and reports of code violations—and did nothing. In January of this year, at last it got around to plant elections. Thus far they have been held at the Cadillac, Chevrolet, Dodge, Plymouth and Chrysler plants. The ground had been well-prepared by the administration. Of some 40,000 eligible to vote, 38,330 or 96 percent participated; 34,273 voted for unaffiliated representatives, 1,847 for A. F. of L. and 308 for company unions.

The answer to the bosses' campaign for company unionism is clear: the workers do not want company unions. But after the sellout of last year, they have lost faith in the A. F. of L. Fed bunk about the impartiality of the Labor Board for ten months, they have been taught to believe in the possibility of gaining their demands without a union—through "unaffiliated" representatives. With miserable pay and the speed-up continuing, they are riding toward disillusion; trouble is brewing at the bottom.

A New Attack
The manufacturers, seeing the repudiation of their company union scheme, are trying a new attack. Elmer H. Gustavson, company union man, chairman of the elected Cadillac agency of representation, has told of plans to organize a Federation of Automobile Industrial Employees, to parallel the A. F. of L.

It is not clear whether most of the unaffiliated representatives are blinds for the company union or whether, once elected, they are won by bribes and flattery. Some idea of how they work comes from Gustavson: "The 16 members of the agency met in the council room of the Cadillac Administration Building and spent most of their day in deliberation. Their wages went on just as if they had been at work in the shop." One result of their deliberations: "They ratified an arrangement under which mutual cooperation will be exercised in a study of changes of wage and bonus rates."

It is plain that these agencies, even with the best intentions, with no organization behind them be-

Bankers Control Relief California Legion Aids Drive To Reduce Standard

BERKELEY, Cal.—In line with California's drive against militant workers, employed or unemployed, the S.E.R.A. administration is being reorganized on the basis of control by the banking interests and the American Legion. Because of the growing sentiment for organization among the workers, this change is being pushed—but in the meantime, or until March 1 at least, many relief workers probably will not be given re-assignments and thus will be deprived of relief for several weeks.

Behind the drive of the American Legion to rid the State Emergency Relief Administration of all "communists", which is, of course, being widely publicized by the Hearst and other papers, is a plan to discharge all of the present administrative force of the S.E.R.A. who are not satisfactory to the Legion and the bankers, as the simplest way to control the relief situation. "The ultimate purpose is to prevent organization of the workers, to cut relief costs and to divert relief funds to the various vigilante groups sponsored by the Legion."

In some instances relief has been cut to a pound of rice a week. At one food depot in Berkeley recently, when a group of workers who had spent 15 cents in carefree received 10 cents worth of rice as their weekly allowance, they rebelled and scattered rice all over the place.

The California Workers Association must organize the unemployed workers immediately. It must resist all efforts to make of the C.W.A. a mere social organization; it must discourage factionalism; it must organize agitational meetings and mobilize the workers against this threat to their already low relief standard and their right to fight for better conditions.

Act in Newark

NEWARK, N. J.—An overflow mass meeting of 250 relief workers demanded an open hearing on charges against two investigators who were dismissed on five hours' notice, without a hearing. The official charge was "insubordination". The discharged investigators had said that $3.25 a month is an insufficient allowance for one person. They had also attempted to organize the investigators.

The mass meeting formed a committee.

CROWD HEARS MUSTE REPLY ARREST THREAT

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—More than three hundred workers turned out to the North Side Carnegie Library here on February 5 to hear A. J. Muste's exposition of the program and principles of the Workers Party.

A threat by the chief librarian to arrest Muste if "he said anything about the government" contributed added interest to the meeting. But in spite of the fact that Comrade Muste's speech called for the revolutionary road to socialism in no uncertain terms, the threat was not carried out.

Ted Selander, substituting for Comrade Cannon, who is in Sacramento, spoke on the work of the National Unemployed League. Louis Breier was chairman.

come tools in the hands of the company officials. This honeymoon between worker and master cannot last long.

A. F. of L.'s Dilemma

Now even the A. F. of L. is awake to the danger to its hide. It sees itself being elected out of business. The leaders are forced to eat their words of last year and repudiate the agreement they signed. Pressure has forced Green to withdraw from the Auto Labor Board and protest against renewal of the code.

The A. F. of L. was forced to refuse to participate in the plant elections or be bound by them; to repudiate Richard Byrd, its representative on the Labor Board; to demand majority rule in the plants. Dillon, who recently conferred with Green in Chicago regarding the assembling of the National Council of United Automobile Workers, is leading a big organizing campaign in Detroit, Flint and other centers; he is forced to demand that Roosevelt's agreement be abrogated, the employee representation elections voided and the board abandoned.

Unionism is at low ebb, and the reputation of the A. F. of L. so bad a few strikes may be the only method by which it can hope to organize the workers. However, the situation is in a state of flux; the workers have no partiality toward any existing union. The overwhelming number of workers employed in the industry is unorganized.

Now is the time the left wing must establish for itself a base at every point of entrance, must enrich itself in preparation for future developments.

mittee of action to demand an airing of the charges against the investigators and to protest relief cuts. Relief administration officials refused to attend the meeting. "They want to scare us so we'll accept the cuts for fear of losing our jobs," one man declared.

A delegation of 17 was elected to call on Relief Administrator Jones. He refused to meet them, but after an hour sent out word he would receive one member, Odemheim. This the delegation refused. Jones then went out the back way and escaped the delegation.

Why Progressives Must Organize

The havoc, confusion and demoralization that the A. F. of L. bureaucracy works in the trade union movement finds a glaring example in the strike of the workers of the Kartiganer Co., manufacturers of ladies hats.

Last summer the union declared the shop on strike. The workers responded to the call. The shop located in New York was closed tight while the workers in New Jersey, bribed and terrorized, remained at work.

After a few weeks some of the bosses signed the agreement with the union, but did not open their shop. The union officials, seizing upon the technicality that the strike was settled, refused strike relief.

This continued for seven months when the workers, in despair, went to the boss and asked him to open the shop, promising not to have anything to do with the union. The shop was opened and operates as before with the addition of a company union as a collective bargaining agency.

Today the bosses' association is threatening that it will break the agreement with the union if the Kartiganer shop is not compelled to come up to the same conditions that prevail in the industry. The workers in the shop, embittered by their sad experience, will not budge. The union officialdom, caught between two fires, finds a simple so-

Spiking Lies Printed In the Daily Worker About Printers Election

Under the misnomer, "RANK & FILE PRINTERS WIN UNION ELECTIONS"—Solomonick and Harfield replace discredited Trotskyites, the Daily Worker erects its customary fabric of lies as a preliminary to the destruction of the Independent Printing Employees.

What is the truth concerning the election and the organization?

1. Not a "rank and file administration" came into office but a crew of handpicked and incompetent Stalinists. They won the election through the importation of a dozen ringers whose illegal ballots determined the outcome. They brazenly voted down a motion that "only those with membership in the union at least two weeks prior to the election be permitted to vote". Not one of the ten politically unconnected outsiders present voted for the Stalinist slate. The small group of rank and fileers present, without exception, voted for the old administration, "the discredited Trotskyites".

2. Lie No. 2—"A year ago a few hundred workers got together. . . . Omit the hundred and you are nearer the truth. By the untiring efforts of these few 'Trotskyites' the I.P.E. was built up to a few hundred. . . . The leadership of the I.P.E. fell into the hands of a group of Trotskyites expelled from the Communist party as enemies of the workers, who packed the Executive Board with five of their followers." Lie No. 3. The original Executive Board consisted of three members of the former Communist League, one racketeer who was subsequently expelled, and three Stalinists.

3. The record of these Stalinists is as odious as the drive of lies in the Daily Worker. One of them, Golden, without notice to the organization deserted his post as organizer of the I.P.E. with considerable damage to the drive for membership then on. The other, Tomasek, after months of sabotage, similarly deserting the post of organizer, "escamoté" the books, membership cards and all the other vital property of the I.P.E. in the midst of its last drive. This action was defended by the present Stalinist administration when it was brought to the attention of the membership at that time. "Stupid!" was all Solomonick, the new president, could say when the issue was again raised in the discussion of the report of the outgoing Executive Committee. In effect it was his opinion that there was nothing wrong with this criminal action except that it wasn't administered with sufficient skill.

4. "Through their entire period in office they conducted only one strike, in a shop of four workers." Another half-truth in which the most important facts are omitted. This strike (which was the beginning of a strike campaign), was entered into, with the books still missing and without a single penny in the treasury. The Stalinists now in office failed to appear for a single day to organize or do picket duty, to help collect funds, etc. They sabotaged the strike in the hope that it would be defeated and thus discredit the "Trotskyites".

5. But, to their extreme consternation, a partial victory was obtained. They put an ad in the Forward and the Day that the Kartiganer shop is on strike and then they put a few pickets in front of the place. But no strike was ever won in this manner.

A Job for the Progressives
The solution of the problem is a progressive group in the union that will be able to win the confidence of the workers in this shop and cope with the threats of the bosses' association.

a mass meeting of the I.P.E. at which bureaucrats of the A. F. of L. spoke, he advised the pressmen to join not the I.P.E.—but Local 51. As opposed to his A. F. of L. patriotism the founders of the I.P.E. declared for a policy of genuine organization as the only way to budge the A. F. of L. fakers. Only independent effort will lead the unity of all printing workers.

Those who built the I.P.E. but were voted out by a pack of non-printers—Stalinist ringers all of them—stated at the election meeting that the policy of the Stalinists was to bury the I.P.E. either by increasing the other workers received. In the Executive Board meeting prior to the election, Harfield charged this to be a "betrayal". This slander was flung back into his mouth at the self-same executive board meeting by the Negro worker involved, who had urged a compromise so as not to jeopardize the settlement as a whole, which he considered a considerable achievement. Hardly a month later the boss again fired the Negro worker. But the prompt action of the old executive board and the action of the Altum shop committee forced his reinstatement. At the election all the Altum workers, without exception voted for the so-called "Trotskyites" and two of them spoke in their favor in the discussion.

Rules of the Prize Contest for Subscribers

1. Who may participate?
The contest is for individuals and branches. Any individual, not employed in the national office of this publication, may compete.

2. How are points counted?
Counting will be on the basis of yearly subs. each of which will count as one point. Two half year subs will also count as one point. Subs taken on combination offers will be counted unless otherwise specified.

3. What are the dates of the drive?
The drive started February 1 and will end on May 31.

4. What are the prizes?
(a) Each month during the drive a prize of $2.00 in books will be awarded to the individual sending in the greatest number of subs during that month. A minimum of 10 subs will be required in this category.
(b) To the individual sending in the largest number of subs for the period of the entire drive will be awarded a prize of $5.00 in books.
(c) To the branch getting the largest percentage score in individual subs and bundle orders will be awarded a prize of $10.00 in books.

(d) To the branch making second place for the entire drive in the points outlined in (c) above, a prize of $5.00 in books.
General remarks:
*All books are to be selected from the lists of the Pioneer Bookshop, 96 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

*In case of tie in any category duplicate prizes will be awarded.

*All remittances must be payable to the New Militant, 2 West 15th Street, New York. In order to be counted they must be received on or before 5 P.M. of the last day of each month (for category 4a) or on or before 5 P.M. of the last day of the drive (for the remaining categories). They must also contain:
(a) name of subscriber
(b) name of contestant
(c) name of branch (if to be thus credited)

Roosevelt's Open Offensive Against Labor

Nothing restores the feeling of strength and confidence to the capitalists so much as the flow of profits into the tills. The American ruling class was willing to submit to the inconveniences of the NRA and the demagoguery of the New Deal, holding out illusory promises to the despairing worker, only so long as it was necessary to tide over a dangerous period of crisis. Now that the bosses scent the possibilities of an upswing of business, they have exerted the utmost pressure on their government to sweep aside the paper concessions made to labor and to put the workers back in their places. This became perfectly clear when Roosevelt obeyed the voice of his masters (Ford, Sloan, Swope, etc.) and blocked the attempt to organize the unorganized workers in the mass production industries—steel, autos, machinery—by legalizing the company union. Roosevelt was seconded in his attack on independent unionism by the class collaboration policies of those lackeys of capitalism, the A. F. of L. bureaucrats. But the next move of the capitalist government in its attempt to bring about "recovery" (of profits) in the basic construction industries, is directed not against the extension of unions into new fields, but at the very heart of the old A. F. of L., the unions of the once well-organized building trades workers. In accordance with the general internal reorganization of American imperialism with its drive on the living standards of the entire working class, Roosevelt has now taken over the task of restoring profits to the building contractors by a drastic drive on the wages of the workers in this field. This means an attack on the very existence of the unions in the building trades.

Shall the Unemployed Be Used Against the Employed?

The method to be used in this drive is to pit the unemployed against the employed workers. Roosevelt proposes that there shall be no more direct relief in the form of doles, but that relief is to take the form of pay for public construction work. Under the thin disguise that the worker is not to be discouraged from accepting private employment, it is proposed that the wage rates on public construction be considerably less than prevailing rates in the different localities involved. Actually fifty dollars a month has been set as the proper rate. The A. F. of L. has met this menace in its usual style, by attempting to use the backstairs method of congressional amendment to the Roosevelt proposal so as to establish a "prevailing rates" clause. Unless this is combined with the rallying of the entire working class, employed and unemployed, into a mass movement of protest and militant action against this open offensive of the capitalist class, the bosses will succeed in their plot against the unions. Here is a clear-cut issue on which all workers can be united. Our Party must take a leading role in strengthening the unions of the building trades workers and aiding them to resist the concerted drive prepared for long in advance by the propaganda of the contractors and construction monopolists.

New Methods of Unemployed Work

In this connection our whole task among the unemployed assumes a new and more concrete aspect. By its present tactics the capitalist state, through Roosevelt, offers us a means of uniting the employed and the unemployed in a common struggle. It becomes clearer than ever to the employed workers that it is necessary to secure cooperation of the unemployed. The employed workers must, through their unions, offer every help to organize the unorganized in relief workers' unions as auxiliaries to the regular unions. Our answer to the attempt of the bosses to destroy the building trades unions by utilizing as tools the unemployed in the form of relief workers, must be the complete organizing of the unemployed as well as the employed to secure higher wages for both. The recent militant strikes of relief workers in Arkansas for higher pay give us excellent reason to believe that our task is one that will meet with ready response. Already the organizations of the building trades workers are seething with revolt against the direct blows aimed at them by Roosevelt.

The Workers and the State

It is clear that Roosevelt no longer finds it necessary to even appear to cater to the A. F. of L. bureaucrats. When it becomes necessary in the eyes of the capitalist class to make a drive directly forward against the A. F. of L. unions, the A. F. of L. "leaders", only yesterday sitting at the same table with the bosses and their government representatives, are unceremoniously shown the door. The resulting outcry of "Judas" on the part of the labor fakers is quite understandable. But the workers face a problem more difficult, but more educative, than ever before. Their enemy now becomes the combined force of the capitalist class and its political expression, the capitalist state. The building trades workers will find themselves more and more in conflict with the state itself. It becomes clear that the government must take on a more and more repressive character to achieve the bold and undisguised aims of American imperialism.

THE UNITED FRONT AND WAR

By JOHN WEST

(Ed. Note: This is the last in Comrade West's series of four articles on war.)

The firm understanding that the fight against war is the fight for workers' power and a socialist society is the key to all the "anti-war" activities of Marxists. It is the Marxist, participating actively and constantly in the class struggle, who is carrying on the only genuine and effective fight against war. All the fine phrases and noble sentiments and even the deep sincerity of pacifists are powerless against war, when not actually of aid to the war-makers.

The knowledge that this is true is hard for many, even for some Marxists, to accept. Surely, they feel, there is something important in common between us and the non-revolutionary millions from both the working class and the middle class who oppose war. At least we agree in our opposition to imperialism, in our realization of its barbarous cruelty and horror, and in our earnest wish to put an end to it. Can we not all unite on this basis, leaving other differences aside? Thus we may not only have greater forces to defend ourselves against war and its destruction, but we will come into closer contact with these others and win them gradually to our side on other questions.

Unfortunately, this feeling is mistaken. Whatever the appearances, Marxists have in fact nothing in common with these "war-opponents". The reason for this is that the war-opponents do not really oppose war at all. They do not, because they do not oppose the causes of war, and are not willing to take steps to remove these causes—that is, take revolutionary steps. Their "opposition to war", therefore, is in the last analysis only a screen to satisfy their consciences.

AN ENTRY TO THE MINDS OF PACIFISTS

However, this is not the whole story. There is one advantage which even a vague feeling of opposition to war, so long as it is sincerely held, gives, and this is of great importance to the growth of the revolutionary movement. It provides what might be called a psychological meeting point between Marxists and non-Marxists. In the resolve to end imperialism war, pacifists and Marxists share in common an idea. This gives Marxists, if they make proper use of it, an entry to the minds of pacifists. It gives them an audience, a chance to say: "You believe you are opposed to war. Very well, we will take you at your word. If you are opposed to war, you must want to get rid of the causes of war. We will show you what the causes are..." And Marxists can go on to demonstrate how real opposition to war must lead to a revolutionary position.

Many persons have come to a revolutionary position after starting with a feeling against war. And many more will do so, if Marxists make an intelligent and clear approach to them. The logic of an anti-war stand, if carried out, must lead to the revolutionary movement. Too much should not be expected: economic interest, the powerful propaganda on the other side, will, in the majority of cases, prevent pacifists from accepting the full logical conclusion. But not in all cases. And Marxists cannot afford to neglect any avenue of approach.

WAR ISSUE

BASE FOR AGITATION

Thus the "war issue" is correctly a powerful base for Marxist education and agitation. This is particularly true in approaching intellectuals, professionals and others from the middle class, whose alliance with the revolutionary movement often follows more from psychological and moral considerations than from immediate economic interest. A factory worker who wants security and a better standard of living can be shown how only a workers' state can provide them. A teacher or writer honestly against war can be shown how only socialism will eliminate it.

It is, therefore, correct and necessary for Marxists to participate in "Conferences against War". Their business at such conferences is, of course, not to form permanent "alliances against war", not to tell pacifists that "we are all engaged in a common fight", but to present openly and unequivocally the Marxist analysis of war and to show why all other analyses are wrong. It is likewise important to speak and write about the Marxist position on war as widely as possible, before both working class and middle class audiences. For example, this is often an excellent opening for the statement of the revolutionary position before meetings of trade union or unemployed league members.

MAKING MARXIST POSITION CLEAR

The Marxist position, moreover, should not be left in the abstract. It is the duty of Marxists at all times to expose concretely the war plans and maneuvers of the imperialist governments. Immediate analyses of treaties, "conversations", armaments, "war games", exchange and tariff struggles, border encounters, arms limitation conferences, naval races, etc., must be given by the Marxist press, in order to make clear to the working class the exact progress of the war danger, and to pierce through the fogs of the "peace talk" of the capitalist statesmen.

Such agitational and educational efforts are all part of the fight against war. Nevertheless, none of them includes anything in the nature of a "united front against war". Even a conference against war participated in by several parties and organizations is not a united front. A united front is constituted when several parties or other groups set up machinery to carry out certain specific activities in common.

We have already seen that there is no such thing as a "programmatic" united front, either against war or on any other matter.

It is moreover true that no united front of any kind can be constituted against war in general. This follows from the fact that only the revolutionary party is actually against the whole social institution of war and it cannot have a united front with itself.

APPLICATION OF THE UNITED FRONT

Is any sort of united front possible in the fight against war? The truth is that the application of the united front is more limited in the fight against war than in any other phase of the revolutionary struggle. It could not be too widely. The fight against war is too deadly and sharp. In the face of it only the firmest Marxist position can stand up. The last war proved this beyond question. Before the war crisis, not only the bourgeois "internationalists" and the pacifist organizations but the great Social-Democratic Party itself collapsed. Any compromise whatever with the capitalist state—and only the Marxist position does not compromise—means weakening when the state is confronted with a war situation. However, there remain certain possibilities for united front activities, and these should not be neglected. For example: If a revolutionary crisis arises in Cuba, the question of United States intervention will be immediately raised. It is quite feasible that a broad united front, including both working class and middle class organizations, should be formed to fight intervention. Or, in the case of a war between Japan and the Soviet Union, a united front might well struggle to prevent the sending of munitions and supplies to Japan. There would be dangers, however, even in such a united front. It might be utilized to support entrance of the U. S. government into the war, against Japan. Since the U. S. would enter only for its own imperialist ends, and could not properly defend the Soviet Union, Marxists would be required to oppose the U. S. government in such an eventuality as implacably as in any other war. The defense of the Soviet Union can come only from the working masses, not from the capitalist state.

United front agreements might be properly formed on other occasions to support colonial struggles, whether of U. S. colonies or of others—to prevent U. S. capitalists from aiding the imperialist home countries. But in a major war crisis any united front would inevitably be a narrow one. At the start of a major war crisis, the capitalist state is at its strongest, seeming to rise above internal conflicts and sweep the whole nation into its embrace, as at the entry of the U. S. government into the last war. The strength and very existence of the state are bound up with the war, and an act against the war becomes an act directly against the state. The act against war is almost automatically a revolutionary act. And only the Marxist party is consciously prepared to advocate a revolutionary act.

This is the reason for the deceptiveness of the slogan, "a general strike at the outbreak of war," put forward by socialists and even pacifists. A general strike at the outbreak of a major war would be a revolutionary strike; only those who are prepared to carry it through to the revolutionary transfer of power to the workers can genuinely advocate it. It presupposes, furthermore, a tremendously advanced working class, ripe for power, and without this would either evaporate or go quickly down in the uselessly spilled blood of the strikers. The imperialist state, staking its existence on its greatest gamble—imperialist war—is scarcely going to give up and accept defeat from abroad because of pressure at home—unless the pressure at home is a revolutionary force which is itself prepared to defeat and overthrow the state.

But though the united front is thus strictly limited in the fight against war, narrowly understood, the analysis of war shows that actually every successfully carried through united front is an advance in the fight against war.

This is the answer to those who say that we must have an approach to the middle class and to middle class minded workers; and conclude therefrom that we must build pacifist leagues to publish pacifist literature and make pacifist speeches. By no means. Marxists approach all groups with their own Marxist program intact. Marxists join them, where it advances the cause of the workers, in common action.

United fronts to defend civil liberties, to protect workers' rights, to resist vigilantes, to free class war prisoners and defeat lynchings by courts or mobs, to force through a workers' security program, to build an effective non-partisan labor defense league—these are united fronts broad enough to include all groups who are honest in their protests against the excesses of capitalism and their desire for a better social order.

These, moreover, provide in action approaches to the middle class and to the working masses, without at the same time capitulating to the illusions of a middle class program. And these, properly understood, like every advance in the workers' movement toward power, are real and genuine actions in the fight against war.

WORLD IN REVIEW

FASCISM DEGRADES ITALIAN WORKERS TO FEUDAL SLAVES

MILAN, Italy.—Neither Mussolini's bombastic declaration that the long-announced Italian corporative system has finally been ushered in, nor the creation of numerous new fascist organizations has improved the lot of the Italian workingman.

At the end of 1934, Italy had more than 1,200,000 unemployed. Unemployed agricultural workers increased from 118,000 in the summer of 1933 to 144,000 for the corresponding period of 1934. Due to the fascist trade union regulations of 1926, which safeguarded the employers, wages have sunk constantly to lower levels. Collective bargaining means in practice only the regulation of wages by the state. According to figures published in the November issue of Lavoro Fascista the average wage decreased 20 percent in 1927, 10 percent more in 1928, and in 1930 a further 8 percent.

Mine Wages Decline

Since 1930 wages are no longer regulated on a country-wide basis, but according to the needs of the employers' groups in the various districts. The organ of the Federation of Italian Industrialists, L'Organizzazione Industriale, states that the wage level in the mining industries declined 23 percent from November 1930 to June 1934, and 19.4 percent in the building industries. The reduction of wages has been greater than the decline in living expenses.

Return to Feudalism

Agricultural wages even in the most fertile centers are so miserable that the government has been compelled to create the "Compartecione" Under this system the landowner turns one-half to one acre over to the worker, with implements and seeds. The worker tills the land in his free hours, and keeps one-third of the crop. Two-thirds go to the employer, who has no wage obligation. In other words, the corporate state has brought about a return to a feudal system.

In the political arena, opposition reaching far into the ranks of government officials is evident. Organized labor which fought fascism tooth and nail for more than six years, is not dead, as is clearly shown by the steady increase of political trials before the special Fascist tribunals. During October the terror tribunals were in session almost daily. Many socialist workers were sentenced to long prison terms for their efforts to resurrect old political organizations and distribution of illegal literature.

by shells and ammunition. But the comparison does not hold water. Because a material gain even in relation to the capitalist is just so much spent, while in relation to the workers it is a material gain. Let us see. If the vanguard of the workers moves up and intrenches the class behind the material gain (reform and not a spark) it is already a NEW PROBLEM and especially a totally different struggle if the capitalists try to retake what they gave, and not what we won, it is no longer a question of reform in the sense of immediate demand (offensive struggle) but a problem of defensive struggles of our class.

How many material gains (regardless of how they came) were retaken and are being retaken by the capitalist in the present crisis? Any thinking worker can answer this fairly well. In this case if the vanguard does not measure up to standards we can say, the greater the number of these gains through reforms and social reforms, the easier it is for capitalism to retake them and those that come to us as material gains as sparks toward revolution, the harder it is for the capitalist to retake.

One only has to look at the sick coal industry (favorable to the capitalist) with past gains primarily through class struggle and compare it with other healthy capitalist industries (favorable to the workers) where gains were mainly reforms and realize the difference between the two. A comparison will show reforms are relinquished easier than the gains through class battles unless the vanguard's right or wrong policy alters the problem.

Can we lay down definite plans to prevent our action from following the reformist camp? We can lay down principles in general, but it is impossible to lay down a line of march that is fool proof. Each concrete struggle must have its tactics formulated on the basis of Marxian analysis. A line of demarcation between reformist action (reforms) and revolutionary action can be made in every struggle but every developing struggle will have forces and action of both. It is up to the Marxists to move these struggles out of the channels of REFORM into the channels of deeper class struggles. A spontaneous struggle (made in the office of the bureaucrats) is just as wrong (isolated) as to enter movements which are organizationally part of the enemy forces (Parliamentary action—charity organizations, etc.)—the latter will not be isolation from numbers but will be isolation from the role of the Marxists as the vanguard of the revolution.

The Party Fund

THE Party Foundation Fund Campaign is coming to a close. According to the report listed below we have received close to $3,000. This leaves another $2,000 to be collected in the remaining period.

CAN WE DO IT? YES! PROVIDED THAT—

Every member of the organization

Every friend and sympathizer of our Party gets busy NOW.

Comrade Muste who just returned from a trip as far west as Minneapolis and Chicago and down south into West Virginia, gives a hopeful picture of the possibilities for quick growth of the Workers Party.

The immediate need, according to Comrade Muste, is a few capable organizers in the field.

If we collect the balance of the $5,000 we can fulfill our Program of Action.

GOT ANY LABOR BOOKS TO SPARE? WE NEED THEM

CHARLESTON, West Va. — We are starting a workers' library here and would like the assistance of all other branches of the Party, or of individual comrades. We can use old pamphlets, old books, papers, everything! We are starting weekly classes and can use outline material for teaching these classes. The workers are flocking into the Unemployed Leagues. We need lots of labor books!

Should Revolutionists Build a Labor Party in America?

The question of the Labor Party must be considered within the framework of our general program of parliamentary action. If we hold to the theory that we can vote the capitalists out of office then a Labor Party may be the ideal instrument to sneak up on the capitalists. But since this is the height of folly the Labor Party falls from grace. On the other hand, it is not difficult for the ultra-lefts who swing to the other extreme and refuse to participate in parliamentary action, to dismiss the Labor Party with one stroke of the pen.

The revolutionary Marxists utilized parliamentary action only as an auxiliary activity and to win backward layers of the masses in the process of exposing the enemy and their agents in elections, etc.

Because we work in reactionary unions and help build trade unions of the workers, some draw the conclusions that we can help build a Labor Party. But there is no comparison between the elementary union organizations on the economic field and the Labor Party on the political field. It is important to obtain a proper relationship between the elementary economic organizations of the class which are the instruments for immediate demands and the political party of the class.

The political party is the instrument of the vanguard and its main objective is the struggle for power. Only a revolutionary Marxian party can lead the masses and fulfill this purpose. A Labor Party can only be an instrument of reform.

Reforms and Immediate Demands

The question of a Labor Party is bound up with the question of immediate demands and reforms. Let us consider the question of reforms.

All working class organizations claiming to fight for the class have stumbled on this problem to a greater or lesser degree. Outstanding in the Marxian camp are De Leon and the S. L. P., which, unable to find a way out, just threw the whole question of immediate demands overboard and denied it all except in the trade unions. But since practical needs of the class today are material things and not ghosts their denial was to no avail. The P. P. to this day, is following the footsteps of the S. L. P., on this vital class question. Both of these organizations have taken a negative position while the S. P., swinging to the opposite direction, has transformed every struggle for immediate demands into reforms of the worst kind. In the Communist currents, sad to say, we find them handling the question with kid gloves.

We Marxists cannot borrow many dictionary words and use them to define things and conditions in the class struggle. The word reform is one such word.

Is there any difference in the material gains or practical needs of the day for our class "given" by the bosses or their labor leaders or won by our class in struggle? To every Marxist we know there is a fundamental difference for our class position. Only by understanding the class forces and causes for the way our class receives these material gains from "day to day" can we (after explaining) use the word "reform" in a "revolutionary sense". This understanding enables us to label the kind of material gain to denote reformist or revolutionary action in the struggle for immediate demands.

If the practical needs of the day are "given" by the bosses or their government they are reforms; if they come from the bosses' labor leaders, trade union or political, they are social reforms and if these gains are won by our class in struggle led by its vanguard they are sparks for revolution. Practical needs of the day for our class cannot be abstracted from the class struggle and the organizational and ideological position of the class. If we could abstract these immediate demands or gains from the position of battle of the class forces we could say all these gains are reforms. But such an abstraction is false while other abstractions, such as are explained in "Capital" are not false.

We know that reforms or social reforms do not come from the big hot hearts of the bosses and their flunkies. We know they are granted from above because the class pressure from below compels them to relinquish this material gain for our class in order to stem the tide and check the growing opposition. It is more profitable to "kill with kindness" than to kill through white terror, providing the position of the bosses enables them to carry out the former. The degree of class pressure determines, in the majority of cases, if the practical needs will be direct from the bosses or from their flunkies or from the class itself through correct leadership. Reforms can be said to result from class pressure but class pressure without or with wrong pressure of the class vanguard means a disproportion in the relation of class and party.

The growth and decay stage of capitalism will cause a big variance in this disproportion. In the growth stage of capitalism, the objective factors favor the capitalist and reforms while the decay stage gives the objective factors to the revolutionist to a far greater degree. This brings to the fore the subjective factor, the vanguard as the vital determining factor of the problem as Trotsky points out, not only in revolutions but also in the struggle for immediate demands.

The degree of class pressure does not always determine the success of reformism, as the above will indicate. The stage of capitalism we live in as well as its ebbs and flows, and also its uneven capitalist development, is no abstraction in the class struggle. In the growth stage of capitalism, crumblings in response to class pressure were the least evil for the bosses, because the very expansion and new markets more than made up for the loss. In the decay stage reforms are bitter concessions from the capitalist, knitted to a higher degree not only to the class pressure but more so to the policies of the vanguard.

If capitalism grants reforms (beats us to our point of advantage) this has its ideological influence upon our class or section of the class as well as a negative organizational result, scattering our forces and at the same time driving these class forces into some form of capitalist controlled organization. Such prevents the crystallization of our class ideology and unless the vanguard is wide awake and capable we lose even the possibility of retrenching ourselves for the next struggle. In this sense, as a class problem and not as an abstract material gain our class, which only learns by experience, has lost by the bosses' coup and with it the vanguard loses.

With the capitalist coup in reforms, the class line reforms with the bosses at a more advantageous position than before. A material gain given by capitalism as a reform is just so much labor power (controlled by capitalism) spent as it would be spent on the battlefield in destruction of the enemy forces

Other features will be gypsy fortune telling, card tricks and a chess and checkers table. Supper and drinks for all the hungry and thirsty.

NEW YORK.—Arrangements have been completed for the "Nite Club" revue to take place at midnight on Saturday, Feb. 16, as one feature of the dance to be held at Germania Hall, for the International Workers School. A last minute change will be the appearance of A. J. Muste as master of ceremonies in the place of Max Shachtman.

There will be three Spanish numbers by Anita Case, Russian airs by Fred Nash, violinist, a Mexican peon dance and Siberian folk dance by Sylvia Stone, songs by Blar Ottefahl, and three gypsy numbers by the Settlement Dance Group. The dance music will be played by "Ozzie" Caswell and his band, starting at 9 P.M.

Socialist Party Adventurism

IN two most important fields the Socialist Party of the United States now seems bent on demonstrating that when it comes to betrayal of the united front, "mechanical domination by paper organizations" and all the rest of it, they are not to be outdone by the Stalinists.

In March it is proposed by S. P. elements to hold in Washington a "convention" to form a "non-partisan national unemployed organization". Each state organization of unemployed is to have fifteen votes in this "convention", regardless of its membership. Even at that the fifteen need not be present; one "delegate" can cast the entire fifteen votes on behalf of the unemployed of his state! The unemployed have never even acted on this proposal, either in local meetings or in state conventions. The National Unemployed League has repeatedly challenged the S. P. leaders who are trying to pull off this raw maneuver, which has not been and cannot be the means of building a really solid unemployed organization.

"Let us bring the bona fide unemployed organizations of the country together in a convention of delegates from the local leagues on the basis of proportional representation, and thus form a national organization. The N.U.L. will not stand on ceremony in such case. Its forces will merge in such a body."

The S. P. elements in the unemployed field will not accept that simple and straightforward proposal. Instead, in the most approved Stalinist manner, they seek to gather a few top officials, many representing only paper organizations, and so to erect a dual organization. Why?

As indicated elsewhere in this issue of the New Militant, the S. P. seems about to set up its "own" so-called "Labor and Socialist Defense Organization" in much the same arbitrary fashion, after the N.E.C. and the Labor Committee of the party had formally gone on record for a sound non-partisan defense proposal and had for months been negotiating with the Non-Partisan Labor Defense Committee, the W. P. and other organizations on that basis.

What becomes, in view of such outrageous actions, of the stock S. P. charge that a united front is impossible because the Communist Party "always wants to dominate and capture, brings in paper organizations, breaks agreements, in short, cannot be depended upon for honest united action?"

Revolutionary Marxists have never been duped into believing that Socialist right wingers, "labor lawyers", trade union bureaucrats, would participate loyally in united mass struggle actions, in the course of which their own impotence and traitorous character would inevitably be exposed.

But it is the Militants and left-wingers in the S.P. who must give an account of themselves now. They claim to be Marxists and revolutionaries. Do they line up with the S. P. right wing in these matters? Are they going to play a typically capitalist confusionist role which is in effect more harmful than that of open and avowed reactionaries? Or are they going to fight uncompromisingly for a principled united front for struggle?

At all events, once again the crying need for the leadership of a sound revolutionary Marxist party is demonstrated. Without it, there will be no clear and vigorous united action in the many fields which need it today.

Bootlickers

A MEERK and humble "worm", according to a well-known rhyme, finally turned upon his tormentor and said: "It was all very well to dissemble your love, but why did you kick me down stairs?"

The A. F. of L. Executive Council seems incapable of showing even that much self-respect and healthy resentment in its dealings with President Roosevelt. Roosevelt, as was pointed out in the New Militant last week, rebuffed and insulted the A. F. of L. by renewing the automobile code without including any of labor's amendments and then rubbed it in by making a public statement charging, on the basis of elections conducted by the anti-union Auto Labor Board, that the A. F. of L. had no members in Detroit. John L. Lewis, Bill Green et al. howled with rage, talked about the NRA "betraying" the workers, etc.—as indeed it has done in every one of the basic industries.

Within one week the whole Executive Council marches to the White House in its best bib and tucker and "organized labor and the Roosevelt administration reestablished an entente cordiale". Roosevelt in honeyed phrases said he recognized the A. F. of L. as "one of the great and outstanding institutions of the country". Green in equally honeyed language said the A. F. of L.'s criticism was not against the NRA but against "those clothed with administrative authority in the NRA".

What results! Roosevelt and his big business get out of this love-feasting between the capitalist government and the trade union bureaucrats was shown a couple of days later when the A. F. of L. gave up its fight for the prevailing rate of wages under the new public works bill, accepting a typical Rooseveltian compromise.

Union officials who expel militants who try to organize and kick the boots of a capitalist politician even when the latter has openly sabotaged efforts of the workers to organize, and who then turn round and agree to a new cut in the wage standard by this same capitalist henchman, are the most dangerous and shameful traitors of the masses.

Let the honest and militant forces in the unions organize to smash the power of this pious and traitorous officialdom!

Greetings from the New Manager

The confusion caused, of necessity, by the combination of merging and moving is beginning to subside; that is to say, system is being restored and the new business manager is able to take time out occasionally to breathe, eat an occasional meal, and, incidentally, to write this brief greeting to all friends of the New Militant.

During the past several weeks Cara Cook and myself worked hours and hours so that things should be in good order when the fatal day arrived upon which she would no longer be able to postpone her departure. In her "last will and testament" to propose for the organization". This plan was twice endorsed by the National Executive Committee of the Socialist party. It was incorporated into the minutes of the Executive Committee meeting of last September and published in the Socialist party press. The Labor Committee of the Socialist party was instructed to proceed with the work of the Conference Committee. For six months on one pretext after another the Socialist party, through its negotiators, delayed action. Now it is proceeding with the policy announced in the New Leader. Although the S. P. has been formally committed to the plan of the Provisional Committee, it announced its new policy without previous notice or discussion with the organizations which had endorsed the plan.

S.P. Violates Defense Pact

Does this change of policy signify only a change in the method of launching a permanent labor defense organization? Not at all. The real significance lies deeper. The plan of the Provisional Committee provides that "the organization's chief activities for the defense of class-war prisoners shall consist of . . . (3) organization of pressure campaigns enlisting broad masses of worker and sympathizers in meetings and public demonstrations. . . ." To make this possible the plan provided for a structure which included in addition to affiliation of trade unions, local branches on a national scale, along the lines of the I.L.D. in its good days.

Will this be the policy adopted by the conference launched and controlled by the S. P.? What reason is there to think so? All the indications point in the opposite direction. To begin with, the old policy was agreed to by the Militants when they were in control and riding high. The new policy is announced by August Claessens in issue number 8 she forgot to mention that she bequeathed to me a set of records in excellent condition and well-arranged for efficient working. To tell the truth I do not believe she forgot; I think she was just too modest to say so. However, I wish to express appreciation on this score and to say that if all your friends out in the field will cooperate to the same extent, especially in seeing to it that bundle payments are kept right up-to-date, bundle orders increased as rapidly as possible, and as many new subscriptions sent in during the drive and thereafter as it is possible to get, we will soon have an even better paper than we have now; and I think that is saying something.

On with the drive!

Fraternally,
HAWTHORNE WINNER

as secretary of the New York Labor Committee, subsequent to the capture of that committee by the right wing and the ousting of the Militants from it. Moreover, this policy is announced at a time when the right wing in the party is advancing and the Militants are in retreat. Claessens himself defines the function of "a powerful and effective Labor and Socialist National (Defense) organization" as immediate action in response to "calls for strike relief, emergencies (?), arrests and preparation for trials and for appeals in cases of conviction". In short, the Labor Defense policy of the right wing is an efficient organization on a legalistic basis plus the present strike relief activities which the S. P. is conducting. It is reformist through and through. That will be, as the thing stands now, the policy of any defense organization controlled by the S. P. especially today. The Socialist party appears to be heading in the direction of launching a sectarian defense organization. The March 15 conference is being organized on that basis and to accomplish that end. The Socialist party is violating its agreements with other working class organizations. It is still further dividing the labor and defense movements. It is sabotaging an opportunity to take a significant step forward in the direction of unity.

That is a responsibility which we do not care to share. As before, the Workers Party stands for a broad, inclusive, representative, non-partisan labor defense organization. It is ready to enter into united action to build such a movement. Is the Socialist Party now going to read itself out of such a movement? Above all, what are the Militants going to say and do about the proposed betrayal of the policy to which they have for months stood committed?

Decry Attack Against Mini

week a statement made in August to the district attorney by Norman Mini. In this statement Mini openly declared himself a member of the Communist party and a believer in the revolutionary overthrow of capitalism. The existence of the statement has been known ever since the Sacramento papers headlined it in August. Mini was a member of the C. P. as late as December when he left it to join the Workers Party.

Prosecutor McAllister offered Mini's statement as a "confession". Attorney Goldman immediately objected, pointing out that the defendant is ready to stipulate that he belonged to the C. P. and believed in what he understood to be its doctrines, but that he could not "confess" these things since they are not crimes. The judge blandly admitted the statement as a "confession".

The Communists, who are well aware that Mini has repeatedly refused offers of immunity (as reported several weeks ago by the N.P.L.D.) has joined the prosecution in characterizing Mini's statement as a "confession", adding that Mini is a "stool-pigeon". But immediately after the statement was read to the jury, many of the defendants, led by Caroline Decker, Pat Chambers and Nora Konkila, rushed up to Mini to inform him that the statement was a "flop" as far as damaging the case was concerned. All expressed readiness to sign a statement expressing solidarity with Mini and denouncing the prosecution for calling this document a confession.

At this point however, Sam Darcy, district organizer of the C. P., appeared and ordered everybody to withhold their signatures. Despite this, Jack Warnick has issued a statement over his own signature defending Mini and denouncing the slander campaign against him.

Unable to divert attention from their disruption of the united front several weeks ago, the C. P. is now trying to confer attention on a crusade against Norman Mini. A similar attack is planned against Jack Warnick. The Non-Partisan Labor Defense is active, although laboring under great disadvantages due to the slander campaign of the Hearst press on the one hand and the Communist party press on the other against Mini. The Socialist party state secretary has sent out a statement accusing the C. P. of disrupting the united front, and appealing to all branches to contribute to the N.P.L.D. Sacramento fund. A resolution on behalf of the defendants has been received from Local 574, famous truckdrivers union of Minneapolis.

be (got) ready for the afternoon". Quite in the same spirit, "the line is run past the noon hour and also past the quitting time". We find, to add the final touch, "the practice of requiring men to report for work every day and sometimes waiting around for hours before being told that there was no work for them". Unless the worker "shows up" when there is no work to be done, he will find it difficult to get a job when work does come along.

BOSS DIPS IN PAY ENVELOPE

No sooner does the worker earn his wage, however, than the boss begins to dip into the pay envelope, extracting little deductions here and there, for the support of "group insurance" and "group welfare" plans. These plans, the report informs us, "are in effect compulsory even though theoretically voluntary". As for the workers, "they have nothing to say about the conduct of the plans and of their management. They do not know what happens to their money. They consider (these plans) a publicly device which the employee pays for".

Not only do the employers fail to recognize seniority rights—the one sure safeguard against discrimination—but deliberately pursue the policy of scrapping workers over 40 years of age and replacing them with fresh recruits imported from the South and elsewhere. The situation of the older workers, the report tells us, "is terrible. They are doomed to idleness. These men have 15 or 20 years of life ahead of them. They are not really old—they are from 40 to 50 years of age. Their savings may last a couple of years. Some of them may be fortunate and have grown children who can take care of them. The others must fall back on public relief and, after a time, to the poorhouse".

Safety and health do not concern the employers. "Men on the line cannot leave their jobs to get medical treatment for hours after an injury occurs." In many plants, "the machines have not been kept in good repair and as a result accidents are more prone to occur". Many workers are "subjected to occupational diseases because of the failure of the management to furnish modern devices for drawing off fumes of various sorts, particularly in the paint shops where the lead hazard is great". As for the ventilating systems, they are often broken-down, decrepit, repaired at long intervals.

CODE IS VIOLATED

Violations of the code labor provisions (innocuous though the provisions be) are by no means infrequent. Production workers are required to labor more than 48 hours per week (the code limit) and when they complain, are informed "an exemption" by the NRA. Highly skilled employees have been placed "on a salary basis in order to get complete exemption from hourly provisions for them". Piece rate earnings have been "averaged over an entire pay period", although on quite a number of days "the earnings may have been less than the code minimums".

As for the code provision which permits the averaging of hours, it has "denied reemployment to many who have been without work for months and given greater force to threats of summary dismissal directed at those who might express an unfavorable remark about the speeding up of production. It tends to maintain the length of the waiting line of job seekers", which is one of the principal devices by which the bosses smother grievances and complaints. The tool, die, jig and fixture workers, and all the maintenance employees—whose maximum hours in any one week, the code fails to limit—are worst off of all. "Everywhere we are told that during the busy season they worked 70, 80, perhaps 90 hours a week. And always they contend, and are willing to prove, men who had worked in their departments were idle".

EXPERTS SPEAK OF RATIONAL WORKERS

But what do the experts who gathered all these data recommend as a practical solution? The simplicity of their scheme staggers the understanding. Instead of having one single prolonged seasonal peak in automobile production, the annual show of new models should be advanced to the autumn, thus making for two shorter seasonal peaks! But what more should we expect from a group of experts who on the face of their own findings, can blandly remark:

"The impression we gathered from the attitude of the rational (!) workers was that they were more hopeful for what the future of the code might bring them than satisfied with any salutary effects on their interests up to the present."

pending before the National Steel Labor Board.

In the next few days Irwin and Morris got the axe, and instructions were sent to all lodges that attendants at the conference should be immediately expelled. Failure to do so meant the withdrawal of the charter. Indications are that some 78 lodges are affected.

A committee led by Spang which attempted to see the International officials was met at the door of the union building by a squad of police and detectives, and was refused admittance. A statement by secretary Louis Leonard declared that the A. F. of L. is through with the progressives.

Attempts of the progressives to gain a hearing before the executive council of the A. F. of L. have not yet been successful, although it is reported that President Green has met with the committee. It is obvious that the A. F. of L. big shots will not give the progressives any measure of genuine support. However, it may be that this august body will attempt to string them along with half-promises and much delay.

Job Before Progressives

It is obvious that the progressives can only build a union in steel if they completely wipe out the entire Tighe official family. Organization will never be established in the steel industry except by a determined and courageous battle. Mike Tighe cannot and will not fight such a battle. Neither will Bill Green. The progressives can do it only if they constitute an independent, organized force in the union, functioning on the basis of a clear program.

A successful fight against the steel barons depends, furthermore, upon a united progressive movement of militant labor in all industries.

The progressives must realize now that they had not done the necessary spadework in the local lodges. The militants had not formed an organization of their own and were not solidly organized into a disciplined force. They had depended almost exclusively on informal conferences of leaders of local lodges or districts. But, as was so tragically demonstrated in the re-convened convention last June, this constitutes an inadequate and hopelessly undependable base. There must be organization at the bottom.

The Tighe machine and influence can be destroyed only by developing a powerful, coordinated machine in opposition. Failure to do this has not forestalled a wholesale expulsion policy by the Tighe machine, nor has it secured effective aid for organizing work from the A. F. of L. The miners who attended the joint conference were also placed in a hazardous position. They had even less of an organized progressive movement with which to combat the wrath of the much more powerful Lewis-Fagan gang.

No Compromise With Fakers

On the other hand, there was evident in the Pittsburgh conference at times a "rightist" attempt to conciliate and white-wash the A. F. of L. bureaucracy which can only confuse the workers and cannot advance the cause of a militant organizing campaign. The A. F. of L. leadership must be challenged to get to work, to furnish support to the progressives; not tondied to in hypocritical fashion. The Communist party is now doing this sort of thing as part of its latest unprincipled zig-zag to the right. Their example should not be copied by honest trade union militants.

Similarly, the red hysteria must be fought not as was done in the Pittsburgh conference by crying "Do we look like Communists?", but by insisting on the principle that a union man is judged by his union activity and by showing that Tighe and Company raise the red scare only to cover up their own inaction and reason.

The real revolutionist has and can have no other program than the building of a powerful fighting industrial union in steel and a strike against the steel corporations to compel them to deal with their workers. The Workers Party stands for this program. The C. P., which has pursued an adventurist and disruptive role in steel for years, with its S.M.W.I.U., is incapable, in the absence of a revolutionary policy, of anything but the same adventurism and disruption now.

What's the job for the progressives? First and foremost is the task of building a strong, disciplined and united movement in opposition to the Tighe machine. Expulsions must be fought to the last ditch. Every attempt at red-baiting by that machine must be exposed and vigorously fought.

A vigorous campaign for reinstatement of expelled lodges and members must be organized. The lodges in "good standing" must be won to support this campaign.

The fight to force the A. F. of L. to undertake a national organizing campaign in steel must be pushed to the limit. This must lead to general strike action against the steel trust for only in this manner can a strong union be built.

Action Training School Opens

"Send us a comrade who can help in the Unemployed Leagues." "We need someone to conduct elementary education in our progressive group." "All our comrades are busy in the trade unions, can you send a comrade or two to act as organizer of the Workers Party branch." "Excellent possibilities for growth of the Workers Party. Need trained forces to take advantage of the situation."

These are typical requests which come in regularly to the national office of the Workers Party. With the growth of the party and the increased preparations for strike action in many industries skilled militants will be in ever greater demand throughout the country. Intelligent preliminary training in the class room is invaluable for effective leadership in the class struggle. New York will be called upon to supply a major part of the forces.

With this in mind, the first semester of the International Workers School in New York includes such courses as American Labor History, Instructor A. J. Muste, Trade Union Strategy and Tactics, Instructor Arne Swaback; Organization Principles, Instructor Martin Abery; Workers Party Fundamentals, Instructor Ben Borkeston. Other courses include Marxist Economics, American History, Elementary English, History of the Three Internationals, Philosophy of Marxism, History of the Youth Movement, A B C of Marxism, and History of the Russian Revolution.

Classes open this coming week, February 18. Registrations will close after the second session. Register immediately. See page 2 of the current issue of the New Militant or send for School bulletin.

to the N.U.L. convention at Columbus last summer supposedly as the representative of numerous unemployed bodies in several states of the Pacific Northwest. He has found it possible to leave the unemployed in that great area to their fate these many months and to busy himself in a vain effort to dislodge Unemployed Leagues in Ohio and turn them into Councils. He was given the floor and indicated that he was going to demolish "Trotskyism". After one sentence he was off on a typical demagogic appeal for "united front in the struggle for bread" which netted him exactly nothing except applause from half a dozen "stooges" he has brought with him. And even these all gathered after the meeting around Sam Pollock of Toledo who happened to be present and listened for nearly an hour to his exposition of what a "united front" is and is not!

The mass meeting was followed by a three hour meeting of the Branch devoted to a serious discussion of how a revolutionary party functions in mass organizations.

TITLE CONTEST ENDS
With titles still rolling in, the contest approaches its conclusion. Feb. 15 is the last day. At sun-up, or thereabouts, on Feb. 17, the court of editors will meet in solemn session to judge all titles. It will be a strenuous job but the editors are sworn to arrive at a final decision before midnight. What will the new title be? Today none but the gods know. In a week from today it will be the property of the entire world, for the column will appear with its new masthead. We want to thank all readers who sent in titles and we hope that they and many others will continue their interest by contributing items that will help make the column worthy of its new title and also representative of the entire country.

A Voice from Philly

"Dear Bill: It is very simple to get an interesting title for your column. Merely reverse the words and presto—the title appears like a C. P. Labor Party decision from this air—"Renewing Your Views".—M. P."

Other Titles

OBITUARY NOTE

The Daily Worker announces that the T.U.U.L. is now going to be dissolved. The obsequies will be held at those funeral parlors at which numerous other corpses have recently been embalmed, namely, the Red Peasants International, the National Miners Union, the Dry Pretzel Polishers International Industrial Union, and others. We are reliably informed that a typographical error in the Daily Worker omitted the important initials: S.A. P.T.B.S.N.F. (Shed a furrow tear but send no flowers.) The rank and file Rabbi, Goldstein, and the rank and file God, Divine, will officiate at the ceremonies, assisted by Sexton Stachel.

Investigating a Company Union

The Consolidated Gas Company of New York decided to give their employees a union. Being a very "generous" company they decided to write a constitution, publish membership books and to make things still easier, run the union for the employees. Some of the men applying to the Consolidated the old adage "Beware of Greeks bearing gifts", decided to investigate the company's "wooden horse". A committee was duly elected by the Chemical Dept. They took an office in the company building, printed stationery and set out on their investigation. It wasn't the kind of work the company expected from the nice spick and span new union which they had set up. The committee wanted to know who authorized the expenditures. They wanted to know how decisions were arrived at. They quizzed the members of the "General Council". They mimeographed detailed reports to their investigation and passed them around. They found the only gains to the employees from the Employees Representation Plan were: "Six thousand little yellow company union books". In their final summing up the committee denounced the "union" as a tool of the company and called on the workers to set up a real union free from company control.

Labor Proves Gratitude

That was the headline in a New York paper over the story of the gift of ten thousand dollars by the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stabmen and Helpers, through its president, Dan Tobin to Postmaster General Farley to help pay off the Democratic Party deficit. It might be well to recall that when Local Union 574 of that International was struggling against the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, backed by all kinds of Democratic agents, the only help they received from Tobin was a stab in the back.

A Warm "Fascist" Smile

From the Daily Worker, which for five years denounced Bill Green as an "outright Fascist", we clip the following: "Despite Tighe's telegraphed insistence that the committee be denied recognition, Green again received the committee (Steel Workers Rank and File Committee) today. Green implied that they would be included in the Executive Council's Organization Plan. Green smiled warmly. . . . Is that the way to speak of an 'outright Fascist'? Or does a change in the 'general Stalinist line' also change 'Fascists' into 'warm smiling' friends? According to the same issue of the Daily Worker, 'Browder spoke with warm brilliance'. . . . 'Green smiled warmly'. . . . Come, come, this is too much.

CAPITOL NEWS LETTER

New Deal Is Bankrupt...
Wagner's Labor Bill...
Social Security...

By JACK ELDER

WASHINGTON.—It is easier to understand the Roosevelt legislative program or 1935 than it was to understand the programs of 1933 and 1934. The New Deal is intellectually bankrupt. It has come to the end of its rope in high-minded social experimentation, in absurd pretenses at economic planning, in the diversity of quack stimulants to keep production for profit alive. What is more, all the romantic illusions and the glamour of fervid idealism have been stripped from it; what remains is a series of legislative contradictions superimposed on the inherent contradictions of capitalism in the U.S.A.

The proposed Work Relief bill represents the scrapping of the high wage, mass purchasing power pretense of the NRA. The government, under the guise of carrying forward public works, intends to drive building trades wages down to the level of $50 a month. It does so in the conviction that what holds back revival in the capital goods industries is high labor costs. The answer: deflate wages upon the pretense of giving work (which is a moral "tonic") rather than the dole (which is a moral "dope") to the unemployed.

PRESIDENT IS CONSISTENT

In standing against the "prevailing rate of pay" amendment (upon which the Senate revolvers insist), the President is consistent with his past behavior. OWA was scrapped because it paid wages which operated to make effective the nominal wages set forth in the code. The bottom was later cut out of the FERA relief payments for the very same reason. The government, under the terms of the Work Relief bill, must not "compete" with private employers in the labor market. This means that the government must relinquish the one and only device which might conceivably force employers into complying with the code labor standards.

At the same time, however, the President requests Congress to renew the NRA for two years. Concretely, this can mean only one thing: a continuation of the cartelization tendencies already long operative before the Recovery Act, and to which the Act gave the official blessing of the law. More monopolies; more price fixing; more production curtailment; more allocation of output quotas—in short, jamming down upon the economic system the rule of the Code authorities. On really and truly raising wage rates; on really and truly shortening the work-week, the President is altogether silent. As for Section 7a, he contents himself with a brief pious hypocrisy.

WAGNER'S LABOR BILL

Senator Wagner's newly-introduced Labor Disputes Bill—which would outlaw the company union—is not an Administration measure. It could not be an Administration measure, for the President is the last man in the world to expose big business to the pressure of genuine collective bargaining. The bill, so far as it outlaws the company union, will not pass. So far, however, as it clears the path for the progress of compulsory arbitration, there is every reason to believe that the Administration will find certain features of it worth saving.

SHADOW BOXING

The so-called "Social Security" program is slowly moving through the legislative mill of committee hearings. These hearings are mere shadow boxing. The President and his advisers know what they want and are determined to get it: not security for the unemployed, the aged, and the sick by levying taxes upon the rich, but rather compulsory saving by which wage earners are compelled to pay for the hazards and risks inflicted upon them by a capitalist system.

Despite all the President's loose talk about "redistributing wealth and income," no plans for changing the present taxation system are being contemplated. Neither income and corporate profit taxes, on the one hand, nor inheritance taxes on the other, will be raised; at least not to the detriment of the Mellons, the Du Ponts, the Gracys and their ilk. If we can expect anything new on fiscal policy, we may shortly expect a reversion to the "balanced budget" ideal. When this comes it will mark the final retreat from the

Mini on Stand Gives Lie to 'Stool-pigeon' Charge

Further proof of the degeneration of the leadership of the Communist Party is the campaign of slander and vilification it is now carrying on against Norman Mini, one of the 17 defendants on trial in Sacramento under the criminal syndicalism laws of that state. Mini has been labeled a counter-revolutionist, a renegade and a stool pigeon by the Communist Party press. It is outrageous testimony in court has been deliberately falsified and his character has been attacked in the Western Worker and the Daily Worker in such a manner that it must make even a William Randolph Hearst feel like a piker.

What is the reason for these gutter ethics of the C.P.? Norman Mini is a member of the Workers Party. He left the Communist Party to join the Workers Party. That is all the reason there is.

How much longer will the honest and decent members of the Communist Party permit their leaders to slander and vilify such courageous revolutionists as Norman Mini? How much longer will they give their loyalty and devotion to a party that fosters such leadership?—Ed.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Feb. 15.

Defiantly countering the efforts of Special Deputy Attorney General McAllister to heap slander and misrepresentation upon the revolutionary movement, and equally defiantly giving the lie to the campaign of slander against him being conducted jointly by the Hearst and Communist Party press, Norman Mini yesterday expounded from the witness stand in the Superior Court of his native county the revolutionary program of Marx and Lenin, and affirmed undying loyalty to the cause of the working class.

As soon as Albert Goldman, noted Socialist and labor attorney retained by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, completed his examination of Mini, first and only witness on his own behalf in the criminal syndicalism trial now in its seventh week, Mini's co-defendants gathered about him to praise his courageous stand.

Again when McAllister, wrathfully indignant at his inability to trap or bulldoze the witness, completed a four-hour cross-examination, the defendants hailed their comrade. One openly expressed the hope that he would be able to express with equal clarity, dignity and force his determined opposition to the capitalist system and the government which is its chief administrative arm.

Thomas Quits New Leader; SP May Split

By Special Correspondent

The Socialist Party is in turmoil. So far it is still the Right wing, led by the New York State Executive Committee, under the leadership of Waldman, which is on the offensive, but the Militants and the Lefts are beginning to fight back.

Some days ago the Indiana State S. P. initiated a referendum to repudiate the Detroit Declaration and to withdraw from the national organization if it did not similarly repudiate this declaration. The N.E.C. of the S.P. took charge and "reorganized" the state. The Right workers have now incorporated as The Socialist Party, Inc. The other group is trying to get an injunction against them, prohibiting the use of the name "Socialists."

Withdrawals

The California S. P. has placed the question of withdrawal from the national party on the agenda of its next convention.

The Oregon S. P. has left the national party.

The Militants, it is reported, will shortly issue their own weekly paper, the Socialist Call. Norman Thomas has withdrawn his column from the New Leader and presumably will write for the left-wing weekly. Militants are now heard declaring a "split is inevitable."

In so far as this indicates a recognition that there are real issues within the S. P. which must be settled on a principled basis, this is a sign of progress in the developments within the party.

The Militants have in the past been weak because they have let

WP to Hold Conference

It is "hard to hold back a California delegation" from trekking to Pittsburgh, writes Comrade James P. Cannon, for the Active Workers' Conference of the Party to be held there March 16 and 17. Beginning on the 15th and lasting through the 18th the National Committee of the W. P. will also be in plenary session in Pittsburgh. All branches not too distant are sending two members to the Conference. All Party members who can get to Pittsburgh are eligible to attend.

Reports on the "hot" situations of Fargo, Sacramento, Akron, in steel, rubber, automobiles etc., and consideration of the growth of the Party during the first three months since the merger of the former A. W. P. and C.L.A. will have a prominent place on the agenda.

The National Committee will have the task of analyzing the developments which are taking place in other parties, C.P., S.P., etc.; the significance of the agitation for a labor party; the drift of the Roosevelt administration and its bearing on the trade union and unemployed work of the Party; international developments; and other problems.

Comrade James P. Cannon will come to Pittsburgh with detailed reports of his trip to California.

AFL to Aid Akron Bosses Fight 'Reds'

By JACK WILSON

A burning example of what workers can expect from the current and much ballyhooed A. F. of L. unionization drive in auto and steel industries was seen in the "great offensive drive" of William Green which began in Akron Sunday, Feb. 24 for the rubber industry.

Green's son-in-law, William Shepler, attorney for the Akron rubber unions, openly told the Akron rubber workers at a mass rally which started the campaign, that the "A. F. of L. knows it can and will help management keep Communism from rising and that industry is slowly beginning to realize it."

High praise for President Roosevelt followed the attack on Communism, Shepler saying that "We are fortunate in having a President whose government we know is on the side of the workers!" This, despite the open break with the A. F. of L. which Roosevelt made when the auto industry code was continued recently!

Coleman C. Claherty, special organizer for the rubber industry and close associate of Green, then urged the rubber workers to join the A. F. of L. and quit being "dumb" by remaining in the company union.

In other words, he blamed labor for the deliberate betrayals he had made in the past.

The Firestone local, containing about 2,000 members (formerly it had 8,000) has threatened to split

16 Sentenced for 'Riot' In Fargo; Labor Aroused

The strike of Drivers Local 173, Fargo, N. D., which has been on since Jan. 22, is still going strong despite the most diabolical legal trickery on the part of the bosses' "law and order" machinery.

Local 173 has developed some rather unusual weapons in its latest fight. On Monday every highway leading into Fargo was picketed with immense signs reading: "16 FARGO STRIKERS HAVE BEEN SENTENCED TO 44 MONTHS. DON'T TRADE IN A SCAB TOWN!"

To raise funds to continue its fight, Local 173 is sending a troupe of Union boxers and wrestlers to nearby communities, where performances will be given several nights this week.

The Special Strike Bulletin continues to appear on Fargo's streets despite Judge Paulson's whims that "Statements published in the strike bulletin... were in defiance of the court."

By ROBERT WHITCOMB

ST. PAUL.—While sixteen of the 60 Fargo strikers indicted on the "crime" of "riot" have been found guilty and sentenced to from two to six months, the strike goes on with increased fury, bigger picket lines, and renewed vigor. Meantime defense meetings are being pushed, a special one at General Drivers Hall, Minneapolis, Sunday, March 3. Myles Dunne will speak before the Minneapolis Farmer-Labor convention the same day.

The Bosses Make a Mistake

The greatest tactical error on the part of the opposition (employers, police, banks and Chamber of Commerce—all connected with the Twin City reactionaries who fought Local 574 last summer) was the bombing of the Union Hall two weeks ago, when the tear gas was aimed at men, women and children by a mob of police and deputies, in an effort to make the strikers give up their leaders. The women and kids were piled into the cellar, but the gas forced out the men, who were lined up on the sidewalk and marched to the county jail—95 of them.

This stirred popular indignation against the authorities more than anything else in the history of Fargo, even more than when the I. W. W. raids were going on during the after the War. All sorts of workers were present during the gas attack—a dance was being held—and news of the police terror spread among working people of all trades. Now the public of Fargo is predominantly in favor of a strike for the first time.

Outside of Cass County, militant members of the Farmers Union and Farmers Holiday Association are not only with the strike—they have assisted in spiriting strike leaders away from the police, especially the Minneapolis leaders who are quickly spotted and tracked down. Myles Dunne recently made such an escape, when his life was in danger.

But the unemployed are also with this strike. Having no definite unemployed organization, leaders nevertheless have persuaded the unemployed to aid their striking brothers, and the first signs of an unemployed organization is making its appearance largely because of the strike situation. Unemployed men are helping on the picket line, even employed men from Moorhead, across the Red River in Minnesota.

Meantime the trials of the 60 men indicted from the 85 arrested, which started last week and have resulted so far in the sentencing of sixteen of them, have been postponed pending the arrangement of adequate defense.

Adequate defense will come only from outside the strike area. Defense meetings in Minneapolis will start the ball rolling. A provisional committee is being formed which will get new members from the unions and Farmer-Labor clubs. The Non-Partisan Labor Defense, just starting here, is being interested in the case, in cooperation with the American Civil Liberties Union. A Chicago lawyer has been approached.

Mother of 5 Leads League Relief Fight

WAPAK, Ohio.—All their efforts to get clothes and other necessities unfilled. On Friday, Feb. 15, the unemployed League in Wapak, Ohio, county literally swamped the relief offices, presented their demands.

The main ones were:

1. The right to go to any physician, at any time, for medical care. (Granted)
2. Free transportation to and from relief jobs. (Granted)
3. No discrimination on any account against any worker. (Granted)
4. Publication of a list of all available surplus foods and immediate distribution. (Granted)
5. Immediate distribution of adequate clothing to all in need. (Granted)
6. Direct relief to all on work relief until the first check is received. (Granted)
7. That no one be required to work for payment in kind—that is, payment in direct, supplementary or surplus relief. (Granted)
8. No one to be cut from relief while the need for relief exists, to be determined in every case by a thorough investigation. (Granted)

Seven additional demands were made but not acted on. The eight demands above were granted AT ONCE. It was the first time the unemployed had stormed the relief offices.

In 1934, prior to the Columbus convention of the National Unemployed League, there was one lone League in the county—five lone members. The driving force has been Mrs. Katie Miller, mother of

To Get Out Nat'l Paper For Jobless

A Caravan to Washington in May, before Congress adjourns, to present its nine-point program embodied in a Workers' Security Bill, is announced by the National Unemployed League from its headquarters in Columbus, Ohio. Plans for the caravan are getting under way.

The N.U.L. also announces that beginning soon after March 1 it will issue a national weekly paper for the unemployed, in accordance with a mandate from the last national convention. The office of the paper will be in New York.

In Columbus, the N.U.L. has moved into new headquarters, room 500, 232 North High Street. Calling attention to the rapid expansion of the League into new states, the League urges all workers interested or active in the unemployed movement to communicate with the N.U.L. office for details on the program of action for the coming six months.

Protests against the administration's attempts to kill the "prevailing rate of wage" amendment to the work relief bill were sent by the N.U.L. to Senator Carter Glass of the Senate Appropriations Committee and other prominent senators. The League, which has 1,000 branches in 22 states, warned of the coming Caravan to Washington, "by men and women from all parts of America whose patience is fast reaching the breaking point because of the apparent determination on the part of the government to destroy the American standard of living and reduce us to Chinese coolie conditions."

"We hold that all persons have the duty and right to employment," the letter continues, "performing socially useful work, under decent working conditions and for adequate wage standards, with sufficient working hours to maintain decency and health. We hold that all useful members of society are entitled to adequate sustenance without the stigma of charity; that it is the first duty of government to provide for the health and happiness of the people of the nation."

The Caravan to Washington is the outgrowth of the National Unemployed Day demonstration last Nov. 24. When the Demonstration Committee presented demands, on Nov. 27, to Secretary of Labor Perkins and Relief Administrator Hopkins, the casual reception gave new proof of the necessity of mass pressure as the only means of obtaining action.

The nine-point program for National Unemployed Day has now been incorporated into a Workers' Security Bill, with these four points as the basis:

1. The 35-hour week for labor.
2. A $10,000,000,000 public works program, with work on the basis of the 30-hour week at $30 per week.
3. Unemployment insurance (the London Bill).
4. Proportionate cash relief for all unemployed workers and farmers pending establishment of a satisfactory social insurance system.

In announcing the new paper, the N.U.L. explains: "Competent research men will give an analysis of the administration's relief program, rules and regulations governing the relief, decency and health standards, who pays the relief bill, etc., so that you will have facts and material at your fingertips to meet all opposition in your fight to raise the living standards of the unemployed in your community."

The New Press Is Here; We'll Do Our Part If You Do Yours!

HONESTLY, we really don't believe in miracles.

That is, we didn't until now.

Lets start with history. That's the best way for a writer to get out of a jam. When the idea was first advanced we were somewhat intrigued. But we must admit that we were also somewhat skeptical. Yes, to be sure we needed a new press. A mountain of literature to turn out. The New Militant every week, and that wants a couple of additional pages. The New International every month. Young Spartacus just as often. A raft of pamphlets and God knows what else our ambitious party leaders are cooking up.

There had to be a new press. The old rattletrap—God bless its memory—it did its work faithfully, if not so obediently for five years. It gave birth to an issue of the Militant every week. Trotsky's immortal pamphlets were conceived on it. From its sturdy bed the New International saw the light of day.

But that's all reminding. It's the warm glow in our heart thumping in retrospect for the old master. The cold and brutal truth is that every press, like every dog, has its day. Now progress demanded that it take a back seat. (How's that for mixing metaphors?) Mathematically computed the old junk, running at high speed could only produce 1,000 impressions an hour. At that rate our overworked but uncompromising pressman would have to keep his nose to the grindstone twenty-four hours a day. And then the work wouldn't be done. Taking all this in account the party brain trust got together and decided for a new press. Yes, but how? Where were the cocoanuts to come from? Since Moscow had turned cold on us and Hearst had stopped making donations the doubting Thomases said it couldn't be done. But the impossible did happen. And the notion became steel and iron.

The riggers got to work up to our new printing house. The moving van drew up and hoisted the whole business through the window. They loaded all the parts on the floor and for all the world it resembled a pile of junk. Not for long, however. The machinists got to work and before our very eyes the blasted thing grew up. When it was done it stood up three times the size of our old model.

And built for action—and plenty of punishment. Here it was. A grand thing to look at.

But no juice. The power trust was sabotaging the revolution. What is the puny power trust to the invincible power of Marxism, said the manager—and the juice streamed through. Now we could see what the new press could do. Its fast rolling cylinders could turn out the paper in less than half the time required on the old paper. It could print all four pages at one time. It could out the paper while in motion. An improvement? No, a miracle!

Better take another slug out of the old oxygen belt, because we're not through with you yet. The old saying that it never rains but it pours is really revolutionary—in case you didn't know. We have some more machinery to knock you wind out of your sails. First a Laddow machine. Just a technical name to the non-printers. But it means mountains to the boys in the shop. All our famous headlines will now be set by machine. No more hunting for spaces or brasses. No more worn and busted letters. No more waiting for forms to come off the press to find a missing letter. The Laddow machine means the twentieth century has come to our printshop.

Then there is something that will warm the heart of the laymen in New York. A folding machine! Two days hand labor involving twenty comrades who should be out boosting the party will be eliminated by this machine. It folds the New Militant down to mail size. It folds the International. It folds all pamphlets.

And that's not all. A stitching machine has been purchased which will make the labors of our shop complete and turn out our work completely—a finished product. A mechanical saw run by electricity to eliminate the ridiculous efforts of our printers who until now have chipped and chipped on an old hand saw sometimes hit and sometimes miss. That's all over now and we can do the job in the good old American labor saving custom.

All right, catch your breath. The story is almost over now. But stick with us a little longer. The most important part of the story is yet to come.

The dream has come true.

But it's really not ours, because we don't own it. And because we have to pay a raft of debts to get it running.

This is where you come in. We'll give you a bigger paper with a new press. You give us what it takes to put it out. Fair exchange, eh?

Machinery debts, rent, electric bills, gas bills, paper bills. Our past is here to plague us. And our present troubles to hold us back. The new press is indeed a new advance for the revolutionary movement. To make it secure, to hold on to it we need your assistance.

Crudely, bluntly and without the trimmings—we need money. So shell out generously and immediately.

Dig deep into your pockets and your purses and send your donations, your collection lists, your filled quotas for the party foundation fund pronto to the New Militant, 2 West 15th St., New York City.

We'll do our part if you do yours...

Organized Left Wing Task of Real Progressives in Silk Workers Union

Strike Vote Sabotaged By Delay of A.F. of L.

By FELIX GIORDANO
HAZELTON, Pa.—Three weeks have elapsed since the Allentown Conference of Silk Workers. This conference went on record calling for a second conference in Rhode Island for Sunday, Feb. 17, and approved a national strike in silk which would not be handed over for settlement to any Government board. The second conference was not held but instead was suddenly postponed for a week. Thus the entire activity of the Allentown conference remains on paper.

In the meantime the situation in the silk industry has altered considerably, and not in the workers' favor.

During recent years silk has become perhaps the most seasonal industry in this country, with the periods of slack and inactivity becoming longer and longer, while the "busy" seasons grow shorter and shorter. Three weeks ago our industry was at the peak of one of its busy periods. Had a strike been called at that time, it would have been in all probability of short duration. In any case, the chances for a successful conclusion would have been all in favor of the workers because the bosses needed the workers and the workers could have commanded their own terms.

Slack Season Is Near

But today, after the passage of three invaluable weeks, the period of intense activity is on the decline. By the time the complex machinery of a strike can be set in motion a few more weeks would have to go by, and then the silk workers will be at the beginning of the slack season.

Obviously, a strike call now would mean a long drawn out struggle, with the chances for success uncertain. Moreover, the very existence of the union would be put in grave jeopardy. A long struggle under the best of conditions, with the most militant and trustworthy leadership, puts a terrific burden on the workers. When the possibility of demoralization exists—and such a possibility cannot be denied in view of the last textile strike—a defeat might well break the present organization.

The line of strategy to pursue is clearly to prepare for a strike which should be called and put into effect at the very first signs of a real revival in the industry.

Security on the Job

The industry, we repeat, has become extremely seasonal. The principal objective of the silk workers must be to make it more steady. This can be achieved only through the establishment of the 80 hour week, and the definite limits to the machine load.

To achieve a decent level of wages on a graduated scale and to enjoy any amount of security on the job the silk workers must win the 80-hour week and the closed shop. Every worker understands the seriousness of such a struggle.

In the face of such a serious struggle—how are we to estimate the course pursued since the Allentown conference? It is a maneuver of the leadership to cover up its unmitigated and unrealistic policies which play directly into the hands of the bosses. Such maneuvers will continue so long as a strong and militant left wing is not consolidated in the silk industry nationally. We must guarantee a successful strike, and the existence of our union, the American Federation of Silk Workers, by immediately crystallizing such a left wing.

The Paterson Election

Last Saturday the silk workers in Paterson elected a general manager to succeed Bill Keller, "the progressive" who was forced to save his face by resigning three weeks ago; they also elected four organizers in the Plain Goods Department. The left wingers in the union succeeded in electing a slate of three organizers (the fourth one, Sam Sheber, deserted the ranks before the election and went over to the right wingers), but failed to elect their candidates to the office of general manager.

In Keller's place today there is Williams, an outright right winger with a none-too-clean record. Sarkis Phillian, left wing candidate for general manager, was defeated by 84 votes in an election in which some 1,800 votes were cast. He was the candidate of the largest department in the union, and very popular in his own department as well as in the joint board. His record as a left winger and a militant is clear cut. Yet he was defeated. Just a short time ago Keller the "fake" was elected and the right wingers did not even dare run against him because of the obvious left tendency among the workers. Yet the right wing in this election was victorious and rolled up an impressive vote. Why?

Why Militants Failed

The Daily Worker, which broadcast in its headlines the victory of electing three organizers out of the four for a department, slurs over the enormous vote and the defeat of the election for the key post in the union by claiming fraud in the victory, and by blaming Keller for the enormous vote received by the right wing.

How does it happen that a strong left wing could have fallen victim to such petty fraud as might have been perpetrated under the circumstances? But more important still, how well based is the claim of the Stalinists that the strength of the reactionaries is due to Keller's underhand tricks?

Every silk worker in Paterson knows how discredited Keller is. In the largest department of our union, the Plain Goods Department, the Keller clique a few weeks ago failed to elect a single man to the executive board of fifteen. Keller's strength in the union does not amount to the proverbial row of pins, certainly not among the militant workers who are in the predominance as proven by the elections and the victories of the militants in the Plain Goods Department. The reasons for the defeat in the union as a whole are not quite so simple as the C. P. pretends.

The reason for the victory of the reactionaries lies in certain policies, or rather lack of policies pursued by the present dominating group among the militants.

No Clear-Out Program

In the first place, the present "left wing" is in reality a loose bloc with no clear-out program and policies, a bloc that places stress on catching votes rather than on crystallizing a genuine left wing movement. As a consequence the Stalinists pushed to the fore many elements whose function was to serve as a screen but who in reality played with the Stalinists for their own personal advantage, as for example Sam Sheber, who was pushed to the fore as a "militant" and who at the last moment came out for Williams. How many other Shebers are there among those with whom the Stalinists are maneuvering?

At the same time, the C. P. spares neither wind nor effort to discredit those militants who proved themselves in the activities of the United Silk Workers Club—who as a matter of fact did yeoman's service in the fight against Keller, who were expelled by Keller, and who were kept out of the union at the time when the Stalinists were accepted.

Secondly, the activities led by the C. P. members were concentrated primarily in a single department, the Plain Goods Department. This short-sighted policy, whose goal was to get immediate results, could not fail to isolate the left wing and tend to weaken it.

Thirdly, the sentiment the Stalinists primarily cultivated was a negative one: against the Keller clique, as if the entire problem could be settled on the single issue of Keller. The lack of a positive alignment of militant forces is illustrated in the fact that the workers in the Plain Goods Department gave the Stalinists bloc as high as 900 votes in the elections for the department executive board, while the elections for organizer received some 650 votes—a drop of almost one-third.

Results of C. P. Policy

In short, Sarkis Phillian and the left-wingers were defeated because Phillian was endorsed not by a genuine left wing with a clear cut program but by the C. P. bloc. The reactionaries were able to capitalize on the fact that many members of the union still remember the dual and splitting tactics of which the C. P. was the torchbearer up to a very few months ago. Williams received a great many "negative" votes: many votes cast for him were votes against the Communist Party, and cannot be interpreted otherwise.

The defeat is all the more dangerous because it gives new ammunition to those "militants" who have long howled for the "independence" of the Plain Goods Department, who have long preached the hopelessness of achieving any progress within the union as a whole, and who aim to establish more firmly the craft divisions in the local—And there is no lack of such muddleheads among the figureheads in the Stalinist bloc.

A genuine left wing is needed and must be built.

We repeat what we have said time and again: the basis for the left wing is a policy and not a vote catching bloc; the left wing must be built in the union as a whole, and the industry as a whole and not in a single department. And above all: BEWARE OF ADVENTURISM!

NBC BUSE FAILS

NEWARK, N. J.—A barrage of missiles smashed truck windows and a number of scab drivers were rushed to a hospital here when the National Biscuit Co. attempted to run out a fleet of trucks loaded with "dummy" loads, a maneuver to break the morale of the strike, now in its seventh week. The maneuver failed.

"Gorillas" are paid $8 a day by the company to take care of scabs and trail NBC trucks in high-powered cars. Picketing continues night and day, both at the factory and in the markets. Many local merchants have discontinued selling NBC products, due to the pressure of the boycott which the 250 strikers have spread through the city.

Thirty strikers have been arrested.

ed for adequate legal defense, both in the appeal of the case of the sentenced sixteen, and in the trials of the remaining 44 men.

Leaders Picked Off

Bill Cruden, president of Local 17, of Fargo, was singled out as one of the first sixteen. So was Secretary Austin Swalde, and Hugh J. Hughes, another union official. Cruden will be one of the speakers in Minneapolis Sunday. The other strikers on trial consist of printers, carpenters, bricklayers and unemployed, as well as truck drivers, including the victorious milk strike drivers who won their demands of higher wages under the leadership of this same Local 17 last fall.

Julius Emme, Secretary of the State Industrial Commission, and Bob Cramer, editor of the Labor Review, also will speak this Sunday.

Meanwhile the Fargo Central Council of Trade Unions passes resolutions. It does nothing in the way of positive action. But that is more than the American Federation of Labor, of which Local 173 is a member, is doing, for the A. F. of L. is in reality sabotaging by being conspicuously absent. It is even rumored that Green and Tobin may try to act against the strike.

It is perhaps noteworthy that until last year Fargo had no unions of any strength except the printers, and during the present strike the leaders of these printers' unions tried to turn down the job of printing a strike leaflet because it would "antagonize the police". Now the Drivers' union alone has 400 members.

Fear of antagonizing the police has disappeared in the city of Fargo. Even the back-biting, reactionary, red-baiting paper, the Fargo Forum, is being forced to tone down its open strike-breaking.

Stalinists Attack Worker Opposed To Union Policy

Joseph Fox, member of the New York Food Workers Industrial Union, was slugged and beaten up by an organized mob of Stalinists after inciting speeches made by Kramberg, Beal and other officials of the union at a membership meeting held on Monday night, Feb. 18.

Because comrade Fox's speech was enthusiastically received by the great majority of the rank and file when he pointed out his position in favor of trade union unity and against arbitrary dissolution of the union, a mob was organized which met him downstairs coming out of the hall and slugged him on the head and the neck. One C. P. member, Lieberman by name, a member of the trade board, threatened worse violence to Fox if he attended another meeting.

The officials are using every despicable means of terrorizing the membership into accepting the dissolution policy of the T.U.U.L. The basis for unity, comrade Fox pointed out, must always rest on our fight for the adoption of a class struggle policy as against class collaboration and unity of action of all the workers in the industry. Against the proposal of dumping the membership into the "Dutch Schultz" controlled local 302, comrade Fox moved in favor of negotiating directly with the "International" on the basis of local autonomy and separate charter, thus maintaining the bona-fide basis for the organization of the unorganized.

Revolutionists and sincere workers can only look at such manifestations of hoodlumism with disgust, as aid to the enemies of the working class, the bosses.

from the A. F. of L. unless something is done. The other two big unions at the Goodyear and Goodrich plants which combine with Firestone to make the basis of the rubber industry, have lost over half of their 15,000 membership, and does aren't coming in.

Most important of all, all three of the big locals planned a strike vote. Claherty hopes to divert the energy of the workers into a futile campaign. He completely ignores the fact that Akron labor dropped out of the A. F. of L. because of its inaction and that it would flock back if strike action was taken against the arrogant rubber barons.

The Willoughby Strike

The militant strike of the Ohio Rubber Co. union at Willoughby, Ohio, about 45 miles from Akron, is having an effect here. There 400 workers are facing 450 scabs and 200 gunmen directed by the notorious strike breaking agency from Cleveland, the Associated Industries.

The brutal beatings of 12 strikers, the terror caused when strike breakers and professional gunmen threw tear gas bombs at school children in a "playful" mood, not only aroused the populace of Willoughby, which is backing the strikers, but caused resentment in Akron.

After Claherty and Shepler left the meeting, a misguided but sincere A. F. of L. field organizer, George Roberts, who is leading the strike at Willoughby spoke briefly and aroused the rubber workers into a fever pitch when he told

The right wingers hold the offensive. This tendency to play a weak, defensive role has in turn been due in large degree to the fact that they themselves have no clear consistent position. This has again been evident in recent discussions among the militants on the question of the "road to power", some standing for proletarian dictatorship, some for "workers' democracy", without defining, however, what this means.

At present the majority seem to favor "a mass labor party organized on a federated basis", some on the ground that "the alternative to a labor party is either armed insurrection or fascism!" Some favor a labor party with a "minimum program of socialization of basic industries". Others assert that it is the business of revolutionists to build the revolutionary party—not a reformist party.

Thus on top of the cleavage between the Old Guard in the S.P. and its opponents, fresh cleavages develop immediately among the latter. The most crucial question for the future is whether out of these developments a substantial element standing on an uncompromising Marxist and Leninist program will crystallize.

574 BOYS SUPPORT ALBERT LEA PICKETS

Several of the men who helped make labor history in Local 574's Truck Drivers and Teamsters International, far-reaching strikes of last summer, were in Albert Lea last week to add their strength to the picket lines which surrounded the Potter foundry.

The Minneapolis picketers were Carl Skogland, Hiney Strand, George Wilson, Frank Hall, Harry Brethren, Lee Glynn, Clifford Westlund, Hank Klose, and Glasen.

"They certainly were a lot of help to us," declared Frank Ellis. "There wasn't the slightest bit of doubt about our picket lines whether these strike veterans were on duty. They knew what they were doing and how to do it."—From the Austin (Minn.) American.

five children. The work to organize the jobless over a period of months was almost heartbreaking, but the reward came on Feb. 15. Sam Pollack, vice-president of the Ohio Unemployed League, was sent into Anglaise county, at the request of the League in Waynesfield, to help organize the demonstration. When the unemployed flowed into the town of Wapak, the county seat, and elected spokesmen to call on the relief officials, nobody wanted to stay behind, everybody went with the committee to the court house. The relief officials were caught with their pants down. Not knowing what to do, they immediately began distributing clothing and adjusting individual grievances.

Today, as a result of this first success, more Leagues are forming in the county. Bill Groff, special organizer of the O.U.L., is in charge.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Mass meetings . . . and new Leagues. This is the formula for success, to judge by the experience of Local 1 of the Pennsylvania Unemployed League. Mass meetings everywhere, including school buildings. But—

They Got Suspicious

Ben Graham, superintendent of schools, got suspicious. Suspicious of radicals. The School Board got suspicious. Also of radicals. The politicians, with the aid of "substantial" people, suddenly started an organization called the Community Councils and the school board decided to close all school buildings to "radical organizations"—if it could.

Meeting in the same schools where the P.U.L. meets, the Community Councils operate on the theory that movies lectures and popular songs will aid all classes in dissolving their differences, and cause the workers to forget that their children are half-starved and will continue to starve.

Local 1 is fighting to retain its school-meeting permits . . . not hat in hand, but by militant action. The old locals of the P.U.L. are growing and new locals are formed every week following mass meetings.

Contest Note

IN SPITE of a bad start due to moving the offices the New MILITANT building campaign is well under way. Minneapolis stands first in number of new subs sent in and the Central Branch in New York City second. Davenport, Iowa stands highest in percentage of fulfillment of quota, having already reached the 80 percent mark. Philadelphia is also making noticeable progress toward the achievement of its goal. There are a number of branches from which we have not heard as yet. Akron, Buffalo, Charleston W. Va., Cleveland, Detroit, Fort Wayne, Minneapolis, Oakland, Plentywood, Salt Lake City, Springfield, Staunton, Washington and Waukegan are on this list. Let's have some word from you in the next week!

Certain branches are doing an excellent job on bundle payments, keeping them right up to date. Among these are Los Angeles, Oakland, Tonawanda, Cleveland, Dickinson City, Allentown, New Castle, Northampton, Salt Lake City and Riverview. All other branches should make immediate arrangements to settle on bundle accounts at once. This is vital and your bundle will not be counted in the circulation drive unless paid in full.

And now, another week of concentrated effort to achieve our goal of 10,000 circulation by May 31. Send subs today! Build up the bundle orders!

RULES OF PRIZE CONTEST FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS

1. Who may participate?

The contest is for individuals and branches. Any individual, not employed in the national office of this publication, may compete.

2. How are points counted?

Counting will be on the basis of yearly subs, each of which will count as one point. Two half year subs will also count as one point. Subs taken on combination offers will be counted unless otherwise specified.

3. What are the dates of the drive?

The drive started February 1 and will end on May 31.

4. What are the prizes?

(a) Each month during the drive a prize of $2.00 in books will be awarded to the individual sending in the greatest number of subs during that month. A minimum of 10 subs will be required in this category.

(b) To the individual sending in the largest number of subs for the period of the entire drive will be awarded a prize of $5.00 in books.

(c) To the branch getting the largest percentage score in individual subs and bundle orders will be awarded a prize of $10.00 in books.

(d) To the branch making second place for the entire drive in the points outlined in (c) above, a prize of $5.00 in books.

General remarks:

*All books are to be selected from the lists of the Pioneer Bookshop.

96 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

*In case of tie in any category duplicate prizes will be awarded.

*All remittances must be payable to the New MILITANT, 2 West 15th Street, New York. In order to be counted they must be received on or before 5 P.M. of the last day of each month (for category 4a) or on or before 6 P.M. of the last day of the drive (for the remaining categories). They must also contain:

(a) name of subscriber

(b) name of contestant

(c) name of branch (if to be thus credited)

American Imperialism Arrives At A Decision

When Roosevelt granted recognition to the U.S.S.R. his move was interpreted correctly as being aimed at Japanese imperialism. Undoubtedly it gave pause to the Japanese militarists in the ruthless plundering of China. For to them it meant the prelude to a military alliance, a view that was made highly plausible by the fact that recognition was soon followed by the sending of military and naval attaches to the Soviet Union by the U. S., by the fact that even prior to recognition the Curtis-Wright aircraft concern had been granted permission by the U. S. Army (naturally with the consent of the State Department) to conclude a technical assistance contract with the U.S.S.R. and to build airplane factories in Russia, etc. Only a few weeks before open announcement of recognition the attitude of the Soviet Union towards Japanese aggression in connection with the Chinese Eastern Railway had undergone a distinct change; the tone of Soviet diplomacy hardened and became less conciliatory. Temporarily the Japanese generals, faced with the possibility of two such foes, whose interests ran parallel only momentarily in common opposition to Japanese aims, uniting against them, were forced to wait and move more cautiously. But since then the international situation has taken new form, new alignments are in process of achievement, and the American capitalists have arrived at a decision. This decision, to make perfectly plain to Japan that there would be no military alliance between the U. S. and the U.S.S.R., is unquestionably related to the stand taken by England in support of the rearmament of Hitler Germany. Thus the whole international situation has become threatening to the Soviet Union. The signal for the war of intervention may be given at any moment.

American Policy

The question of the debts owed by Russia to the U. S. played only a minor role in Roosevelt's decision to withdraw military attaches and consuls from the Soviet Union. It provided merely the plausible diplomatic excuse for justification of a provocative act before the masses. For such an act will be (and has been) interpreted by Japanese militarists and German fascists as a guarantee that they may proceed with the attack on the Soviet Union without fear of interference by U. S. imperialism. The German "Tagblatt" thus stated that "Apparently Washington intends to demonstrate that there is no military alliance between the two powers." Washington feels that the interests of American imperialism will be best served by pushing Japan into war against the Soviet Union and then waiting till both countries have become exhausted by the con-

Militarizing of the Pacific

Meantime Roosevelt pursues the "New Deal" policy in the Pacific. That is, he is completely militarizing the Pacific coast and the island "possessions" and laying the necessary foundations for properly carrying on the colossal naval battles of the future. The preparations involve political changes as well as physical ones. Thus the New Deal as applied to Hawaii means the change to a "mainland" governor completely under instruction of the U. S. navy. Millions of dollars are being poured out to construct in Hawaii the largest air bases in the Pacific. In addition air bases are being set up rapidly on certain of the Aleutian Islands which form the northern and the safest approach to the Japanese Isles. The Philippines will undergo a similar process at the first opportunity. The propaganda for tightening the military grip on the Philippines is already evident in the announcement by American business interests in the islands of the "discovery" of rich chromite deposits, valuable in war time. Thus it is clear that he U. S., under the guidance of a President who, under the cloak of liberalism, pursues the ends of imperialism, is embarked on a course directed against both the U.S.S.R. and Japan. War between these two countries would afford Roosevelt the full opportunity to go even further in "mechanizing and modernizing" both the army and the navy, and in building the largest navy in the world to carry out the greedy aims of world hegemony of the American financiers.

War and Fascism

An unforgettable lesson that the capitalists learned in the last world war is that the ruling class must protect itself not only against the rival imperialists abroad, but also against the working class enemy at home. For just as the capitalists carry out similar policies of exploitation at home and abroad, so the working class under proper leadership pursues internal and international policies directly antagonistic to those of capitalism. During war in particular the workers are apt to learn the lesson that no nation can be free at home that exploits other peoples abroad. Hence the capitalist class attempts to guarantee its rear (at home) in wartime by suppressing all working class liberties and wiping out their revolutionary organizations. Thus war breeds fascism and the working class must oppose both.

Five Join Workers Party Protesting C.P. Bureaucracy

Calling on other members of the Communist Party and the Young Communist League to follow them, five Philadelphia comrades have joined the Spartacus Youth League and the Workers Party. The new members are Milton Preen, S. S. Colton, Nat Cohen and John Bruckin, all from the Y.C.L., and Jed Davis from the C.P.

In a statement addressed to "Communist Comrades, Fellow Workers," these comrades protest against the bureaucracy of the C. P., and cite in particular the change of policy on the trade union field, the united front and the building of a Labor Party without reference to the party convention or free discussion by the rank and file.

Cite Lack of Democracy

"For months already we have witnessed the swift destruction of the last semblance of party democracy," the statement reads, in part, "and the robbing of the rank and file's revolutionary right to freedom of discussion on all major changes in the party line. . . . It was ruled at the last convention, 'in the name of several hundred thousand workers,' the party must conduct a sharp struggle against any liquidatory tendencies, and expose the slanders and maneuvers of the renegades who call for the liquidation of the T.U.U.L. because they wish to strengthen the A. F. of L. bureaucracy, of which they have become a part."

"Without warning, as if there had never been a party congress, the Central Committee not long after startled the whole membership with a series of decrees (Daily Worker, Jan. 26, 1935), completely reversing the unanimous decisions of the convention. The C.C. commands us: 'The existing revolutionary trade unions and their locals join the A. F. of L. or its unions wherever there exist parallel mass A. F. of L. trade unions, or the Red trade unions can join the A. F. of L. directly.'"

"Even if the C. C. claim—that the objective conditions have forced this sudden turn in trade union policy—were correct, still nothing can justify their refusal to recognize the party members' elemental right to democratically decide what the party's proletarian policy should be! . . .

"After we had been taught year in, year out (1929-35) that social democracy and fascism were twins, after it had been drummed into our heads that no united fronts against imperialism and fascism could be carried out with the treacherous socialist leaders but only with the workers from below—after all this, the executive committee of the Comintern (and there has not been a world congress of the Comintern for seven years!) wholly upset our old united front policy. . . . Are we to honor the impotent united front of the C.P. and S.P. of France as a model for our future united front tactics? Never! . . . It is a united front of speeches and parades, and not of organized struggle against fascism. It is a united front from above! We stand for the united front of all working class parties and leagues from top to bottom, with unrestricted right of mutual criticism in the course of the fight for common aims. Go back and read the records of the Fourth Congress of the Communist International and learn what Lenin meant by the united front!"

"The idea that the major political task of the communists today is the launching of a Labor Party came like a thunderbolt to us! We have learnt from history that a Labor Party is a reformist petty-bourgeois party, what we once branded a 'social fascist' party. As Lenin once pointed out, all so-called labor parties inevitably become imperialist (social imperialist) instruments against the revolutionary Marxist vanguard."

"We call on all comrades who are in sympathy today with our viewpoint to follow us and join strength with the rising ranks of the only revolutionary Marxist party and youth league in America, the Workers Party of the U.S. and the Spartacus Youth League."

THE TRUTH ABOUT SACRAMENTO

How C.P. Tactics Hurt Defendants

By JAMES P. CANNON

San Francisco, Feb. 11.—The "Criminal Syndicalism" trial at Sacramento had every right to become a central issue of the advanced labor movement throughout the country. The reasons for the failure are now clearly established and it is time to speak out loud about them.

Behind the familiar smoke screen of the "Red scare," the prosecution is patently aimed at militant trade unionism; concretely it is an attempt to take revenge for the strike movement of the cannery and agricultural workers, and to head off further activities of this kind. This contention was fully substantiated by the nature of the evidence introduced by the prosecution throughout the past week of the trial which I had the opportunity to attend. The big banking and industrial interests which stand behind the prosecution at Sacramento are out to "get" Chambers and Decker and their immediate associates. At the same time they are aiming a deadly blow at militant unionism which the defendants represented and carried into practice among the most oppressed and deprived section of the California working class, the agricultural workers.

A great working class movement could have been organized around this issue. Nothing of the kind happened, and the responsibility for the failure—which jeopardizes the defendants as well as the advanced labor movement in general—rests squarely on the Communist Party. Indeed, facts are already piled mountain high to prove that the Stalinists did not simply fail to take advantage of the opportunity which was in their hands; they worked deliberately to "play down" the case and to wreck every attempt initiated by others to put the defense movement on a broad working class base.

Sacramento is not merely a repetition of the neglect and incompetence for which the Stalinists are sufficiently distinguished; the story of Stalinism in the Sacramento case is a story of perfidious betrayal of the interests of the labor movement and of the defendants on trial. On this point argument is unnecessary and superfluous; the facts which make up the shameful record speak for themselves.

Sabotaging the Case

The arrests occurred last July. The trial began in January. Thus the C. P. and its defense organization, the I.L.D., had a period of six months to prepare the case, alarm the labor movement and set a big defense movement into motion. But they did nothing of the kind. On the contrary, the case was completely neglected and ignored. Practically no publicity was given to it in the Daily Worker. No attempt was made to enlist the cooperation of the Socialist Party and other organizations on a national scale. Nothing was attempted even in the State of California beyond the usual perfunctory "united front" of the C. P. and its satellite organizations.

The capitalist reactionaries were fully awake to the import of the case. The opening of the trial found them mobilized and firing away every day in the press against the "red menace" on trial at Sacramento.

S.P. on Sacramento "United Front"

The breakdown of the "united front" defense in the Sacramento trial of workers and labor leaders is laid directly at the door of the Communist Party, in a statement issued in Stockton, Cal. by the Socialist Party of California.

Under date of Feb. 5, the statement says, in part: "On the suggestion of the American Civil Liberties officials, conferences began weeks ago in San Francisco, resulting in the setting up of united defense machinery including the Socialist Party, Workers Party of U. S., Communist Party, American Civil Liberties Union, Non-Partisan Labor Defense, I.L.D. and several labor unions. An agreement was mento. But it produced hardly a ripple in the labor movement of California. As for the advanced workers throughout the country, they didn't even know about the case until a series of articles in the New Militant called attention to it.

The defendants were allowed to remain in jail the whole six months before the trial, despite the fact that bail for each of them was set at only $3,200. Chambers and Decker the leaders of the union, are effective and popular agitators. If they had been at liberty during the six months before the trial they could have done much to arouse labor and liberal support for the case and to procure bail for the others. But they never had the chance.

Were they allowed to remain in jail because the I.L.D. was unable to procure bail for them? Nonsense! They had been in conflict with the party bureaucracy over questions of union policy. Because of that bail was withheld from them and they were deliberately kept in jail for six months by their own party while a whispered campaign of slander was carried on to discredit and isolate them. As one over-zealous and somewhat indiscreet Stalinist remarked when questioned about the matter: "The party is keeping Decker in jail to discipline her."

Proof that the failure to provide bail was not due to lack of means and resources was supplied when the Non-Partisan Labor Defense intervened in the case at the request of several of the defendants. The N.P.L.D. offered to attempt to raise bail. At first the prisoners were forbidden by the I.L.D. to accept the "counter-revolutionary bail" of the N.P.L.D. This was going a little too far, however, and Jack Warnick made application to the N.P.L.D. His bail was procured within a week. A few days later the N.P.L.D. took Decker out on bail, and collected the bail funds for a third defendant. Put to shame by this demonstration the I.L.D. woke up and suddenly discovered that they also could raise bail if they wanted to. They deposited bail for six defendants on one day after the N.P.L.D. had forced their hand. They didn't have to hunt for this bail. They had it all the time. They didn't use it for six months because they didn't want to use it.

Making and Breaking United Front

As stated above, the trial began without the semblance of a united front defense movement. When the N.P.L.D. entered the case as the representative of Norman Mini, one of the defendants who had left the C. P. and joined the Workers Party, it made concrete proposals for the organization of a united front to mobilize the mass movement in support of the defense. Under pressure of the defendants the C. P. finally agreed.

The Socialist Party, the Workers Party, the American Civil Liberties Union and several other organizations participated and a united committee was constituted on the basis of definite agreements in writing. Everything was set to build up a broad supporting movement even at this late date. Prospects were good to organize a real counter-offensive against the capitalist reactionaries and red baiters and to penetrate the trade union movement with the appeal of the Sacramento prisoners.

Then orders came from New York: "Break it up!" At the con-

Statement by N.P.L.D.

Fifteen men and women are now on trial in Sacramento, facing 6 to 84 years imprisonment each for their activities.

That the trial is an onslaught on labor unions is proven by inclusion in the indictment of the organization of picketing, as specific proof of criminal syndicalism.

Even more revealing is a statement made to the Sacramento Bee, on February 4, by F. J. Palomares, manager of the San Joaquin Valley employment agency:

"This trial is of the utmost importance to them (the bosses) because they believe the defendants responsible for the San Joaquin Valley strike of 1933—the first serious one in that section's history." If convictions are obtained in Sacramento, the next step will be a state-wide—and eventually a nation-wide attack on labor unions. Mini and to offer aid to the other prisoners. We raised the bail.

The Non-Partisan Labor Defense was called in by Norman Mini, one of the defendants. We dispatched a field representative to Sacramento and Albert Goldman, noted labor attorney, to defend ($6,400) for Caroline Decker and Jack Warnick, co-defendants of Mini. By our appeals to trade unions and other means, we popularized the Sacramento defense movement. We have helped provide the prisoners with relief funds and literature needed by them for the trial. We have begun an investigation to impeach State evidence. In New York, we held a great mass meeting protesting Hearst's anti-labor campaign and in support of the Sacramento prisoners.

All this has been done by us without any general appeal for funds.

Now we must have funds. Rush donations. Help smash the attack of the California bankers on the elementary rights of labor.

Fraternally yours,

GEORGE NOVACK

Chairman, Provisional Committee for Non-Partisan Labor Defense Room 731, 22 East 17th St., N. Y. C.

ference on January 26 they tried to do so by the simple device of insisting on the inclusion of their satellite organizations. When they got enough votes in this way, they sailed ahead and, in violation of written agreements to the contrary, adopted a motion which drove out of the united front every non-Stalinist organization.

The Communist Party has said and written much in recent months about the desire for a "united front" with the Socialist Party. The State organization of the S. P. in California participated in the short-lived united front on the Sacramento case with the C. P. and with the Workers Party. The testimony of the Socialist Party of California as to the cause of the disruption of this attempt therefore has an exceptional interest and importance. I quote from an official circular of the Socialist Party of California addressed "To Members of the Socialist Party of California" under date of February 5, 1935:

"The Communist Party controlled delegates, however, after repeated breaches of faith, and despite concessions made by the other groups for the sake of unity, deliberately smashed the united defense. At the conference on January 26, acting apparently on orders from New York, they violated every agreement previously made with other delegates. This they did in spite of unity appeals by Dr. George P. Hedley, of the A.C.L.U. and two of the I.L.D. defendants who were present. A policy frankly designed to bar cooperation of any delegate unwilling to accept Communist Party orders was laid down as an ultimatum. Thereupon, the C.P.-controlled delegates called for 'a united front under the leadership of the C.P. and I.L.D.' Having driven all non-controllable delegates out, they got it."

The result of the Stalinist united front policy was predicted by our San Francisco branch in a leaflet, for distributing which our comrades were physically attacked by the Stalinists on the night of Feb. 3. The Stalinist "united front" conference assembled on Feb. 10. It was a complete success—I.L.D. delegates were present from various cities and they never once disagreed with each other or with the C. P. delegates. As a matter of fact, even the I.W.O., the Marine Workers Industrial Union, and the League Against War and Fascism cheered every decision to the echo. As for trade unions and other genuine mass organizations, they stayed away in droves.

Stalinist policy which, for six months, prevented the development of a mass movement, has now smashed the movement which might have been built out of the genuine united front committee including the S. P., W.P., N.P.L.D. and other non-Stalinist organizations. For this the C.P. will have to answer sooner or later to the defendants and the workers of California.

Defense Policy in Court

As previous editorials in the New Militant have indicated, the Workers Party stood for unity and cooperation in the courtroom. Despite the deep and irreconcilable differences which separate us from the Communist Party we considered unity before the capitalist court a self-evident duty and necessity. The N.P.L.D., representing Norman Mini, brought Albert Goldman from Chicago to conduct his defense and sought an agreement for cooperation between him and the attorney of the I.L.D., Leo Gallagher. The attitude of the C. P., however, made even this cooperation impossible. The I.L.D. attorney has never been willing to confer with Goldman over courtroom tactics, to say nothing of coming to an agreement with him.

The conflict over courtroom tactics, which at one point flared into the open, brought out two conflicting theories of labor defense which I do not believe can be reconciled. Our theory is that you engage a lawyer to safeguard the legal rights of a worker on trial, to take advantage of all legal technicalities and to try to convince a jury that he acted within his legal rights. This does not mean compromising principle. On the contrary, in the courtroom the attacks of capitalism on the workers' standards and workers' rights, the suffering of the masses, the principles and tactics of the revolutionary movement for the liberation of the workers—all are clearly and sharply brought out. "Mass pressure," which is undoubtedly the decisive factor in labor cases in the final analysis, has to be realized by means of publicity and agitation to mobilize mass support and protest outside the courtroom. For this, a united front and a mass campaign is needed. A lawyer's soap box speeches in court cannot be substituted for it.

The attorney of the I.L.D. has proceeded in this case as though it were lost before it started; as though there had been no hope of securing an acquittal, or even a hung jury. Consequently, he has tried the case for the benefit of the courtroom audience, which consists of exactly 112 people when all the chairs are occupied, about one-half of whom are sympathetic to the cause and the other half prejudiced supporters of the prosecution. This is the perverted Stalinist conception of "mass pressure." This is the way they try to compensate for their failure to organize a real mass movement in support of the defense.

Gallagher even went so far in antagonizing the jury and applying "mass pressure" in the courtroom that on one occasion, when a woman juror interrupted to ask him not to shout so loud because it made her nervous, he retorted: "I am not talking for the jury, I am talking for the people in the courtroom." (Western Worker, Feb. 7). How can anyone who has a decent regard for the fate of men on trial support or acquiesce in such tactics? It was at this point that attorney Goldman, after repeated warnings against such methods, made the statement that he did not associate himself with the tactics of Gallagher.

Frame-up Against Norman Mini

If the Stalinist leaders here have shown themselves to be helpless and impotent before the assaults of reaction, and unable to organize any serious resistance to it, they display great energy in the crusade against what, after all, they regard as the "real enemy"—"Trotskyism." Considering the case lost before it started, and the defendants as good as in San Quentin—and losing very little sleep on that score—they are concerned now to find a scapegoat upon whom they can unload the responsibility for the results of their own incompetence and perjury. They have selected "Trotskyism" for this role. The fact that "Trotskyism" in this instance is represented by a defendant who himself is on trial and facing a prison term does not deter them.

Norman Mini, one of the defendants, quit the Communist Party and joined the Workers Party. That made him, forthwith, a counter-revolutionist of course. And now, according to the official propaganda, he is also a "stool pigeon". But what's new about that? Is it not well known that anyone who disagrees with the policy of the Communist Party is ipso facto a police agent as well as a social fascist? Who is going to be impressed by this new discovery in regard to Norman Mini? True, such an attack on one of the defendants while the trial is going on and the repetition of the Hearst press lie that Mini made a "confession"—implying that some "crime" was committed—is a blow at the defense. But why should people who deliberately kept their own party members in jail for six months worry if they get six years on top of it? The important thing is to deal a blow at "Trotskyism".

But in this case, also, I think the Stalinist generals have overreached themselves and that their attack will turn out to be a boomerang. For the accusation against Mini is a frame-up which has already called forth the protest of Jack Warnick. And I venture to predict that when Mini's day in court comes, and he takes the witness stand to speak for himself, the blackguards who blithely denounced him as a stool-pigeon will be put to shame.

When he was arrested last August Mini, then a member of the C. P., gave a statement in which he openly admitted his membership in the C. P. and openly proclaimed his revolutionary beliefs. He also answered questions regarding the party affiliation of well known officials of the C. P. and their revolutionary beliefs as he understood them. This, of course, was a mistake and a very serious one too, for which Mini deserves severe criticism. A revolutionist should know better than to give any information of any kind to the police or the prosecutor. Naturally, the Workers Party, which had never even heard of Mini last August cannot take a particle of responsibility for his statement. It reflects the woeful lack of revolutionary education as well as the spirit of leftist bravado of a young member of the Stalinist party. We educate our members differently.

I heard the statement read in court. It fell flat; there was nothing in it that was not commonly known. The capitalist press blazoned it as a "confession". This it was not in any sense of the word, for the essence of Mini's statement was that he had a right to belong to the C.P. and to believe in a revolutionary program, and did not consider this a crime. But the Western Worker, over-anxious to strike a blow at Mini, even if thereby a blow was also struck at all the defendants in the case, enormously exaggerated the import of the statement and, following the lead of the capitalist press, declared it to be "the most dangerous weapon on the railroad machine has brought into use against the defendants to date."

That is false from beginning to end. As a matter of fact, the statement cannot harm the case of the defendants in the slightest degree except on one theory: that they intend to give up the fight for the legality of the C. P. deny membership in the C. P. and deny the revolutionary program.

Jack Warnick, who made an open break with the C. P. in protest against the frame-up of Mini, gave the answer of a revolutionist to the slander of the Western Worker: "Neither do I think the information he gave is damaging to the case or to the revolutionary movement. What he said consisted of facts which we have always disdained to hide." Other defendants said the same thing in substance when the statement was read in court.

The Western Worker characterizes the document as a "stool pigeon statement". That is not true at all. No person of integrity would support such a slanderous accusation. The very people who make it known that Mini has repeatedly been offered immunity if he would testify for the State and that he refused all such offers and remained in solidarity with his fellow-defendants.

The slander campaign against Mini is a shameful attempt to take revenge on a young comrade who had the intelligence and courage to break with the Stalinist party and join another more worthy of the allegiance of a revolutionist. That is his real crime. For that they want to assassinate him. But they will not succeed. We will not let them do it. We would not deserve the name of revolutionists if we yielded an inch to such an infamous frame-up.

Beginning with the next issue the New Militant will start a Questions and Answers department. Comrade A. Weaver who conducted the Question Box in the old Militant will have charge of the new feature. Readers are requested to address their questions to "Questions and Answers" department.

The next issue of the New Militant will carry Caroline Decker's own statement on how the Communist Party at first denied her and other defendants the right to accept bail from the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, and other questions.—Ed. Note.

The Reason for Hearst

WILLIAM Randolph Hearst and his yellow press howling for blood of foreigners and "reds", among whom one finds prominently listed in his latest broadside such pale pinks, with names that clearly reveal their foreign origin, as President Chase of New York University, President Graham of the University of North Carolina, and President Hutchins of the University of Chicago.

Leaders of the Agricultural and Cannery Workers Union on trial in Sacramento, California, for strike activities last year, and agricultural workers being shot in another strike a few miles away.

Imperishable share croppers and their leaders in Arkansas terrorized by vigilantes and the courts.

Sixteen members of the Drivers Union in Fargo, N. D. found guilty of rioting on the basis of a picketing incident in which police manhandled several strikers, but no one else suffered a scratch.

A new barrage of injunctions against unions and strikers in all sections of the country.

The state of Arkansas, proposing to pass a law under which the mere possession of a radical book or pamphlet by an individual would subject him to a long term in jail, and its possession by a school such as Commonwealth Labor College would mean its dissolution.

Bills in state legislatures requiring teachers and even students to take "oaths of loyalty".
Bills in Congress to finger print everybody. Bills to deport aliens.

Private organizations such as the American Legion and the Elks openly organizing vast propaganda campaigns against all progressive and radical ideas, and secretly organizing vigilante squads.

Against whom and what is this widespread campaign of terror and red-baiting aimed?

Against individuals and organizations which have revolutionary aims and carry on revolutionary activities? Only in a secondary sense; and any radical party which encourages the notion, as the C. P. tends to do, that it by itself is the sole or chief object of this attack, is playing straight into the hands of the reactionaries.

The trade union movement is the object of the present campaign of the reactionaries. They are determined to smash the unions if possible and in any event to keep them from getting a foothold in the basic industries.

The attack is aimed at the entire working class, at the farmers, at the professional and technical workers, at the small business people.

Why has the attack upon the unions, upon all forms of progressivism and radicalism, broken out just now?

First of all, the New Deal now stands forth in all its nakedness. The masses see that it is not a way of salvation for them. It has, for the moment, saved and strengthened monopoly capitalism. Corporation profits have grown under Roosevelt, friend of "the forgotten man". But in this period of capitalist development profits can be maintained only by forcing down the standards of the masses. Thus Roosevelt himself now leads a new drive to force the unemployed to work for an average of eleven dollars a week. How can the rebellion of the masses, of the unions, of the unemployed leagues, be kept down? Make it appear that it is unpatriotic to offer resistance, that only "reds", foreigners, agents of enemy powers, are inspiring opposition to the slave wage standards.

Thus the Roosevelt Administration itself, since it will not fight big capital on behalf of a higher standard for the workers, is chiefly responsible for the present anti-union terror campaign, despite its liberal professions and despite the fact that it may be "embarrassed" by some of the cruder attempts to put down labor rebellion.

In the second place, the international situation is tense. Stick a pin into the map at random almost anywhere and you are likely to hit a spot where war may soon break out. The masses must be psychologized and terrorized into submission to war-plans. They must not be permitted to stop the schemes of the war-mongers for making profits out of the manufacture of battleships and munitions. But the masses don't want war and they don't care to help the munitions makers coin profits. What is the answer? Again, obviously, put the "red" or the "foreign" label on any opposition to imperialist schemes.

Thirdly, a showdown is coming on the question of union recognition in the big industries. A new strike wave has begun. The leaders of the A. F. of L. themselves are compelled to mean that Roosevelt has betrayed them, though the next moment they fondly embrace him. How stop the organizing work in the basic industries? How prevent strikes? How smash strikes when they break out?

Vigorous organizing work and the strike struggles without which the workers in the basic industries cannot get strong and militant unions will be carried out only by the progressive, fighting elements in the unions. Pin the red label on every progressive and militant, therefore. Try to prejudice the workers against them. Isolate the militants from the masses. This is the game of the wage-cutters who are trying to force the workers into complete slavery.

How combat the capitalists' attack and thwart their schemes? The best defense is a strong offensive.

Build the unions in every trade and industry!

Build the left-progressive movement in the unions, since only thus can the unions themselves be built! Build the Unemployed Leagues! Bind the unions and the leagues closely together!

Strike and demonstrate militantly—against wage cuts, for wage increases, for the 30-hour week, for the right to organize!

Build a great nation-wide Non-Partisan Labor Defense movement which will tell the boss class in unmistakable terms to keep its hands off militant workers.

Build the revolutionary party of the workers! For in the showdown there is no alternative but to let the capitalist reaction establish Fascism or for the workers to take power and build a new world.

There is where help is needed and where help counts.

The answer to Hearst, the answer to the war-mongers, the answer to the Roosevelt wage-cutting campaign, is organization in steel, rubber, automobiles, textiles, the onward movement of the organized masses of the workers!

BUILD THE REVOLUTIONARY PARTY OF THE WORKERS!

Elevator Strike History In Newspaper Headlines

NEW YORK. — The elevator strike has been postponed—this is the latest news, and has been the latest news for the last three months. A short history of local 32B of the Building Service Workers International Union is given in the headlines:

Oct. 17—Tie Up Threatens Garment Center.

Oct. 27—Walkout Looms.

Nov. 1—Strike Plans Put Off.

Nov. 2—Strike Called in Garment Center.

Nov. 3—Strike Called Off Under Pact.

Nov. 4—Strike Planned in Financial and Home Zones.

Nov. 6—Strike Threatened in Hotels.

Nov. 9—Strike in Garment Area Postponed.

Nov. 13—Strike Likely in Garment Area.

Nov. 14—Strike Again Postponed.

Nov. 15—Strike Threat in Commercial and Apartment Buildings.

Nov. 19—Sudden Strike Call Expected.

Nov. 20—Mayor LaGuardia (the friend of labor) Bars Strike.

Nov. 21—Arbitration Pact Signed (it was not signed by the union)

Dec. 29—Hambrick Threatens Strike.

Jan. 9—Strike Held Near.

Feb. 14—3,000 Out On "Unauthorized" Strike.

Feb. 15—City Wide Strike Planned.

Feb. 16—City Wide Strike Voted Over Hambrick's Protest.

Feb. 17—Ed. McGrady arrives from Washington to Arbitrate!

Feb. 18—Elevator Strike Set for 10:30 A.M. in 1,000 Buildings.

Feb. 19—City Wide Strike Called Off After All Night Conference.

Feb. 20—Six Months Truce Signed.

Feb. 22—Call For Walkout Monday Expected.

Feb. 25—Walkout Postponed When NLRB Intervenes.

What can be said of this history? The constant use of the strike threat serves one purpose, it helps keep the union in the public eye and gives an impetus to organization.

But! The same constant threat, keeping the workers at a high pitch of expectancy, can have the most destructive reaction, unless the threat is actually carried out. There is a certain point beyond which the enthusiasm of the workers turns cold, and they quit the union, if it remains inactive, as rapidly as they joined it.

That time has come!

so far ineffective program of "spending our way back to prosperity".

The lunatic policies of A.A.A.—crop curtailment, plowing under, driving share croppers from the soil—will be continued. The Department of Agriculture, it would seem, is slowly coming to realize that the drought of 1934 is driving up prices to the point where it may be expedient to desist from continuing wanton destruction. But what the Department's experts may think will have little effect upon the President and his inspired advisers. They are still in the grip of the "overproduction" fallacy; to induce revival you must starve wage earners and pay the farmers for performing the task. The policy has the added merit of driving a wedge between the interests of farmers and workers who might otherwise come together for revolutionary action.

Foreign trade? A few more treaties of negligible import; but complete neglect of one vast market—Russia—where big scale transactions might be carried on. Banking? Increased centralization of credit in the hand of a government-dominated Federal Reserve Board to the end that monopoly finance capitalism may function with fewer restraints. Military affairs? More, bigger and costlier battleships with an eye to imperialistic war in the near future with Japan.

But at least the Brain Trust is henceforth out of the picture. That is something the President will no longer be able to pretend that he acts on inspirations which come to him from on high.

severest grilling. Mini revealed that, while the Communist Party did not train him for the practical class struggle, his self-obtained socialist education is not deficient.

The perspectives are admittedly poor. A prejudiced jury; a judge in league with a venomous prosecution; the ill-advised tactics of the I.L.D.; the lack of a mass protest movement, glaringly revealed by the complete failure of the C.P. "united front" conference held in San Francisco on February 10, justifying little optimism as to the outcome.

No serious turn in the situation can be expected during the next week or two. Were a verdict to be given today, there is little doubt that it would be against all the defendants. Should sufficient protests come in from outside the state, things may brighten up a bit.

Whatever happens, the working class can be sure that in Norman Mini, it has an incorruptible advocate. We must do everything in our power to prevent him and his co-defendants from being railroaded. Should they go to San Quentin, it will be the duty of the working class to launch a great fight for their freedom.

Asked whether he had ever heard of a thrifty class, Mini answered that he had—"in connection with bank failures".

McAllister made repeated but vain endeavors to get Mini to state that he favored having the workers seize industries or banks in advance of the revolution. Under the leer of satisfaction, a vulture sensing a meal in the offing, Red Hynes, (beefy Los Angeles Red Squad captain) could not contain his glee. Sam Darcy rubbed his chin contemptuously. By all odds this "stool pigeon" was a very strange bird!

Mini's testimony opened with a brief outline of his life story. Born in Sacramento, he went to the public schools and was a member of the National Guard. He won an appointment to West Point in a competitive examination but was expelled for anti-militaristic views which he developed through study while at West Point.

"Last summer you told me that while you were at West Point you were ashamed of your parents. Will you explain that?" ask McAllister.

"Sure," answered Mini. "They are ordinary workers and the propaganda the officers fed me at West Point made me think that workers are scum; so sometimes I felt ashamed of my father and mother, but now I know better and I am proud to be the son of a proletarian!"

Was Active In Strike
Expelled from West Point, he sought a job in New York, where he experienced life on the breadline. He then returned to Sacramento, wrote a novel satirizing military life and studied the socialist classics. After witnessing several instances of police brutality against unemployed demonstrators, he joined the Communist Party early in 1933. He was assigned to no work, but managed to go to Chow-chilla, and there helped to organize a successful farmers' strike against the Pacific Gas and Electric Co.

In responding to questions which were in reality thinly-disguised stump speeches on behalf of the glories of private property, rugged individualism and a system "which enabled Charles M. Schwab to climb from the bottom of the ladder to the top", Mini pointed out that there had BEEN great developments under capitalism, but that the system has entered the stage of decay. "There must be an overturn or a collapse into chaos," he added, "and only the proletariat can save human civilization."

Asked whether he had ever heard of a thrifty class, Mini answered that he had—"in connection with bank failures".

McAllister made repeated but vain endeavors to get Mini to state that he favored having the workers seize industries or banks in advance of the revolution. Under the information and misinformation as to the views of the defendants with respect to religion, racial questions and other matters not directly connected with the indictment. But he now ruled that Goldman could not ask Mini questions relating to the same matters.

Even where Goldman endeavored to ask Mini questions concerning his understanding of revolutionary principles connected directly with the matters in the indictment, McAllister interposed objections at every point. These objections, combined with the judge's rulings, constituted a steady barrage of interruptions so that for the most part Mini's voice came to the jury through a din of competing remarks.

Not until Goldman turned the witness over to McAllister did Mini really get a chance to voice his views. The judge now loosened up again, letting McAllister go into subjects which he had closed to Goldman. Lemmon's entire attitude during these two days has completely given the lie to his earlier laborious endeavors to appear as the embodiment of perfect justice.

Perhaps the tensest moment of Norman Mini's day in court was just after he frankly stated that, at the time of his arrest and down to some time in November 1934, he had been a member of the Communist Party.

Mini Risks Contempt
"Who were the other members of your unit?" asked McAllister.

"I won't tell you," came the firm reply.

"Why not?"

"Because it's none of your business!"

Attorneys and court attaches, aware that Mini had put himself in contempt of court, gaped. The judge was visibly embarrassed, as he apparently would not have related the publicity and protests which would have resulted, had he edited this young revolutionary for contempt. He intervened with a remark designed to save his own face:

"Suppose I put the question this way," he said. "Were any of the defendants in your unit?"

Norman Mini slowly turned his gaze from one to another of the defendants with whom he has stood solid against the state all these trying months. "No," he answered.

Another tense moment came with the conclusion of the cross-examination. McAllister sneeringly put the following question:

Would Try Capitalists
"And would the Sacramento workers council give a trial to those capitalists who refused to accept the new government and fought to defend their property?"

"It would," answered Mini.

Raising his voice to a shout and waving his finger in the air, McAllister threw out a final remark as he took his seat:

"They don't give trials in Russia!"

Judge Lemmon felt obliged to label this crude remark "misconduct" and to order it stricken from the record, the theory being that the jurors would also be able to strike the remark from their minds. Not believing in magic of this kind, Attorney Goldman was on his feet at once:

"Your Honor, the improper remark has been made and on behalf of the defendant Mini, I ask that he be permitted to give his answer. He is ready to state what he thinks about the question of trials in the Soviet Union."

"I have ruled," said Judge Lemmon.

Affirms Marxist Position
The major portion of Mini's testimony, especially under cross-examination, was devoted to an explanation of the Marxist-Leninist idea of revolution. He explained to the jury, in simple terms the concepts of the vanguard party; struggles for immediate demands; the culmination of partial struggles in a general struggle; the conditions under which a successful revolution might occur; the role of workers' councils; the idea of workers' control of production; the crisis of the paralysis of capitalist state power; the seizure of power by the workers' councils in the name of the majority of the people; the taking over of all state functions by these councils; the proclamation of the new order; the promulgation of its first laws respecting the expropriation of the means of production, transportation and communication; the defense of the proletarian state against sabotage and open counter-revolution; the role of force in securing the will of the people against the will of the exploiters and in defending the conquests of the only progressive class in society, the proletarian class.

"What will you do if a majority objects?" demanded McAllister.

"The revolutionary party will not consider the time ripe as long as a majority objects," replied Mini.

"But suppose a majority of capitalist objects, that is of property?"

"Oh! You mean the three percent of the population who own eighty-three percent of the wealth?" Mini shot back.

"That's right," said McAllister. "their places," answered Mini.

People Versus Property
"We'll just have to put them in 'Suppose they refuse to submit. Suppose they won't turn over their property?"

"The workers' councils will use all the necessary force to carry out the law of the workers' state," answered Mini.

"Suppose the Board of Directors of the Sacramento Telephone Co. meets and informs the workers' council that it refuses to turn over the property?"

"That's a hypothetical telephone company," Mini answered. "The Sacramento Telephone Co. is run by a board that meets in Wall St. and never saw Sacramento."

"Well, suppose the local manager refuses to get out?"

"He won't refuse!" answered Mini.

"How do you know?" asked Mc-

Allister.

"Well, he will have heard what's going on and he'll be on a boat going places fast."

"Now what do you mean," asked McAllister, "when you say you will use force if necessary? Do you mean like a bank robber who wants to steal the money but won't shoot unless somebody tries to stop him?"

At this point Leo Gallagher leaped to his feet, to object to the question. Attorney Goldman, who has throughout the long weeks of the trial striven to steer the defense fight along principled and effective lines, informed the judge that Mini would not object to answering the question. Gallagher mumbled more objections, but Mini went ahead as follows:

"The bank robber, like any other capitalist, is engaging in an individual act for his own benefit. The proletarian movement has nothing in common with his method or his goal. We use force if necessary to enable the vast majority of the people to take back from a tiny minority the property which that minority has stolen, and to make it available for the benefit of all mankind, so that the race may advance and develop itself and terminate a condition in which millions starve while a few live in luxury."

Differs With C. P.
An interesting light was cast upon those conditions inside the C. P. which result in the political backwardness of even its most devoted militants. It was lack of education which caused, for example, the foolishly gesture Mini made last August, when he gave McAllister an open statement of his beliefs and affiliation.

He disclosed that he had never read a single Communist Party pamphlet or Communist International document until after the indictment!

Before Mini stepped down from the witness stand, he had made it plain that the beliefs he was expounding he had acquired from the writings of Marx, Engels and Lenin, before he joined the Communist Party.

"When I studied the C. P. documents, I began to understand that I differed and eventually I got out."

McAllister now took up the program of the Communist International, adopted by the Sixth Congress of the Comintern. From it he read the last paragraph:

"The Communists disdain to conceal their views and aims. They openly declare that their ends can be attained only by the forcible overthrow of all existing social conditions. Let the ruling class tremble at a Communist revolution. The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win. Workingmen of all countries, unite!"

Is this the part of the program you disagree with?" McAllister asks.

"Why no," answered Mini; "that's the part I agree with. That's right out of the Communist Manifesto by Marx and Engels!"

Mini added that the C. P. appears to regard a revolution as an earthquake, to be predicted rather than as an historical occurrence realizable under certain conditions if human beings act properly. He affirmed the necessity of "an active preparation by the conscious elements" for every aspect of the struggle.

McAllister turned away with a leer of satisfaction, a vulture sensing a meal in the offing, Red Hynes, (beefy Los Angeles Red Squad captain) could not contain his glee. Sam Darcy rubbed his chin contemptuously. By all odds this "stool pigeon" was a very strange bird!

The Child Labor Amendment was his chief topic, and the "Southern gentleman" got blue in the face denouncing it—"It is hard to trace a difference between this suggestion and the extremist decrees of Bolshevism under Lenin, which destroyed the integrity of the family and made children the wards of the State," declared the Governor.

Our Hope and Strength

"Roosevelt is our hope and strength," says President Bill Green of the A. F. of L. Dan Tobin of the Teamsters Union presents Jim Farley with a check of $10,000 "as a mark of appreciation of what the Roosevelt administration has done for labor." President Roosevelt's new relief scheme calls for wage cuts and provides a maximum of $30 per month per family. "Gawd, what 'ope and strength!"—Bill Reich.

Arms Control & League of Nations

The Arms Traffic Committee of the League of Nations was holding one of those endless discussions on arms. Article 2 of the American draft was the subject. A Fascist admiral said that Italy prefers the 1925 convention because it "provides for the suspension of all of its few restrictions in war time." Mr. Wilson for the U. S. "stressed the moral importance of the question." He held that "birth certificates should be given for cannons just as for men." The French delegate thought the birth certificates should go into "the pre-natal stage." A British Lord thought such certificates required too many statistics. So the question of "birth control" for arms versus "birth certificates" was debated. Nothing was settled, no conclusions reached, and the League of Nations called it a day. —Reviewing the Crisis, 1929-35, by M. L.

CAPITOL NEWS LETTER

By JACK ELDER
WASHINGTON.—Judge Nields' decision in the Weirton case put the finishing touch to the National Run Around to which the iron and steel workers have been subjected ever since the summer of 1933. Section 7a, the DuPont henchman discovered, was not constitutional. Congress has the power to regulate "interstate commerce". But the manufacture of iron and steel does not involve "interstate commerce". Thus although the iron and steel employers are free to make whatever use they can of the monopoly features of the code—price fixing, basing points, production quotas—they are exempt from the force of the collective bargaining requirements.

At the same time, the court ruled, it was an outrage to maintain that H. T. Weir has "imposed" the company union upon his employees. They participate in the company union of their own free will. It is an ideal little device, all within the family, for settling grievances and getting justice done. Even if Section 7a were constitutional, the labor boards have no right to annoy this good and benevolent employer. The language of the decision is a beautiful illustration of how class loyalties and class interests determine the supposed logic of the law. To say that workers and employers have interests at variance, the learned judge advances, is to accept "Old World" ideas, non-American and outworn. The interests of bosses and wage slaves are as one. Instead of fighting one another, they should co-operate and collaborate. Out with the trade union, therefore and long live the company union. Unfortunately for the judge, you can't get rid of class war by announcing, judicially, that there "ain't no such animal".

THE LABOR DISPUTES BILL.
Senator Wagner, it is said, is prepared to reintroduce the Labor Disputes bill which failed to come to a vote in the last session of Congress. The bill has the support of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats who would much rather trust to labor boards than to militant labor action. It lacks the support of the President, who wants the labor boards to be strike-breaking agencies pure and simple, rather than to lay down the law of collective bargaining to big business.

The chances of Congress' enacting the bill are slim, unless a new upsurge of strikes smashes the whole apparatus of labor boards. In that event, the bill will probably go through, subject to major modifications. These modifications will probably limit the right to strike and require compulsory arbitration. So far as concerns labor, it is a case of heads you win, tails I lose.

WHAT SOCIALISM WOULD DO
Joseph B. Eastman, Federal Coordinator of Transportation, has just put forward various proposals intended to "rationalize" the American railway system. If put into effect, these proposals would reduce still further the number of workers attached to the railroad industry.

In a truly socialized economy, it would no doubt be wise to remove surplus workers from the railroad industry and to transfer them to other regions, occupations, and trades. Under capitalism, however, you can't get much further than the original disattachments: the workers lose their jobs, use up their "dismissal wages", and sink back into the industrial reserve army of the unemployed.

James Rorty Ouster Goes To Congress

Conditions among the agricultural slaves in the Imperial Valley of California will be brought before Congress, as the result of the arrest on suspicion of communistic activities and ejection from the valley of James Rorty, newspaper and magazine writer, last week. Rorty has been summoned to appear March 13 before the House Labor Committee, as the second witness in the hearings on the Wagner labor disputes bill.

Tentative plans to bring suit against Sheriff Ware of Imperial Valley for false arrest, on Rorty's behalf, are being made by the Los Angeles American Civil Liberties Union.

Arrested and "deported" with Rorty was Charles Malemuth, lecturer. Rorty is making a trip through the country, reporting on conditions to the New York Post and the Nation. His business in El Centro, where he was arrested, was journalistic. The fact that his sympathies are communistic and that he had in his possession a letter from Arne Swaback (industrial organizer for the Workers Party) on Communist League of America stationery and addressed to "Comrade Rorty", was beside the point, Rorty stated to Sheriff Ware.

Arrested without warrant, fingerprinted, "mugged", Rorty and Malemuth were held in jail at El Centro overnight on suspicion of being Communists, then were informed no charges would be filed against them if they left the Imperial Valley. Rorty and Malemuth agreed to accept a police escort to Yuma, Arizona, just over the California border, as they recognized the real danger of attack by vigilantes. Later Sheriff Ware wrote to the New York Post, in answer to inquiries about the arrest of Rorty: "If you fellows in New York would check up on these enemies of our government as we do here, the country might get somewhere."

It is doubtful whether Congress will do anything more than "investigate" in the usual hopeless manner the bloody poeponage in this American valley. General Pelham D. Glassford (of the bonus army fame) has already made a report as investigator for the U.S. Labor Department, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and the National Labor Board in which he exposes the boss alliance, the corrupt political machine, and the violence exerted to keep its slave labor subjected. The government knows and has known about Imperial Valley for a long time.

WIN 624 PERCENT RAISE IN WAGE-RELIEF WAGE

DECATUR, Ill. (FP)—Instead of 40c an hour tufting mattresses, workers on this Decatur relief project are now getting 65c, a boost of 624%. The Decatur Trades and Labor Assembly and Local 46 of the Illinois Workers Alliance got the relief authorities to come across, on the prevailing wage regulation. Unskilled mattress workers were raised to 50c an hour.

BOSS PRESS SUBSIDIZED

Advertisers subsidized the daily newspapers of the United States to the extent of $490,000,000 in 1934, according to lineage estimates by a recognized trade journal. Using 1929 advertising expenditures in daily papers as normal, the estimate for 1934 makes the $490,000,000 as 62.1 percent of normal while 1933 was 56.2 percent and 1932 was 61.4 percent.—Federated Press.

State League Formed in Kentucky

Johnson Urges Fight for Harlan Miners

CATLETTSBURG, KY.—The solidarity of the unemployed with the employed—Negro and white—was the keynote of the first convention of the Kentucky Unemployed Leagues held here Feb. 22.

G. D. Hayes, president of the Kentucky Leagues, pointed out that only the solidarity of all workers—irrespective of race, color, or creed—can win any rights for the unemployed. He said that in September 1934 the average relief per family in Kentucky was $7.74 for the entire month, making it the second worst state in the country in regard to relief standards.

Civil Liberties Union Charges C. P. with Disrupting Sacramento Defense

Following right on the heels of the statement adopted by the State Executive Committee of the Socialist Party in California on the disruptive conduct of the Communist Party in the Sacramento case united front, a meeting of the National Executive Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union on Monday, March 4, unanimously adopted the declaration of the Northern California Committee of the A.C.L.U. which deals with the breaking up of the united front on the West coast, and charges that "the Communist Party representatives forced the break deliberately, for reasons that to them seemed good, but that to most of the others present continue to appear inadequate".

Charges Against C. P. Confirmed

Like the statement of the Socialist Party quoted in last week's issue of the New Militant, the Civil Liberties Union statement furnishes complete confirmation, from objective and non-partisan sources, of the policy, the conduct, and the charges leveled against the Stalinists by the Workers Party and the Non-Partisan Labor Defense Committee, which have been active in the united front movement to defend the labor leaders and workers now being tried in Sacramento for "criminal syndicalism".

In frenzied desperation at the discrediting of its disgraceful course throughout the Sacramento case, the C. P. officialdom is now striving to cover up its record with a poisonous barrage against the "Workers Party stool-pigeons" and the "Trotskyist disruption".

The record depth of ignominy is reached in a statement published in the Daily Worker of March 5 which, like the rest of the "defense work" of the C. P. and the I.L.D., is concerned from beginning to end with a vicious attack upon the Workers Party and the Non-Partisan Labor Defense Committee. The Stalinist case is not improved but rather made more despicable by the fact that the C. P. was able to coerce or cajole all but two of the defendants into signing a statement which can only react to the detriment of the labor movement in general and of the Sacramento defense in particular.

The Facts
To dignify the malicious accusations made in the statement by a detailed refutation, would only mean to cover the same ground which has already been covered so thoroughly and indisputably in the New Militant in the past. No amount of demagogic misrepresentation and outright falsehood can obliterate the following facts:

1. For months the C. P. and the I.L.D. failed to launch even the semblance of a campaign for the Sacramento defense cases.
2. For months, the "powerful" and well-fixed C. P. and I.L.D. failed to get the defendants out on bail.
3. For months, the C. P. and I.L.D. officialdom kept a number of leading defendants in jail because of political differences between the former and the latter, and in spite of the fact that the former had the financial means at its disposal to effect their release on bail.
4. The C. P. authorized Jack Warnick and Caroline Decker, two of its members, to accept bail bonds for their release offered by what they now denounce as the "treacherous and disruptive" Non-Partisan Labor Defense, after having first instructed them not to accept "counter-revolutionary" bail!
5. The most active initiators

Statements Say Break Was Deliberate

STATEMENT OF AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

On Monday, March 4, 1935, the National Executive Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union adopted the following statement on the Sacramento criminal syndicalism case:

"In view of the fact that the defendants at Sacramento include members of both the Communist and Workers Parties, it seemed advisable to set up something like a 'united front' to handle common problems and to obviate the danger of political differences getting in the way of successful defense. A joint defense committee, growing out of meetings held from January 11 on, was in existence until January 26. The chairman of the Northern California Committee of the A.C.L.U. presided at the first informal discussions; later the Director of the A.C.L.U. was elected Temporary Chairman of the joint committee.

"The committee broke up on January 26. It is the opinion of the A.C.L.U. representatives that the Communist Party representatives forced the break deliberately, for reasons that to them seemed good, but that to most of the others present continue to appear inadequate. "The A.C.L.U. has refused to participate organizationally in any further efforts to create 'united fronts' on the case."

STATEMENT BY TRAVERS CLEMENT IN THE NATION

In the issue of March 13, the Nation will say in an article by the noted California author, Travers Clement:

"That it (the explanation of the revolutionary program in court) is not intellectually an insurmountable handicap was proved during the cross-examination of Mini, the first defendant to take the stand in his own behalf. Without hedging an inch on his convictions, he quietly deflated the 'red terror' fantasies of the prosecutor in a manner which won chuckles of appreciation from the spectators. The other defendants, occupying a somewhat less exposed position on this subject, than a Trotskyist, should be able to handle the clumsy McAllister with even less difficulty.

Green in Detroit Surveys His Ruin of Auto Union

Try Another Board, He Cries

By OUR DETROIT CORRESPONDENT
DETROIT, Mich.—Bill Green has come to Detroit, and has gone—and the situation remains just about what it was before he came. The speech of the A. F. of L. in his speech Feb. 25, was to be the big gun in the month-long campaign of the United Automobile Workers of America. But the heavy artillery turned out to be a pop-gun as far as the auto workers are concerned, and nothing for the bosses to lose sleep over.

Any possible fears of the auto autocrats that Green, smarting under the rough treatment Roosevelt has been giving him recently, would preach strike action, were completely allayed. When he finally got around to mentioning strike, he spoke of it not as the only weapon to obtain better conditions, but as a means to be used "if necessary". And after what the workers have put up with under the NRA, they have some idea of how remote such "necessity" is to Bill Green's comfortable existence.

Bill's "Wisdom"
So satisfactory was Green's speech to the manufacturers, that their mouthpiece, the local press, ran long editorials praising Bill for his "wisdom" and "good judgment".

To the 150,000 or more auto workers in the Detroit area, suffering from the most intense exploitation in the history of modern American industry, he advised faith and confidence, not in their mass power, but in the National Industrial Relations Board. For, you see, the Auto Labor Board has betrayed the hope we placed in it—so now let's put our faith in another board!

The 2,000 men at the meeting heard the same old class-collaborationist tune—identity of the interests of workers and capitalists, arbitration and faith in the NRA. He came, he said, not to indict the auto bosses but to plead for fair play and humane consideration for the workers!

Does Green—many of his disgusted listeners wondered—actually believe that by raising the bogey of the strike "if necessary", "at some future date", he can scare the bosses into making some concessions through an "impartial" board?

A. F. of L. Weak in Detroit
To the manufacturers this is old bluff. They know Green is playing their game by supporting the Auto Code with its open-shop, merit-clause and company-union provisions, and the whole NRA machinery of arbitration.

They know further that the A. F. of L. is numerically weak here and that its half-hearted organizational campaign has met with little response. They have seen how in the strikes in Lansing and at the Murray Body Plant the A. F. of L. has not attempted to use this opportunity to develop militant widespread struggles. All in all, the bosses know they have nothing to fear from the A. F. of L. at this time.

As for the workers, their honey-moon with the Auto Labor Board is coming to an abrupt and disillusioning conclusion. Led on to accept the A.L.B. as the means whereby their wrongs would be redressed, since their representatives chosen in the recent A.L.B. elections are finding it impossible to adjust their grievances satisfactorily through the board or in direct negotiations with the bosses, they are coming to the realization that organization is the only way out.

Workers Waking Up

The men whom they represent are beginning to realize this, too. This realization, though still vague, is growing. How fast it will grow, whether it will emerge as an independent force or flow into the existing unions, is not yet evident. It is significant, however, that the A. F. of L. campaign has left these workers cold. They apparently do not think much of Green's suggestion that they exchange one board for another. The failure of the A.

HUEY LONG WORKS HOSPITAL AIDS FOR 'KICKBACK'

NEW ORLEANS.—Charity hospital workers will have 5 percent taken out of their semi-monthly salaries for the rest of the year to provide Huey Long's organization with funds for the 1936 gubernatorial campaign.

The 5 percent kickback has been in effect for a month or so, and the workers thought that it was only a temporary levy. Members of the political administration, however, have informed them that it will continue at least through January 1936, when the gubernatorial campaigns held. About $600 a month is obtained by the Long machine in this way.

Strategic Labor Attack Triumphs

Waukegan Office Workers Stand by Mechanics

WAUKEGAN, Ill.—Solidarity of auto and mechanical workers, rapid and well timed action, won a strike for four hundred workers at the Johnson Motors plant in Waukegan last week in short order. The strike marks the culmination of the second effort within a year to organize the workers in a Federal Auto Local. The first attempt was defeated when the company formed its own union and killed strike spirit with fancy promises. This time the union was well under way before the company woke up and fired three members for union activity.

A strike meeting was called immediately, 85 workers attending. By prompt and militant action they

Building Union Leads Toledo FERA Strike

Special to New Militant

TOLEDO, Ohio, March 2.—Significant action was taken here today by the Building Trades Council, attached to the A. F. of L. Central Labor Union, with the calling of an FERA strike in Lucas county and the setting up of a general FERA organization, sponsored by the unions but not affiliated with the A. F. of L. This means that the B.T.C. is accepting leadership in a strike of non-union as well as union workers, of unemployed as well as employed.

The importance of this unusual move by an A. F. of L. body is seen in a statement by Oliver Meyers, secretary of the Toledo Building Trades Council and business representative of the electricians' union, as quoted in the Toledo Blade, that "by appealing to both the Ohio Federation of Labor and the A. F. of L. for support, it was entirely possible that the strike would become not only state-wide, but also national in its scope."

Character of Organization

The first meeting of the new FERA organization, which is to include all FERA workers, outside and office workers, was held today at C.L.U. headquarters, with approximately 500 in attendance. The majority were unorganized and unskilled workers. The meeting was conducted by the business agents of the B.T.C., with Meyers as secretary. Demands for better wages to FERA workers and plans for a joint strike committee of the B.T.C. and the FERA organization, and the official strike call, were agreed upon by the meeting.

Up to this time, the strike on FERA projects which has been in progress was called a "protest" against the budget system of relief, by the B.T.C., and officially only union men were out. The change in the attitude of the union is clear.

W.P. and O.U.L. Active

The Workers Party and the Ohio and National Unemployed Leagues have been active in the setting up of the new organization and the calling of the general FERA strike. Several of the most significant demands made by today's meeting, including the official call for the strike, were based on proposals made by Art Preis, of the Ohio Unemployed League, in his talk at the meeting.

There is also a common understanding, made by Meyers in response to a question from Comrade Preis, that there will be unofficial representation from the new organization upon the Building Trades Council. Comrade Preis was invited to attend a meeting of the B.T.C. motions adopted.

Motions Adopted

The following motions were adopted by the meeting:

1. That demands be made for a minimum of three eight-hour days of work on FERA for skilled workers at prevailing union rates.
2. That semi-skilled and office workers shall receive a minimum of 80 cents an hour and not less than $20 per week.
3. That common labor shall receive a minimum of 85 cents an hour with four eight-hour days minimum of work per week.
4. That the assembly go on record for an FERA organization open to all workers not members of trade unions, to be a no-dues payment organization.
5. That no organization, including the new organization, goes back on the job under separate agreement unless all go back on the job.
6. That a joint strike committee

But Profits Soar Gov't Board Says

WASHINGTON.—The NRA, by official administration figures, has served to increase capitalists' profits and lower workers' living standards. The recent report by the Division of Research and Planning on the "Operation of the NRA" blows to bits the fantastic pretense that the NRA codes have acted to transfer purchasing power from the capitalists, the haves, to the workers, the have-nots.

So damning is the evidence uncovered by investigators working on the report that the whole intent of the NRA—as announced originally—is twisted to make an apology for the results. The codes, we now learn, were by no means intended to augment the wages and shorten the hours of wage earners in general.

On the contrary, explains this rationalization, they had modest objectives, and "have probably" helped those whom they were especially designed to help; namely, those whose real incomes were already pitifully low, e.g. female laborers in the south. In other words, it is affirmed that "laborers getting less than $10 a week had their weekly earnings raised substantially."

Higher Wages?

Perhaps this is true, though the argument is open to considerable question when we examine the most important industry which employs "female laborers" in the south—the cotton textile industry. We find that since the enactment of the code average weekly earnings and real purchasing power have both decreased!

True or false, the argument indicates the ingenuity of the "new deal" apologists when their own investigations drive them into a tight corner. When the NRA codes were first put into force it was pretended that their animating purpose was to augment the purchasing power of the wage-earning classes as a whole. This "purpose" is not accomplished. The Division of Research and Planning becomes aware of the failure. It advances a totally new argument—the NRA was designed to augment the purchasing power of an infinitesimal fraction of the total laboring population!

Share-the-Starvation

The extent of the NRA's failure to raise real wages and thus increase purchasing power is revealed in the figures.

First, we are told of an "increase in the spread between production and employment", which indicates an acceleration of share-the-work. The volume of production in the manufacturing industries, December 1934 was a full 20 percent lower than the volume in June 1933. But the index of employment has risen by 16 percent. In other words, a larger number of workers is consuming a smaller aggregate of goods and services. Share-the-work equals share-the-increasing-starvation.

But receivers of dividends and interest have nothing to worry about. For them, at least, the "new deal" has proved a blessing. Taking 1926 as 100, payrolls in December 1934 stood at an index of 60, while dividends and interest stood at 150. The national income, within eight years, had declined almost by half; the wage earners' share therein had been cut 40 percent, the capitalists' share had been raised by 50 percent.

Bosses Share-the-Profits

How gently and tactfully the report puts it by stating: "Clearly the recipients of profits have not failed to enjoy their proportionate share of the increase in industrial recovery!"

A few details will make clear what the report has in mind. Some 300 corporations, which had net profits of $100,000 in 1932, had net profits of $202,800,000 in 1933—a rise of almost 2,000 percent—and net profits, in 1934 of $430,540,000—a total rise of about 4,500 percent. The automobile companies, which lost almost $20,000,000 in 1932, gained $86,000,000 in 1934. The steel companies, which lost $100,000,000 in 1933, cut the loss to $7,000,000 in 1934. Coal and coke, which lost almost $4,000,000 in 1934, gained almost $1,000,000 in 1934. The oil companies doubled their profits; so did the chemical and drug companies.

Meanwhile, what was happening to wage-earners? The National Emergency Council figures, most

Choice of Name Biggest Achievement of S.P. Unemployed Meet

"A Socialist Party Congress" Protests Virginia Delegate

By Special Correspondent

On March 2 to 4 about 120 people met in Washington and gave a good illustration of how not to build a fighting national unemployed organization. Delegate Bernstein from Richmond, Va., himself a member of the Socialist Party, correctly characterized the procedure when he said on the floor:

"It seems to me that I have attended the finest Socialist Party convention that I ever heard of. We came here for a non-partisan convention. Most of the people in Virginia are Democrats."

It was plainly evident that the leaders of the convention were interested chiefly in setting up an organization that could be safely controlled by Lasser of the Workers Unemployed Union of New York, Rasmussen of the Illinois Workers Alliance, Trager of the Peoples Unemployed League of Maryland, Lieberman of the Unemployed Citizens League of Pittsburgh and Benson of the Florida Federation of Unemployed Leagues.

The Illinois Workers Alliance, a genuine unemployed organization with over 100 functioning locals and a large membership was put on the same level with the insignificant Florida Federation of Unemployed Leagues. Illinois had 16 votes and Florida had 15. The 15 Florida votes were cast by one man, Benson. Indiana cast 12 votes despite the fact that the delegate reporting for that state admitted that it had only a few leagues and only "between four and five thousand members."

Benjamin Approves

According to the Daily Worker for March 4, Herbert Benjamin of the C.P. National Unemployment Councils, was the dominating figure at this S.P. convention and got a big ovation, "the only ovation given any speaker by an audience who heard among others, Norman Thomas, Socialist Party leader. Standing cheering, the delegates greeted Benjamin's impassioned plea for unity... with shouts of 'We'll fight for that.' They blocked the aisle, shaking Benjamin's hand... David Lasser... came by and told Benjamin, 'I think we are moving in the right direction at last.'"

So distorted and non-factual was the report that Benjamin the next day submitted a statement to the convention saying that he was sorry the Daily Worker had published such a report and that correction would be made.

Following out the new C.P. turn to the Right, Benjamin capitulated completely to the Lasser-Rasmussen-Trojan-Trager-Cook-Lieberman combination. He approved of the convention and told the delegates it was "a step in the right direction".

Rev. Myers Speaks

On Sunday afternoon the convention was addressed by James Myers, of the Federal Council of Churches. Rev. Myers made an appeal for the religion of Jesus and the prophets. There was applause when he said that "real religion believes in democracy." "Any economic system," said Myers, "that deprives a man of the right to work is immoral. We are an immortal nation."

There was a great deal of this sort of activity but it did not seem to strike the convention that it was necessary to put in time and energy on the real active problems that daily face unemployed organizations. There was a tendency—despite much talk about class consciousness—to make it appear that real good could be accomplished by talking to congressmen and the President's secretaries.

Selecting a Name

Much time was consumed on the selection of the name for the new organization. Workers Alliance of America was finally agreed on. There was strong sentiment against using the word "unemployed" in the name. Rasmussen said that "the name must be nation-wide, powerful, easy to symbolize and easy to go on a button."

The constitution provides that only organizations can become members of the W.A.A. They must not be affiliated with any other organization having the same purpose.

A resolution was adopted instructing the national executive board to call a conference—not later than three months away—of the executive committees of other national unemployed organizations to discuss procedure for merger and unity. The constitution empowers the N.E.B. to work for the amalgamation of all unemployed organizations and to sit in on conferences and conventions of unemployed organizations. The leaders of the convention were, in fact, forced by a storm of protest to withdraw a resolution which assumed that they were building the national organization of the unemployed.

N.C.L.'s Position On Convention
The National Unemployed League was invited to be a part of this convention but declined to participate on the ground that:

1. It was not to be a rank and file convention composed of delegates democratically elected by real and functioning unemployed organizations. 2. Basic units or "locals" of real unemployed organizations would not be given opportunity to elect delegates to the convention. 3. The convention set-up was manipulated from the top by Lasser, Rasmussen and other Socialist Party minor functionaries for the purpose of securing S. P. control of the organization when formed. 4. That the method of voting to be followed (fifteen to each state regardless of the number and size of its bona-fide unemployed organizations) would tend further to make the convention undemocratic and non-rank and file.

Anthony Hamuglia, president of the N.U.L. and E. R. McKinney, editor of Mass Action, organ of the N.U.L. were present at the convention. Hamuglia in his address assured the convention that the N.U.L. now as ever stands ready to participate loyally and enthusiastically in any movement to unify unemployed organizations on a sound basis, but would refuse to have any part in any sectarian attempt to impose an organization on the unemployed from the top.

N R A Speed-Up and Police Brutality Hit in St. Louis

Three Thousand in Mass Meeting

By Special Correspondent

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Goaded to the breaking point by the speed-up under the NRA and the union-smashing tactics of employers and police, workers in St. Louis finally made their protests heard in a mass meeting arranged by the Central Trades Council held in the new Civic Auditorium.

The immediate cause of the protest was a strike at the Forest City Mfg. Co., a garment-making plant where police escorted scabs from the A. A. Ahner Detective Agency through the picket lines, and even sent patrol wagons and police scout cars to the homes of the strikers, then arrested nine workers on the picket line, most of them young girls. Appearing in court several days later, four of the workers were charged with assault and battery! One of the girls so charged weighs 110 pounds.

The Usual Story

Behind this strike lies the usual NRA story of inhuman speed-ups in the garment industry. Last year the employers evaded the code by putting all work on a piece-work or "task" basis. In order to make the minimum wage of $13 a week a worker had to be very fast. Many girls, unable to stand up under the terrific strain, lost their jobs.

This system was all right in sick times. But when orders began coming in faster the bosses were faced with a labor shortage.

To reduce the "task" so that more girls could meet the minimum requirements, meant a loss of profits. Instead, a special group to be known as "privileged" workers was employed. These workers were not privileged, as a naive reader might suppose, to be paid the minimum wage whether they met the quota or not. They were "privileged" to work for less than the minimum of $13!

The Forest City firm not only violated the agreement it had reached with the workers in the strike in 1933, but it hired a nationally notorious strike-breaking agency, the A. A. Ahner Agency, sometimes known as the Industrial Research and Engineering Co.

Scab Agencies Work

Operatives of the scab agency were put into the plant. Loyal union girls were not even allowed to go to the washroom two at a time. They were threatened with loss of employment and even with physical violence for joining the I.L.G.W.U.

At last the conditions became so unendurable that a strike was called.

Green Views Auto Failure

F. of L. up to now to secure better conditions for the workers is not likely to inspire confidence.

The bosses are on the alert to try to crush any move toward organization. They are speeding up production to the utmost to get through the season before trouble can develop. Although there is sentiment for unionization and strike it is doubtful whether it can crystallize soon enough to produce widespread strike struggles in the present season.

What is needed in Detroit is a group of trade union militants who are not bound by a cut-and-dried formula, but approach the problems of the auto workers in a realistic fashion. Only such a group with a fighting class policy can lead the way to the formation of a powerful industrial union in the auto industry.

Fur Union Must Move Carefully for Unity; Cannon's Advice Still Holds

By Trade Union Dept. of W.P.

Unity of the Fur Workers of N. Y. in one organization seems assured. The conditions under which such unity will be achieved are another matter. The Industrial Union after a great deal of squabbling among the leaders, is now discussing openly with the membership the ways of accomplishing unity. This step, belated though it is, is a correct one.

Conditions in the fur trade are steadily worsening. Active, militant members of the Industrial Union, barred from the shops, are walking the streets. The chief task of the remnants of the Industrial Union is fighting the Industrial Union. The latter, isolated from the main body of needle workers, crippled by the fight with the International, its policies juggled back and forth with each shift in the "correct Stalinist line", is in no position to defend its membership against the attacks of the bosses. It is now forced, not by a correct appreciation of the condition and needs of the furriers, but by the hundred and eighty degree turn in the "general line", to come out for unity under the A. F. of L.

Proposals of Industrial Union
What does the Industrial Union, or rather its Stalinist leadership, propose? A leaflet issued by the Fur Workers Industrial Union and distributed in the market this week sets forth the following proposals:

1. "An open conference with the council, to build one union uniting the forces of the workers against the bosses and contractors for jobs, wages and conditions."

2. "An immediate stop to the criminal, bloody battle. The organization of unity on the basis of a fur workers industrial union to all furriers regardless of color, race, nationality or political affiliation."

3. "No discriminations. No clique dictatorships. Complete guarantee of the democratic rights of every worker. A union of the workers and for the workers."

"The Lovestonites are opposed to our proposal and program; so are all other dishonest demagogues, politicians and fakers. But the furriers are for it, and that is what counts!"

"We are ready and willing to join with the Council in building an A. F. of L. union. But should the Council refuse we shall be forced to continue with the battle to the finish. And we are confident that the militant furriers, who have won every conflict in the past 3 years, will not fail in this one."

Writing editorially in the Militant, March 24, 1934, almost a year ago, Comrade James P. Cannon proposed that the Industrial Union should immediately start a campaign for unity under the American Federation of Labor. He said:

"First, it can demand a charter from the International with only one condition: that the local retain its autonomy and the right to choose its own officials. If that is refused, a proposal can be made to unite the two local organizations into a single body affiliated to the International, and consequently, to the A. F. of L., with officials to be elected in a supervised election of the united organization. Third, the Left wing union can declare its intention to campaign for the amalgamation of all the needle trades unions into one industrial organization affiliated to the A. F. of L."

"If such proposals are made known to all the furriers, and combined with a widespread agitation for unity throughout the needle trades, they will awaken a hearty response from the workers, strengthening the sagging morale of the Left wing and put an enormous pressure on the officials of the International including their Lovestonite come-ons..."

"The Stalinist bureaucrats in charge of the Left wing furriers' union, of course, will oppose such a strategy and will try to suppress any free discussion of it in the union. But these ideas will make their way just the same. They are stronger than the apparatus of the bureaucrats because they correspond to the burning needs of the workers. And, in addition, they indicate the only way to save the furriers' organization from the debacle which overtook all the other sections of the Industrial Union."

Edith Phillips
The star performer again was Edith Phillips, whose experience and observation in the class struggle have turned her in two years from a flag-waving NRA propagandist into a militant trade union leader. When she appealed to the workers, "Are you going to sit still while our unions are broken up one by one?" a thunderous "No!" answered her.

One of the speakers reminded the police who lined the hall that their last pay increase came primarily as a result of labor agitation. (But do not be misled! The radicalization of the American working class is far from complete—Huey Long's name received vigorous cheers.)

What were the actual results of this meeting? Notwithstanding the fact that no definite gains can be pointed to, it showed that in the St. Louis working class there are mighty resources that have not been tapped.

The proposal of Comrade Cannon was correct a year ago and though the chances of successfully carrying it out are much poorer today it is still correct. We only wish to add the following immediate proposals that should be made to the International Union:

(1) The election of a committee of 25 from each union to discuss plans for the merger of both unions into one organization under the A. F. of L.

(2) All workers of both unions to be accepted as members of the merged union. (This to mean that every member of the Industrial Union, from Gold to the last worker in the shop, will be accepted.)

(3) Elections to be held immediately by the fused union, with all members in good standing, in both unions to be eligible for office.

(4) That all arrangements for the election and the control of the fused organization previous to the holding of the election be in the hands of a parity committee.

The bureaucrats in charge of the Industrial Union in 1934 denounced these proposals and suppressed any discussion of them. Today these same bureaucrats say that "all dishonest demagogues, politicians and fakers" oppose the proposal of unity. That statement applied in every word to themselves in 1934. Unless the conditions outlined above are fought for and put into effect, unity in the fur trade may only mean a restoring of the racketeering-controlled organization of the past.

The furriers must be on their guard. They must tolerate no undercover deals between the bureaucrats. Nothing but a democratic union, with officials democratically elected and with the right of the membership to decide on policies, can be the basis for a united organization that will really be a weapon in the hands of the workers against their bosses.

be set up with equal representation from the Building Trades Council and the new organization. Negotiation and other committees to be set up in a similar fashion.

7. That a general mass meeting is to be held Tuesday or Wednesday for the further consolidation of the organization and to set up a functioning strike machinery.

8. That a general FERA strike is officially declared, including all FERA workers.

Protests against the recruiting of strikebreakers, to replace the FERA workers already out on strike, by social service workers, also were made by the B.T.C.

At the same time County Relief Administrator James S. Thompson sent to Fred Payne, president of the C.L.U., a letter urging the skilled workers to return to FERA projects, "until the new program is started from Washington". He made every sort of appeal, from the sentimental one that the tuberculosis hospital needs completing (so that the workers' underfed children will have a place to go, Mr. Thompson?) to the practical one that Toledo is losing money because it is not using its FERA allowances.

He promised to make every effort to get budgets increased.

Toledo's workers are learning how to see that such promises are kept—through mass pressure.

Unity of the Unemployed?

THE Socialist Partyites who managed the unemployed convention held in Washington March 2-4 failed to realize the ambitious objective which they set before themselves—that of setting up an all-embracing, truly national organization of the unemployed. Under pressure from such rank and file elements as the convention contained and others, they had to pass a resolution providing that in three months the executive of the Workers Alliance of America (the name chosen for the new organization) should meet with the executives of other national organizations to discuss unity. Thus they confessed the justice of the charge which the National Unemployed League made against them, namely, that for an essentially factional purpose and on a wrong basis they were trying to set up another national organization when such organizations were already in existence.

What organizations will really affiliate with the W.A.A. after the delegates have gone back home and reported about the character of the convention and how much power it can develop under the loose form of organization adopted is still entirely problematical. If, however, the resolution for unity of the unemployed is carried out in a loyal and realistic manner, important results may yet be accomplished. The unemployed desperately need a powerful, non-partisan nation-wide fighting organization. All the forces capable of helping to build such an organization should get together without a moment's delay. Those who fail to do so in the crisis which at present confronts the unemployed are guilty of the grossest irresponsibility.

The National Unemployed League has repeatedly stated the basis on which unity can be achieved:

"Bring together delegates from the local unemployed organizations throughout the country in a convention which expresses the will of the rank and file and in which representation is proportionate to the strength of the bona-fide organizations present. In a fighting organization set up in this way we will unhesitatingly and gladly submerge our separate existence."

We endorse this position. We urge all unemployed organizations to adopt it and to act upon it immediately. Of our S. P. comrades we ask again: "Why do you refuse to accept this simple, straightforward, correct proposal? What are you afraid of?"

The Unemployed Councils (Communist Party controlled) are so weak generally that the Communist Party in most localities is proposing to liquidate them just as on the trade union field its "revolutionary unions" are being liquidated. However, Herbert Benjamin, the leader of the Councils, was at Washington to plead "for united front and unity of the unemployed organizations". In fact, to judge by the Daily Worker Benjamin of the C. P. was the dominant figure at this S.P. convention! So incorrect was the report that Benjamin had to apologize publicly for it in the convention, with what outward smoothness and inward rage we can imagine!

In line with the right swing of the C. P. Benjamin flattered the S. P. leaders and speaks of their occupying "a position far in advance of the leaders of the N.U.L." For the mechanical maneuvering from the top by which the convention was set up Benjamin has, of course, no rebuke. The C. P. believes in doing business that way and no doubt is flattered by the imitation of certain S.P.'ites.

The Communist Party just having deliberately smashed a united front of the Socialist Party, Workers Party, Communist Party, American Civil Liberties Union, International Labor Defense, Non-Partisan Labor Defense, etc. in Sacramento, though this may mean prison sentences for 14 of its own members, Benjamin unhesitatingly offers a united front and unity in the unemployed field!

From this corrupted source no unity will come, but insofar as it still retains any influence, only confusion, disruption and defeat.

Balance of Power—An Illusion

JUDGE Nields of the Federal District Court of Delaware has ruled that a company union or employee representation plan is legal under the N.R.A. In making his ruling he set forth his idea of "the 20th century American theory" of the relation between the worker and the boss.

"The traditional old world theory," according to Judge Nields, is that there is a certain divergence of interest between the worker and the boss, and that it is necessary, therefore, to have an "economic balance of the power of labor against the power of capital" through independent labor unions. According to Judge Nields' conception of up to date American theory the interests of worker and boss are practically identical, depend upon "mutual interest, understanding and good will", and can, therefore, be well taken care of by a company union financed by the boss.

to turn state's evidence. The Sacramento Bee carries a report that a "confession" has been made in this case. Both statements are absolutely false. . . .

Not only has Mini made no such offer and no such confession but he has repeatedly refused McAllister's offers of immunity in return for turning state's evidence. McAllister has been peddling his offers of immunity for six months and he has been turned down by Mini, by Donald Bingham who still awaits trial, and by others of the present defendants. We need and ask no immunity. We can make no confessions since we com-

Judge Nields has his facts twisted. The prevailing American theory to date, the theory generally held by the A. F. of L., for example, has not been anti-capitalistic. It has insisted, however, that if the workers are not to be oppressed they must be organized as well as the bosses. There must be what Judge Nields describes as "the economic balance of the power of labor against the power of capital". The theory which Judge Nields advocates is pretty close, well on the way, to the theory that prevails in such countries as Italy and Germany under Fascism. There the independent unions of the workers have been smashed. They are now forbidden, strikes are illegal, etc. Relations between worker and boss are supposed to depend "upon mutual interest, understanding and good will".

Marxists have always contended that the divergence of interest between workers, on the one hand, and the bosses who own and control the basic resources of the nation and its productive machinery and operate them for their own private profit, is so fundamental that the worker cannot deliver himself from oppression and misery without destroying the system and building in its place one which he controls and in which industry is not operated for private gain.

What are American trade unionists now going to do? Accept the theory of Judge Nields and of the Automobile Labor Board, leading inevitably in the end to Fascism and the destruction of all independent organizations of the workers? Try to organize on the theory that under capitalism a balance of power between labor and capital can somehow be worked out? Or organize to take the offensive against the capitalist system which, if it is not abolished, must press the workers' standard of living further and further down and in doing so crush every semblance of resistance against slavery?

QUESTION BOX

A. D., DETROIT—

Question: What is the difference between the "price" system and the "profit" system?

Answer: Certain schools of thought, notably the Technocrats, superficially designate any mode of production in which money in one form or another exists, as a "price" system, thereby indicating their inability to see beyond surface phenomena. The existence of a "price" system, or money, merely means that the production and exchange of commodities is sufficiently advanced historically so that a single commodity, the money commodity, which functions as the measure of values for other commodities and as the medium through these latter exchange, has evolved. (There are other functions of money which we do not mention here since they have no direct bearing on the question.) The existence of money, in itself, therefore, in no way tells us more than this about the mode of production, and money existed while production was based on chattel slavery (e.g. Southern United States prior to the Civil War), or on feudalism (e.g. Europe before the 19th century), and exists under capitalism (wage slavery).

To call a system "price" system, therefore, means to designate a mode of production, taken as a whole, by only one of the characteristics upon which it is based, or which exists within it. However, systems of production are characterized, and this is basic, by the CLASSES upon whom the dominant mode of production is based; i.e., slave owner and slave, feudal lord and serf, capitalist and wage worker.

The production and exchange of commodities is not essential to the existence of either feudal or chattel-slave society; such commodity production and exchange (and therefore money) which did exist played a minor role in the economic life of the system, and existed alongside of rather than being a component part of it. The capitalist ("profit") system, however, is based upon commodity production and has as a prerequisite for its existence that this production be sufficiently advanced so that money exists. But this is not enough. In addition there must exist, on the one hand, a propertyless mass of people (the proletariat) who have nothing to sell but their labor-power (labor-power itself becomes a commodity); on the other hand a class of people who own and control the means of production, to whom the proletariat must sell its labor power in order to live, and who derive their surplus value ("profit") from the fact that they pay the worker in wages a smaller value than he creates for them by laboring.

The capitalist system, therefore, is one which is based on commodity production, a money ("price") system, but commodity production (and the existence of money) is not necessarily capitalist production.

Question: Is it true that in the Soviet Union the "profit" system has been abolished but the "price" system retained?

Answer: By expropriating the capitalists and landlords in the Soviet Union the workers have done away with that class relationship upon which capitalism, the "profit" system, is based, i.e., on the one hand the propertyless proletariat, and on the other a class possessing and controlling the means of production. The present class relationship in the Soviet Union, i.e., the dictatorship of the proletariat, is a transitional political system standing between capitalist and socialist society and therefore has elements in it of both systems. This is reflected in the currency which is unlike money in capitalist society in that, like Soviet production itself, it can, within certain limits, be controlled; and it is like money in capitalist society in that, particularly for foreign trade and on the "free" market, legal and illegal, it is subject to the laws of commodities which determine the character of money. It is superficial to speak of a "price" system in describing the Soviet Union since the existence of a currency is but a minor aspect of the social relationships in that country. The ownership of the means of production by the proletariat.

Relief Investigators Do Detective Work

Letter from "Inside" Tells the Wretched Story

I work in a Home Relief Bureau in New York City. I am an investigator. An investigator combines the functions of a social-worker and a detective.

How's that? Well, verbally, the emphasis is upon social-work. But actually the work is detective work. After a long talk on the welfare of the clients, we are told that we are handling the community's money and our first duty is to the community—which means the bankers. Concentrate upon "suspicious" cases and close them out! The more cases you close the better your chances for promotion!

Here is a family that lives in a $20-a-month apartment. Our bureau allows only $16. Check on how the family pays the difference. Perhaps someone has an odd job? Perhaps a relative is helping?

Our Health "Service"

Maybe the family needs a doctor. First have them try home remedies. You know most of them only want a doctor because it is free; if they were working, they would hesitate to call a doctor. If it's a case of dental work, the bureau provides that too, but the waiting list is filled for six months! Yes—our "superiors" tell us—for an undernourished child we allow 25 cents bi-weekly for cod-liver oil. A special diet can be obtained, but of the genuine united front defense movement, neglected by the C. P. bureaucracy, were the representatives of the same N.P.L.D. and the W.P.

A.C.L.U. on Sacramento

6. The C. P., in its press agitation, and for criminally narrow-minded factional purposes, played right into the hands of the prosecution by denouncing Norman Mini's statement as a "confession", which was just what the prosecution tried to make it appear to be, but which everybody else, including most of the defendants who signed the latest C. P. statement, regarded as just the opposite of a "confession".

7. Despite its scurrilous agitation, the C.P. stands condemned by two groups involved in assisting the defense which are not connected either with the C.P. or the W.P.—the Socialist Party and the American Civil Liberties Union (both in California and nationally)—and by the Nation, liberal weekly.

Caroline Decker's Position

The fact that Caroline Decker found it possible to append her name to the vicious C.P. statement of March 5 is a source of great regret to us, and our sentiment will be shared by every responsible militant. While we are aware of the terrific difficulties of her position (and that of all the other defendants), and of the cowardly pressure exerted upon her, we cannot justify her signature in any way. We cannot believe that the statement she signed actually represents her views. We know it does not.

It is no great secret that Caroline Decker has expressed herself in unambiguous terms about the conduct of the C.P. bureaucracy, and about those very questions which are dealt with in the Stalinist statement. Our convictions about her views are not based upon hearsay, but upon ample documentary evidence which is beyond dispute. If we do not present it to our readers at the present time, it is because, unlike the irresponsible leaders of the C.P., we have no intention, in face of the situation created, of making use of such issues at a moment when the freedom of 10 workers hangs in the balance in a capitalist courtroom. The full reckoning with the Stalinists will not be avoided by us; but the interests of the persecuted militants dictate to us a postponement of the inevitable date.

Warnick Stands Firm

At the same time, it is a source of deep gratification that Jack Warnick, although also a member of the C. P., refused to lend his name to the contemptible document printed in the Daily Worker. Like everyone else concerned, he knows the truth, the real facts in the dispute, and he has declined to give credit to a document of falsehood and infamy by adding the signature of a proletarian revolutionist. If this courageous attitude has earned him the venomous attack of unprincipled traducers, it has also brought him the cordial and comradely congratulations of all honest workers and their renewed pledge of solidarity with him and his fellow-defendants. His stand is an example to follow.

of course it's not your business to tell the client. Let him find out for himself and get a letter from a doctor. The dieticians will then take it up—it may take a couple of months.

Most of these people never had anything—most important for an investigator to remember!—and their living standards are higher now than ever, especially these Negroes.

All this is intermingled with chatter about the mental health of the clients, re-vocational training, re-integration into the economic life of the community.

The Spy System

The psychic terror utilized by the relief administration is so apparent that even the most naive are impressed. Everyone knows there is a spy system—special investigators to investigate the investigators! Ever so often a field-worker is told, "You stay in today, we have some other work for you." You are under suspicion, and a "special" is looking into your "load", that is, the relief clients on your list.

Perhaps an anonymous letter comes in (the administration encourages and checks on all anonymous letters) saying that a certain client earned a couple of dollars at an odd job and has the investigator reported? This method is used especially against active staff members who are organized into the Employees' Association.

No Kidding Allowed

The hint is broadly spread that there are plenty of qualified workers (which is a lie) to take the places of "suspects" on the staff. If you point out that the amount of work required is tremendous (twice that of any private welfare agency), that working conditions are poor, with over-crowding, lousy lighting, no supplies like paper, ink, clips, etc., you are a "chronic grumbler", and you have not got a "professional approach to relief problems".

Favoritism is rampant . . . know to your superiors . . . go to lunch with your aids and eventually with your superiors . . . talk nice nothings . . . show them your main aim in life is to save a penny for the taxpayers . . . don't join the Employees' Association. And if you are the right color, have the right accent and the right religion, so the superiors like you, you have a chance for promotion.

Speed-Up for Typists

Other employees are not better off. The typists, besides poor technical equipment, work under a speed-system. Their work is checked for errors, they must turn out the quota or get out. The same goes for the ticket-writers and bookkeepers—speed up. The petty tyrants, the straw-bosses, keep a sharp lookout.

Commissioner Corsi, who has the list of all aliens on relief, has on paper given us full privilege to organize. Every discrimination is used against us, however; nothing slips by. How much time we take for lunch, do we weaken the morale of the staff during work hours by agitating for a five-day week and an increase in pay, do we make an error in the rush?—we catch hell. Our friends are warned not to lunch with us and so on and so on. Our answer? The Employees' Association. We are building the association.

Later I will give you more news on the "relief" system, but now I have to write up a couple of "pen-dings" . . .

Two Important CP Members in Week Join Workers Party

Two active and important members of the Communist Party in the west have withdrawn from that party and joined the Workers Party. Lillian Monroe of Fresno, Cal. who has taken a leading part in the struggles in the San Joaquin Valley, and Lloyd Lassen, who was organizational secretary and agit-prop director for the state of Arizona in the Communist Party, both make statements condemning the C.P. for its bureaucratic policies and for its tactics in the Sacramento trial, and the Third International for its ruinous policies.

Comrade Lassen, who was a member of the Socialist Party before affiliating with the Communist Party, further protests against the C.P.'s program "for the formation of a reformist Labor Party", and for making the "shift in strategy in a fashion having nothing in common with a real democratic working class party".

Comrade Lassen has wide influence among the agricultural workers, copper miners and other workers in Arizona and plans to form Workers Party branches in these fields.

In the San Joaquin Valley, Comrade Monroe has great prestige among the workers in the agricultural fields, trucking, oil industry, creameries, railroads and the unemployed. In her work now in and around Fresno she is being assisted by comrades from the Los Angeles and San Francisco-Oakland branches of the Workers Party.

Comrade Monroe who was at one time Fresno section organizer for the C. P., led the big Fresno grape strike in 1933 and was prominent in the San Joaquin Valley cotton strike the same year. As leader of a well-organized relief struggle, she was held in jail for 30 days, then released for lack of evidence.

In her statement to the Communist Party Lillian Monroe accuses the C.P. of failing, in its work among the small farmers, to educate them to their class position, and declares rather than the antagonism between farmers and workers was deepened. She also points out that the C.P. "completely ignores the necessity of organizing and doing trade union work among the workers in the factories, oil fields, trucking, cotton gins, creameries and so on in the San Joaquin Valley".

Bureaucracy in the Communist International is scathingly condemned by Comrade Monroe, as destructive to the working classes in many countries.

Further reasons for her withdrawal from the C.P. given by Comrade Monroe:

"Because you are guilty of destroying the only union you have ever built in California, the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union, by grabbing the control of the union out of the hands of the workers and placing it in that of your bureaucracy, by your bureaucracy being unable to give the workers the necessary leadership in times of stress, by your inability to organize the agricultural workers into anything approaching a stable union, by your continued use of tactics already proven disruptive, by your failure to admit mistakes and correct them, by your failure to understand the tasks of a revolutionary party in building progressive, democratically controlled unions.

"Because of your criminal sabotage of the Sacramento criminal syndicalism cases, slandering the important comrades on trial, failing to raise bail until you were forced by the Workers Party to do so, failing to rally mass support in protest of this frame-up, hedging in the formation of a genuine united front on the case; and then, when the real united front committee was set up—and this is the last straw—you broke it up."

Association has taken what is, for organized labor in the United States, a surprisingly advanced attitude. At least it has taken this attitude in words, if not in acts, for Mr. Harrison, the chairman, has declared: "Tens of thousands of additional railroad employees must not be driven to the breadline in order that the railroads of America may continue to pay a debt to idle capital". The R.I.E.A. legislative program proposes, instead, the six-hour day, full crew and train limit bills, reduction of service hours, various safety and inspection measures, and certain amendments to the Employers' Liability Law.

NEW DEAL "LEFT WING" OUT

The pious hope that the New Deal is capable of engaging in "social control" received a body-blow by virtue of the recent dismissals from the Agricultural Adjustment Administration of its so-called "radical wing". These "radicals" were dismissed because they advocated:

(1) a narrowing of the spread between the prices paid to farmers and the prices charged consumers; (2) strict supervision of milk distributors, packing houses, sugar and tobacco processors, etc.; (3) the introduction of labor standards into A.A.A. agreements and contracts; and (4) protection for the tenant farmers who are being driven from the soil thanks to the curtailment of cotton production. It is the "practical-minded men", the "dirty farmers" who never farmed, who now are in complete control of the A.A.A. Their program is the simplest imaginable: Triple A's job is to hand out subsidies for the wanton destruction of natural resources. These subsidies are to be collected by the levy of processing taxes. All those fancy theories of social control which spring so lightly to the lips of the Tugwells, the Franks, and the other Brain Trust luminaries can go hang.

Meanwhile, Bureau of Labor Statistics reports indicate that food prices continue to shoot upward at a dizzy pace, with no letup in prospect for the near future. What the production cuts began, the drought has completed—and the wage-earner gets the short end of the stick as usual.

Do the farmers, however, benefit? Ask the farmers whose crops have been burned out, whose livestock has been killed off.

attitudes one of the most discouraging incidents in the always discouraging history of radical factionalism. It is a charge which is not even believed by the people who make it and constitutes the triumph of a tactic over truth. In a public statement given out in defiance of the party line on this subject, Jack Warnick has written: "The characterization by the Western Worker that Mini is 'a cowardly, treacherous stool pigeon' must be condemned as an attempt to frame the boy and ruin his reputation for the rest of his life." The so-called "confession" consists of a defiant statement of his own beliefs and of facts known to everyone, made by Mini at the time of his arrest in August and headlined at that time in the Sacramento papers. It is well known that since his arrest Mini, who is a Sacramento boy and popular in the community, has refused two offers of immunity."

LILLIAN SYMES, CALIFORNIA AUTHOR

On February 15, another noted California writer, Lillian Symes, sent a letter of comment to New York, from which the following excerpts are taken:

"The situation out here has been incredible and has just about wrecked all of us who were trying to keep the united front going. I have been through many fights of this kind but I have never seen anything quite so dirty and outrageous as the C.P. maneuvers in the Sacramento situation. Three A.C.L.U. members who went up to Sacramento for two days to observe the trial came back almost hysterical.

"Goldman got his first chance to act in the case when Mini went on the witness stand. It was the first ray of light in the whole trial. Mini was splendid and between them, the jury and the audience, for the first time, was given an exposition of communist theory and a dignified defense. . . .

"As something of an outsider I must say that the W.P., the N.P.L.D. and Goldman have all acted with amazing patience and diplomacy under very trying and difficult circumstances. This is also the attitude of several liberals who have been fairly close to the situation and who are less prejudiced in their favor than I am. The action of the C.P. in this matter has disgusted all elements but their own fanatical followers."

GEORGE HEDLEY, CHAIRMAN UNITED FRONT COMMITTEE

On January 21, George F. Hedley, director of the American Civil Liberties Union in California and chairman of the united front committee, in reply to a news story published in the Western Worker captioned "Trotskyites Splitting Tactics Fail", sent a letter to the Western Worker, in which he asked to be published, which he said:

"The vote against sending out the call already drawn up and signed by representatives of the C. P., W.P., I.L.D., N.P.L.D. and by the writer in his capacity as temporary chairman of the joint committee, meant actually that the recipients of the call signed by the defendants would have no way of knowing that the Conference on February 10 was supported by any but the very miscellaneous and unrepresentative groups mentioned in one paragraph of the defendants' call; specifically, that the Workers Party, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense and the Socialist Party, the really significant divergent groups which had entered the joint defense committee, were thus eliminated. The argument that the sending of the official and agreed-upon call would have caused confusion is too absurd to require refutation; the actual effect would have been that the recipients would have learned that the Workers Party, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense and the Socialist Party, had entered into close cooperation with the Communist Party in the interests of effective defense and effective mass protest.

"At the time—immediately after adjournment—I remarked to the Communist Party delegate that I considered the motion 'outrageous'. I see no reason to revise that view. . . .

Note: This letter has not yet been published in the Western Worker.

A.A.A. ACCOMPLISHMENTS
MILK PRODUCTION
CORN BELT CONDITIONS
SAGA OF SCARCITY

WASHINGTON, N.Y.—News from the New Deal's agricultural front becomes more ominous from day to day. What crop curtailment failed to accomplish, the drought has brought to a dramatic finale. Supplies of meats, grains, vegetables, dairy and poultry products are, as a consequence, running short. The shortage reflects itself in the continued hoisting of food prices.

The Agricultural Situation for February 1, 1935, an official publication of the United States Department of Agriculture gives a straight-forward and frank account. Farm stocks on corn (as of January 1) amounted to 800 million bushels—about 300 million bushels "under the shortest supply previously recorded."

From October to December 1934, less than 580 million bushels of corn were used in the country, as compared with about 920 million bushels used during the same period a year earlier. As the government experts put it,

"That gives an idea as to how the feeders have tightened up. Of course there are fewer pigs to be fed. But men everywhere are feeding with one eye on the granary and mows and the other on the calendar."

Milk Production Lowest on Record

Consider the effects of the tight feed situation upon the production of milk. The production per cow in January was 10.88 pounds. This is the lowest yield which the Bureau of Agricultural Economics has ever recorded. It compares with an average January yield during past years of 12.12 pounds. Even this average, it is important to note, was by no means sufficient to provide American children with the quantity of milk required for health and growth.

More than a million milk cows were disposed of last year, the "greatest reduction in the 35 years recorded". Why such a reduction in the face of higher prices for milk, butter and cream? The answer is simple: Feed prices have soared to such an extent as to throw out of balance the cost-price ratio on which dairy farmers depend for their earnings.

The "poultry industry" we are informed, "is another which has had to tighten up its belt this winter". (Nothing is said about the tightening of belts by wage earners who have had to discard the luxury of chickens and eggs.)

The number of hens and pullets per flock average 78.4 as compared with the 5-year average number of 88.9. The average farm flock in the Central States was producing 15 eggs in January as compared with 19.3 eggs per flock a year earlier.

Darcy Takes The Stand In Sacramento

C.P. Organizer Testifies His Party Stands For -- Reform!

By Special Correspondent

SACRAMENTO, MARCH 8.—The Communist Party has fired its biggest gun in the Sacramento criminal syndicalism trial. This week Sam Darcy, District No. 13 organizer, took the stand and testified. In direct examination this member of the Central Committee set the keynote of what was to come by his abstract vagueness on all questions, and by his assertion that "the power might fall into the laps of the workers". Then came cross examination: the stage was set for this leader to explain to the jury and to the workers of California the revolutionary platform in thundering tones. But there in the crisis, in the critical hour, the big gun refused to roar; the trigger was pulled and from the cannon's mouth issued . . . social reformism!

The cross reformism of Darcy's testimony came as a shock even to those who were expecting the worst from a Communist bureaucracy which is becoming increasingly racked by the delusion that it is to be forced underground. When contrasted with the revolutionary testimony offered by the Workers Party defendant, Norman Mini, three weeks ago, Darcy's statements are revealed as a complete capitulation to middleclass reformism.

Is This the Communist Party?

When asked what his party would do when a majority of the people supported it, Darcy, instead of describing the road to power the workers must inevitably follow (as Mini had done) refused to say anything!

The question of the seizure of power was the showdown. Where Mini had told how the Workers' Councils would develop from simple united fronts for workers' defense into national organizations embracing all the toiling population, Darcy in the same situation said not one word about the soviet.

Where the Workers Party representative told about the formation of the proletarian militia that would defend the workers' organizations and enforce the will of the Councils, Darcy, believe it or not, said: "The workers' and farmers' government might come about by universal suffrage."

Mini told how the Workers and Farmers Councils would declare themselves to be the new government in the name of the whole people and would use the revolutionary forces to suppress and expropriate the capitalists; Darcy, in his turn, told how the American "fall into the laps of the workers" by drawing a parallel between such an event and the collapse of Czar-

Ohio League Congress Holds Impeachment Over Governor

COLUMBUS, Ohio, March 11.—Action toward impeachment proceedings will be started against Governor Martin L. Conference delegates were to see Davey today. The con-

Workers Party Sends Letter To P.P.

The following letter calling for the "further unification of the revolutionary forces" has been sent to the Proletarian Party by the Workers Party:

Proletarian Party of the U.S. c/o John Keracher, National Secy.
Chicago, Ill.

On December 1-2, 1934, the Communist League of America (Trotskyists) and the American Workers Party held a unity convention in New York City. The Workers Party of the United States was formally launched by the merger of these two organizations on the basis of a Declaration of Principles and Constitution which had been formulated by joint committees and unanimously adopted in the convention of the two organizations.

We regard it as a noteworthy development that after a decade of splits and disintegration in the revolutionary movement, two organizations should have set an example of unification on the basis of a thoroughgoing Marxist and Leninist program.

The problem of unifying all healthy revolutionary forces in the United States is of the utmost urgency and importance. The mobilization of the left progressive forces in the unions, the organization of the masses in the basic industries and of the unemployed, the waging of effective strike struggles in the big industries, the combating of Fascism and war, as well as the rallying of revolutionary forces throughout the world, after a period of demoralization and defeat, for a victorious attack upon capitalism and imperialism—the achievement of all these depends in large measure upon the building of an effective revolutionary party in the United States. Delay in unifying the revolutionary elements, and especially those which are already agreed on accepting neither the Socialist party nor the Communist Party, the Second International nor the Third, is dangerous and may be fatal. On the other hand, further positive steps toward this goal will have an electrifying effect upon the working class in the United States and throughout the world.

We present herewith copy of the Declaration of Principles and Constitution of the Workers Party of the United States for your immediate consideration. We believe that you are in agreement with this proposition. If you are, it should not be difficult to initiate a serious objective discussion on this urgent question of further unification of the revolutionary forces, thus providing added impetus to the building of the new international.

For Political Committee W.P.U.S.
Fraternally yours,

SETTLEMENT IN SIGHT FOR DENTAL MECHANICS

Twenty more dental laboratories have signed up with Dental Technicians Equity, bringing the total of shops covered by agreements to sixty, in the first week of the general strike of dental mechanics in the United States.

As yet, no disorder is reported on one of the widest spread picket lines in recent strike history—764 laboratories in the metropolitan area are being picketed by the 1,100 members of the union.

Negotiations are in progress with the Dental Laboratory Owners of the Metropolitan area, and union officials are optimistic about the possibilities of signing a favorable agreement with that organization. The Associated Dental Laboratories continues its refusal to negotiate.

vention stayed in continuous session from 10 A.M. Sunday to 4 P.M. Monday.

Representing 128,859 organized unemployed from 63 counties in Ohio, 380 delegates declared that "the brutal indifference and criminal neglect of the welfare of the unemployed displayed by Gov. Davey demonstrate that he is unable or unwilling to serve the interest of the people and should be impeached."

Hit Sales Tax

The League also voted to initiate a referendum to repeal the state sales tax, declaring that "the tax is a burden on the poor to relieve the taxation of the rich" and advocating in its place taxation of income of corporations and individuals earning $5,000 or more per year.

Support was voted for the Workers' Security Bill initiated by the National Unemployed League. This provides for a $10,000,000-a-year public works program, unemployment and social insurance, and a minimum wage of $30 a week for a 40-hour week for public and private employment. Funds for the public works program are to be obtained by taxes on incomes over $5,000.

Pending establishment of unemployment insurance, the bill provides that Congress shall appropriate $5,000,000,000 for immediate cash relief of $10 a week for each unemployed worker and $4 for each dependent. The Ohio League is preparing to participate in the Caravan to Washington of the National Unemployed League in May, before Congress adjourns, to press passage of the Security Bill.

Father Coughlin Wins Fame and Fortune with Red Scare -- Says Henry Ford Is a Communist

By DAN EASTMAN

This is the second of a series of articles on Father Coughlin, delayed for a month for lack of space. It provides the recent burst into the news with a semi-indorsement of that other arch-demon, Huey Long, and his general debate with Long and the Detroit Journal.

Father Coughlin hardly had time to settle down in his new parish and deliver his first sermon before he was negotiating a weekly broadcast. Three weeks after his appointment he was on the air over station WJL in Detroit, at $58 per week, a modest beginning. His sermons at first dealt mainly with church and Sunday school topics, social and political problems. By 1929 he had influence enough to secure a three station hookup, but it was not until after a series on Russia and the Red Serpent, in the early part of 1930 that he really hit his stride.

The Red Serpent

Let us quote from the first of this series on the Red Serpent, it sets the tone for his subsequent career. "America," he announced, "is tainted with the purple poison of Bolshevism. Between it and the Catholic Church there is war to the death. Our weapons are truth and charity." He goes on to quote from "a personal letter I have received from Harry A. Jung, 'The hellish conspiracy fomented by the Godless government of Russia, etc.' and concludes, 'There speaks a patriot!'"

Harry Jung, we recall, is notorious as a professional anti-Semite and red baiter, a man who has dedicated himself to raising funds from frightened capitalists, both Jew and Gentile, for the purpose of spreading vulgar, criminal slanders about Communists, Socialists, Jews, foreigners, etc. An ideal type of what Father Coughlin calls a "patriot," a proponent of "truth and charity."

Christ's Prime Minister

"The international socialists," Coughlin continued, "are unwilling to assist in building up a better navy and a stronger army to protect a country where Christ is still king."

Protect the teaching of Christ, cries the Catholic priest, protect it with rifles, machine guns, artillery, bombs, torpedoes, gas and high explosives. Millions of bloody deaths.

AF of L Busy Sabotaging Akron Strike

Leaders Fear They Are Losing Grip On Rubber Union

AKRON, Ohio.—Desperately striving to keep its grip over the rubberworkers union here and to regain some of its lost strength, the A. F. of L. is bringing those clever demagogues and notorious working class betrayers, John L. Lewis, president of the U.M.W.A., and Francis J. Gorman, of textile strike disrepute, to address mass rallies, Coleman C. Claherty, A. F. of L. bureaucrat and organizer for the rubber industry, told newspapermen.

This action resulted after a three weeks drive for membership brought but few of the thousands of workers back into the union. They had dropped out because of the A. F. of L. inactivity.

Meanwhile, even the United Rubberworkers council, governing body of the rubber unions, and special tool of Claherty, passed a resolution to press "immediate action." Similar motions on union meeting floors have led the workers to believe that a strike is sanctioned, but they are reeking with discontent. The inactivity of the bureaucrats to forestall any real action. Of course, no public mention of strike is made.

Unfortunately, the workers are under the impression that a strike will be called early in April, or that they can wait until then to put a successful one. Progressives are immediately hard to slack season sets in and it is an open question whether they can succeed or not.

Wall Street's Priest

Father Coughlin Wins Fame and Fortune with Red Scare -- Says Henry Ford Is a Communist

ter and destruction so that Christ may remain king, and Father Coughlin continue on the radio as his prime minister!

"Have I any suggestions to offer?" he asks helpfully. "There are plenty of them. We can start with the leaders of industry. We can ask them to better the conditions of their laborers."

A novel idea indeed! (Why bother to organize and strike? Just ask those kind hearted capitalists who shoulder every time a worker is murdered on the picket line, to better the conditions of their laborers. Why hasn't someone thought of it before?)

Coughlin and Hearst

As for the rest of the series, to quote L. B. Ward again, "Father Coughlin continued to detail for his audiences the advance of Communism in America—he drew a picture of the red serpent as it crawled from campus to campus." (Father Coughlin and W. R. Hearst have always been on good terms. The Detroit Times, a Hearst paper, has given him much favorable notice, the whole Hearst chain has carried articles by the good father on the nationalization of women in Russia, and he drew bits of cheap hysteria.) "He chose a picture of the serpent crawling from campus to campus. . . . He mentioned by name Bertrand Russell (sheer courage) who was a guest at (Indiana State) etc. etc."

The series on The Red Serpent brought notice from several quarters.

None other than the ubiquitous Norman Thomas who hastens from pillar to post explaining to capitalists and workers alike that Socialism is not so bad as it sounds, charged Father Coughlin with "a serious misrepresentation of socialism and of the Socialist party, and a hopeless confusion of it with communism." Thomas' endeavors to point out the difference between the rosy beatitude of socialism and the dark horror of communism to Father Coughlin, alas for Thomas, proved unsuccessful.

Father Coughlin's Red Scare

The J. Ham Fish Committee investigating subversive doctrine (J. Ham Fish is best remembered as the red-baiting congressman whose address to Congress, due to a very appropriate typographical error, was once printed in the N. Y. Ark. Workers College Is In Danger

By GERRY ALLARD

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—Commonwealth Labor College, the Arkansas trail blazer for workers' education, is in danger. The state legislature of Arkansas, a special investigating committee, the Ku Klux Klan, and other landlord-capitalist agencies are working overtime to wreck the proletarian institution—product of ten years of painstaking work.

The college needs no introduction to the militant labor movement. Back in 1930-31 this institution sent a delegation of teachers and students to black Harlan County, Kentucky, to aid the hungry coal miners to establish a union.

Again when the Illinois miners marched by tens of thousands against the betrayals of John L. Lewis in 1932, Commonwealth plunged into the struggle and performed courageous work. Though they were the first to be arrested, the Commonwealth delegation formed a role of solidarity with the Illinois miners which the Left wingers haven't forgotten.

When the share cropper situation popped up, right at the door of Commonwealth in Arkansas, again teachers and students laid aside their studios to enter the fight against the reactionaries. Desperate wealthy landlords, the exploiters of vast cotton plantations, were quick to intensify their reign of terror. Floggings, kidnappings, beatings and threatened lynchings became the order of the day.

Lucien and Raymond Koch, Commonwealth teachers, were arrested, beaten and thrown into jail. The raiders had a noose with them. Horace Bryant, an unemployed organizer in western Arkansas was arrested and charged with anarchy. C. C. Williams, a clergyman was also arrested. Other laborites, preachers, A. F. of L. members, etc. are being arrested and threatened daily.

Summarily a bill was introduced in the Arkansas house of representatives aimed to destroy the labor movement in the state, and especially designed to wreck Commonwealth College.

The labor movement must answer these attacks with a real united counter movement.

For weeks, strikes and bombings have harassed the Mendieta government which in turn has replied with a reign of terror against all of its adversaries. A strike of teachers and students, spread from one province to the other, extended to various industries and professions. As this issue of the New Militant goes to press, practically all labor and professional groups in Cuba, including most of the government employees as well as on strike. The nation is paralyzed. The capitalist press reports the strike is being broken by military force. Its accounts are obviously exaggerated.

The present outburst in Cuba came as a surprise to no one acquainted with recent developments on the island. The very narrow social base that Mendieta once had, as with Machado in 1934, has been washed away from under him until his sole supports today are the army under Batista and American imperialism, represented by Jefferson Caffery.

Cuban Labor

In spite of division and persecution, the Cuban labor movement has recently conducted a number of exceedingly militant struggles. The increasing poverty of the masses following the loss of the gains made during the "Autentico" (Grua San Martin) regime (Sept. 1933-Jan. 1934), drove them again to militant action and revolutionary struggle. New revolutionary conspiracies and terrorist activities of the petty-bourgeois parties and groups alternated with strikes of the workers on plantations and in the mills. In some places the peasants and agricultural workers seized landed estates.

The impotence of the government increased as the waves of the new upsurge washed away its social base. The general political strike is but the culmination of a whole series of violent, bloody struggles, which open the way for new revolutionary advances of the Cuban masses.

A Crisis Regime

The Mendieta regime was born in crisis and has lived in a state of permanent crisis. Time and again when its life appeared threatened, the imperialist masters were obliged to take steps to prolong it. Among these measures were the renunciation of privileges under the "Platt Amendment" by which the United States had secured the right to intervene in Cuban affairs.

C.P. Leadership Can't Be Trusted

Write Former Members to Comrade Who Asks Them to Come Back to Party

We print below a letter of invitation to rejoin the Communist Party received by Comrades Taylor and Terry of New York together with their reply to the invitation. The reply should prove of particular interest in a discussion on important problems of trade union policy.—Ed. Note.

Dear Fred:

Won't you please read this over (Daily Worker clipping) and see whether it doesn't fit your own case? The C.P. is taking real new action along the lines which you and I have always thought necessary and desirable—a great many old sectarian notions are being dropped and it seems a shame you and Jack too—can't get in now when the work is beginning to show results. When am I going to see you?

Theodore Weeks,
New York City

Dear Ted:

Jack and I have read your letter with great interest and here is our reply:

You write "The C. P. is taking real new action along the lines which you and I always thought was necessary." Is the party really taking "new action", i.e., change of trade union policy and tactics? If so, when has the party leadership publicly proclaimed this change of policy and tactics? Have the worker-communists in the lower ranks of the party discussed this "new action" and has the party leadership changed its trade-union policy in accordance with the experiences of the worker-communists who are in the trade unions?

In the 1929 Draft-Outline of the T.U.U.L.—pp. 22-23-24—we read: "The so-called Muste opposition... aims at reestablishing the prestige and organization of the discredited A.F.L. leaders... In this period of rationalization and speed-up, of radicalization of the workers, the

NOTE ON BOSTON BRANCH

The Boston Branch of the Workers Party is now well established at 12 Hayward Place, situated in the heart of the city. These new headquarters, consisting of several rooms, are open every evening and on Sunday afternoons, with a party member in charge to welcome all those who care to come in.

The weekly meeting of the branch takes place on Thursday evenings. These meetings are divided into two parts: the first part given over to party business is closed; the second part which is devoted to education and current events is open to non-members. The branch membership has increased by over 30 percent.

Contest Note

Big Gains in Middle West
Chicago, New York lagging
Forging ahead this week are Chicago, New York and Youngstown all tying with a 40 percent score. Minneapolis comes next with no gains since last report. Louisville has achieved 20 percent in the first week.

Compared with these scores the 9 percent of New York and the 5 percent of Chicago do not stand up very well. More concentrated effort is needed in these cities which should be leading the way. Philadelphia is doing a bit better with a score of 16 percent, but even that needs improvement.

Pleasantwood has achieved 20 percent and Worcester 10 percent. Considering the difficulties involved these scores are not to be censured. But San Francisco, with only 15 percent certainly could do better. All other branches have a score of less than 15 percent. It is time that they get busy and put in some real intensive work on the drive. Especially should Toledo, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, Newark, Boston, Columbus and Los Angeles be able to make a better showing by next week.

There are still some branches from which we have had no subs at all. They are listed here as a reminder. This means that it is time for you to show some results: Akron, Biloxi, Buffalo, Charleston, Cleveland, Dickson City, Fort Wayne, Mineola, Mt. Carmel, Oakland, Peterson, Salt Lake City, Springfield, Staunton, Throop, Washington, D.C., Winston Salem and Waukegan.

Comrades in branches are urged to take up the matter of the drive with their literature agents. See that the drive is put on the agenda of branch meetings and that definite plans are made for intensive work to achieve our goal. Send in reports. You are interested in the progress of other branches and they want to know what you are doing. But don't wait for branch action. Go right out yourself among your friends and fellow workers. Get them to subscribe. Send your remittance directly or through your literature agent. If you send it yourself be sure to mention (a) your name, (b) your branch, if connected with the W.P., (c) that you want this sub credited in the drive, (d) full name and address of subscriber. Note that subs will not be credited unless this information accompanies the remittance.

Subs on combination offer will be credited only if remittance is payable directly to the New Militant.

And now—another week of effort! Let's get all the percentages up to—well over—the 50 percent mark by the 15th of this month! We can do it!

In 1929 the party leadership insisted that—"In reality there is no change in policy. What we have is a further phase in the development of party trade-union work. This work must correspond to the deep-going radicalization of the masses in the third period." Have you forgotten the famous "third period" which was invented by the Stalinists to facilitate the swing to the "left" by the centrist C.I. leadership?

In the U. S. this zig-zag from right to "left" expressed itself concretely in the following formula of the party leadership: "The A. F. of L. is a company union with fascist leaders... We must build new revolutionary unions..." Any worker-communist who opposed this formula was either removed from party activity or expelled.

"But"—you will say—"a great many old sectarian notions are being dropped"... Not so fast comrade! In the first place, did the party leadership openly proclaim these changes? Of course not! Is it not obvious to you by now that the Communist Party leadership has no independent policy of its own and that the zig-zag (which you describe as "new action") from right to "left" and vice-versa is a necessary condition compelled by conflicting social forces? If this is true—and it is—then what are we dealing with here is an unstable party regime that has no independent policy of its own and consequently cannot admit changes of policy. This inability to "admit" expresses itself in suppression of party democracy and the resignation of its best fighters. Do you ask us to come back to such a "party" and to such "leadership"? For the sake of "completeness" we will quote W. Z. Foster's "Little Brothers of the Big Labor Pakers", 1931 (pp. 4-5-6): "The A. F. of L. is an employers' tool... When unorganized workers undertake to organize and fight they cannot use the A. F. of L... The A. F. of L. leaders will split the unions rather than let the workers capture and use them for fighting purposes"... This was declared in 1931 and culminated in the famous C. P. announcement (1934) that it is necessary to build an "independent federation".

The end of 1934 and the beginning of 1935 again brought a reversal of the Stalinist "policy" suddenly and without discussion. No loss and no more than the liquidation of the "necessary" independent unions... At one time we stated at a leading fraction meeting of the building trades that the independent Alteration Painters Union must enter the A. F. of L. to strengthen the class struggle elements within the Painters Brotherhood (A. F. of L.) and we were branded "opportunists"... Now look at the speed with which the party leadership is "throwing" the Alteration Painters Union into the A. F. of L. Of course now there is nothing much left to "throw" in but the attempt is made, and in a manner that will only further discredit the former.

In one and the same year (1934) we are told: 1) to build an "independent federation" and 2) to liquidate independent unions and to "build and strengthen the A. F. of L."... What does this latest zig-zag represent?... A sudden swing to the right! Are we guaranteed against further zigzags to the right or to the "left"?... To ask this question after what we have indicated above is, to say the very least, naive.

This leadership swings to the right or to the "left" but has no independent policy of its own. There can be no guarantee against further changes of policy by the centrist party leadership.

Comradely yours,
ALFRED TERRY
JACK TAYLOR

Progressives Suspended From ILG

The necessity for a unified progressive opposition in the I.L.G.W.U. is emphasized by the suspension of two progressive members of Cutters Union Local 10 by the Central Appeals Committee of the International. Oscar Signer and William Zweiborn, members of the Cutters' Welfare League, a Progressive group in Local 10, are the members suspended.

In an appeal to all members of the I.L.G.W.U., the Cutters' Welfare League calls upon all progressives to "fight against violations of democratic rights".

The basis for suspension of Signer and Zweiborn, the appeal points out, was the calling of a meeting, by the Cutters' Welfare League, of unemployed cutters, with the announced purpose of pushing the local into action on behalf of the unemployed. This was early last winter, when unemployment was at a critical stage. For this action, Zweiborn and Signer were charged with dual unionism and suspended. On appeal to the General Appeals Committee, the suspension was upheld after a nine months' delay. At the time of his suspension, Zweiborn was manager of the Union Defenders Committee of the Dress Joint Board.

MISERY STALKS FASCIST AUSTRIA

VIENNA.—The number of Austrian unemployed receiving public relief has risen to 337,333 during February of 1935. The monthly increase amounts to approximately 3,000 people. One-sixth of the population of the Austrian capital is dependent upon public relief. 51,000 households with a total of 130,000 family members report an income of 20 schillings a month.

Teachers Must Not Rest With Vanderwoude Decision

By a Teacher

A decision handed down by State Commissioner of Education Cole has compelled the New York City Board of Education to appoint some 1,700 qualified teachers to jobs in the city public school system. This decision, the commissioner's reply to a brief filed by one of the eligible teachers, Edith Vanderwoude, finally halts one of the most odious of the numerous "economy" practices of the board; namely, forcing teachers on eligible lists to serve in existing vacancies on a substitute basis.

These teachers had to work at a rate considerably lower than the schedules provided for by state law; moreover, they were deprived of the tenure, increment and pension privileges attached to regular appointment. This practice, the board's contribution to the "economy" program of the banker and really interests, had been applied so extensively that in some of the largest high schools "substitutes" comprised fully 75 percent of the teaching staff. The effectiveness of this plan as a method of using one group of teachers to force another into submission is evident.

What of the future? The Vanderwoude decision, definitely establishing the impermissibility of compelling eligible work as substitutes in existing vacancies, is a victory for the teachers. The labor press, in its jubilation, has failed to analyze the nature and consequence of the victory. Serious teachers must not be content solely with winning concessions. They must inquire: What is the result of this victory in terms of building a militant movement? For victories which do not at the same time result in building a movement can be washed away tomorrow.

Let us analyze the victory. 1,700 teachers are affected immediately, are assigned to jobs at the regular rates of pay. But several thousand similarly situated teachers are not actually nearer to getting jobs. Moreover, a number of teachers who were working at the substitute pay rates are now without work at all.

Purely Legal Fight

The fight was conducted on a purely legal basis. The Teachers Union of New York participated in it only to the extent of contributing $50 to help defray legal expenses. It stood by passively, while another organization, the New York Association of Unappointed Teachers, pushed the issue to its conclusion. The union has about 2,000 in its ranks; the Unappointed about 60. The union has prestige and influence. The Unappointed is generally unknown and has very little influence.

Since the fight was won on a purely legal basis, the result must tend to strengthen the illusions of the teachers in the "just" character of the capitalist state institutions. To teachers who do not understand what is involved, it must appear that an abuse was corrected by an appeal to the state! All that is required is a capable lawyer to draw up legal documents and justice will take its course. Then what is the necessity for a union? In this sense the victory can be construed as a rebuff to the union movement. This result might have been avoided and positive steps in the militant education of teachers taken, had the necessary legal fight been supported by mass and union pressure.

Role of the Union

Jointly responsible are the leadership of the union and the Progressive Group, one of its left-wing groups. The leadership of the union is right-wing Socialist in the main. Its support is in the higher salaried teachers. Its policy is limited to lobbying in Albany. It is not interested in the condition and needs of the unemployed and the partly employed. That is why it could ignore for years the needs of these teachers, and finally look on placidly while another organization conducted a struggle which the union was duty-bound to lead.

It was the duty of the group which claimed to be progressive to conduct a struggle in the union against this leadership; to have the union take up this fight. But it was not its duty to build an organization of union members and teachers eligible for union membership outside the union, and make this organization the "leader" of the fight for appointments.

Yet this is precisely what the Progressive Group did. In the fall of 1931 it set up and has led ever since the New York Association of Unappointed Teachers. The union is now reaping the fruits of this policy.

Struggle Within the Union

So will the Progressive Group. In the union it wages a struggle with the right-wing Socialist leadership. And strange as it may seem, the axis of the struggle according to its own analysis is precisely the question of the leadership's line of limiting its efforts almost exclusively to lobbying and legal fights, versus the real progressive's line of mass pressure to back up the lobbying and legal fights. Yet the victory which the offspring of the Progressive Group claims all for itself must strengthen the reformist leadership against the Progressive Group. Such is the result of the Progressive Group policy, essentially factional.

Teachers should repudiate such policies. They should demand that the union fight for the interests of the teachers; and by fight, we do not mean legal fights alone, we mean primarily mass pressure by the teachers and the labor movement of which they should be an organic part.

Administration Getting Ready for Large Scale Wage Cutting Drive Against Unions

By ARNE SWABECK

The rift between the Roosevelt administration and the A. F. of L. leadership has widened, all indications to the contrary notwithstanding. First President Roosevelt, despite the vehement objections from the A. F. of L. officialdom, extended the automobile agreement of last year, which legalized the company union, and extended the life of the Kollman had been consulted prior Sloan of General Motors and Walter Chrysler together with Leo Woolman had been consulted prior to the extension of the agreement, but the opinions of Bill Green were not solicited. And except for the subsequent "gracious" reception given at the White House, permitting Bill Green to introduce by name to the President each one of the members of the Executive Council, nothing was done to mend the rift, not to speak of dealing with the real grievances of the automobile workers.

President Roosevelt next announced the tobacco code with its 40-hour week regulation and the 25 to 40 cents an hour minimum wage, and again over the objections of the A. F. of L. official leadership. To the impassioned criticism made by the latter of S. Clay Williams as chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board President Roosevelt answered in his "Dear Bill" letter to Green informing him that the former chairman of the notorious open shop R. J. Reynolds tobacco company was a devoted public servant. However soothing this may have appeared to Bill Green, it could mean only another kick in the face in so far as the administration's attitude to the issue of union organization is concerned.

Finally, the insistence of the Roosevelt administration upon a $50 per month maximum wage for workers on relief projects will unquestionably receive the unstated support of all the magnates of finance and industry. With that will go an effort to squelch the so-called labor lobby in Congress.

A number of other measures are pending before Congress which will, if anything, tend to widen further the present open rift. There is, for example, the 30-hour week bill. On numerous occasions the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers Association have voiced their determined opposition to this bill. It is a well-known fact that the Roosevelt administration sees eye to eye with them and the hopes pinned by these labor leaders upon the government for support in return for their miserable failure of union organization are due for another blast. Thus, there need be no doubt that the rift is brought about by the initiative of President Roosevelt. That is why there is something real about it.

Serious Problems Ahead

These issues which stand out in the recent events in Washington foreshadow the serious problems that the trade union movement will henceforth have to face. In fact, the breach between Roosevelt and the labor leaders is merely the prelude to a wage-cutting campaign on a large scale that is now in preparation. It is signaled by the proposed $50 monthly maximum wage for workers on relief projects. But the issues go even deeper. They will raise the very question of life or death to the trade union movement.

Of course, the labor leaders are correct when they insist that two wage levels, a higher for private industry and a lower for government relief work, cannot be maintained. The higher rate will be forced down to the lower rate. At first the unemployed workers who are dependent upon relief will be compelled to work for the low rate. Economic experts will next get busy and manipulate statistics to show that workers on relief projects get by on the $50 monthly maximum wage, that they can keep on producing on that wage rate. That the family budget can be shaved down to that level and that there is, therefore, no valid reason for paying more in private industry. Wage reductions will be on the order of the day in every industry and it stands to reason that one of its inescapable accompaniments will be in the first instance well-prepared and deliberate efforts to chain the trade union movement to a system of compulsory arbitration in which strikes are outlawed. Failing in that, there will be sure to follow the most fierce campaign yet witnessed to exterminate the trade union movement.

What Is Being Done?

The most serious questions now arise before every active trade unionist. What is the leadership of the movement doing to defend and to maintain its right of existence? What are the organizations doing to prepare for a serious battle?

To the A. F. of L. Executive Council is credited a powerful lobby in Congress. Its success to date cannot be said to have been very startling and certainly it holds out much less prospects for the future. So long that it serves merely as a shield for the actual failure of organization and struggle it can only have fatal consequences to the movement. In reality that is all this lobby is today.

The Executive Council has decided that it will not now undertake to organize the steel industry. It is too busy with the automobile industry. William Green has even made a tour of the automobile centers and in his public addresses assured the manufacturers that the A. F. of L. does not intend to strike the plants. All it asks is a fair deal. Such a message does not sound very inspiring to the automobile workers. After all, they have also had their experiences and very likely learned by this time that nothing can be gained unless they fight for it. Consequently the meetings of Bill Green were not very enthusiastically attended. In Detroit less than two thousand workers showed up, which compares very poorly with the great overflow meetings held by A. F. of L. leaders last year. But that was before the sell-out agreement had been signed by them. Now the automobile workers' unions show a serious drop in membership despite the fact that there have been many indications of a sentiment for organization amongst the workers provided they are shown how to organize and how to get somewhere. The A. F. of L. campaign of organization does not meet with great response. The automobile manufacturers are, of course, opposed to it. The Wollman Board tells the workers that if they join the A. F. of L. it cannot help them. The A. F. of L. leaders offer nothing except its replacement by the National Industrial Relations Board*. The inducements for joining the union under these conditions are slim indeed.

A serious response by the automobile workers to the campaign of the National Industrial Relations Board* is being organized by the auto-workers. The A. F. of L. leaders offer nothing except its replacement by the National Industrial Relations Board*. The inducements for joining the union under these conditions are slim indeed.

mobile workers to a campaign of organization cannot be expected until the unions break off completely from the sell-out tradition established by the reactionary leadership. It may take a few more kicks in the face from the Roosevelt administration to do it, but we may rest assured that such kicks will not be lacking. What must follow next must be an aggressive policy of organization. The very life and existence of the trade-union movement depends upon that.

*The Executive Council has decided that the automobile workers are to have a separate charter for an international union, but it is not to include the tool and die makers or the maintenance men, nor is it to take effect until June, that is, not until after this season is over. This alone should verify that the strike vote now conducted by the automobile workers federal unions, with the actual call for a strike, however, left to Wm. Green, can have no serious meaning. But it is only one of the straws in the wind indicating that the Executive Council is determined to resist any move for industrial unionism. At its recent meeting the Mill, Mine and Smelter Workers Union appealed against a decision to split up the workers in the Butte copper mines among craft unions, leaving in the main only semi-skilled and unskilled workers to the mine union. John Frey of the Metal Trades Department, supported by Arthur Wharton of the machinists and by other craft union chiefs, succeeded in thwarting any attempt of industrial union jurisdiction.

MARCH OF EVENTS

A Dangerous Alliance

An item in the press recently, in connection with the General Johnson-Huey Long controversy, reveals a growing line-up of forces that may prove of the utmost danger to the working class. General Smedley Butler came out in hearty support of the "two lions" Long and Coughlin. Here we have a triple alliance of three demagogues who supplement each other in the possibilities of building up the mass basis for an American fascist movement. To the forces of the Delta Dictator, Father Coughlin brings the aid of clerical reaction hiding under the pseudo-radical guise of "social justice," and Smedley Butler contributes the strength of the military arm of reaction. The real motive of Butler in making his revelations concerning the attempt by Morgan interests to bribe him into leading and organizing a fascist movement here, now becomes clear. Butler resorted to a clever bit of advertising to permit him later to act completely in the interests of capitalist reaction under the halo of a great lover of democracy.

The danger to the proletariat from these elements can hardly be exaggerated. They are the symbols heralding the conversion or transformation of the capitalist offensive to terrorize the working class so as to stop further organizing of the unorganized, into a fascist mass movement. The "white terror" of the bosses is intended to prevent the workers from fighting to regain lost ground in the matter of wages and living conditions. The offensive is apparent in the recent court decisions against the labor provisions of the NRA, the Roosevelt decision against the "prevailing wage," the drive for company unions and against the A. F. of L., the Hearst anti-red campaign, the Sacramento criminal syndicalism case, etc. The answer to this offensive and to the incipient fascist movement will be given by the increased militancy of the working class.

The Labor Party Fallacy

Nothing reveals more clearly the utter fallacy and bankruptcy of those who call for the formation of an American labor party, than a speech by Alfred Bingham, Farmer-Laborite supporter and editor of Common Sense. The contention of the labor-partyites runs that the American toilers are beginning to realize the need to separate from the bourgeois parties and to resort to independent political action in their own interests. Owing, however, to the political backwardness of these masses, resulting from historical conditions, they are far from ready to join any outright revolutionary organization. Hence, rather than permit the workers to fall into the clutches of the capitalists through an apparently working class party which is in actuality a third capitalist party, the vanguard must gain control of the movement by rallying the toilers around a program of proper immediate demands.

To separate immediate demands from the revolutionary tasks of the proletariat means to foster illusions in the minds of workers. It means to hold out the hope that the worker can win security and a better life by fighting for concessions under capitalism. This is all the more illusory in this period of the decline of capitalism when the bosses, far from granting more concessions, are actually wiping out all the previous "sops" granted to the workers. Unless immediate demands are made the means of rallying the workers in struggle for the purpose of teaching them at one and the same time the need for revolutionary action as the only real solution, the effect will be to disillusion the workers with false promises.

Our task is not to traffic on the ignorance and backwardness of the masses, not to attempt to win them unawares and by stealth, but on the contrary, to enlighten them and to show them the necessary steps to take along the road to power.

Shall We Compete with Fascism?

When it comes to immediate demands as such, divorced from a revolutionary program, we cannot hope to compete with the fascist demagogues of "promises." Our answer to the demagogues of the Huey Longs and the Father Coughlins is not a different brand of demagoguery, but enlightenment and clear revolutionary answers concerning the meaning of events. To compete under present conditions with the fascists on the basis of rainbow hopes, is to bring about the inevitable defeat of our class. Instead of building a bridge from the labor party to the revolutionary Marxist party, we would build a bridge to fascism. And it is precisely this that Bingham revealed.

He was peeved that Long and Coughlin were stealing a march on the Farmer-Labor Party (which might be substituted by any other labor party). As the New York Times reported: "The movement for a third party under radical-progressive leadership that is rising in the West is in imminent danger of being captured by the 'demagogic movement' headed by Huey Long and Father Coughlin, it was asserted last night by leaders of the Farmer Labor Political Federation." And to fight the demagogues of Long, Bingham proposed a similar type of demagoguery—the "dramatization" of the appeal of "Plenty for All." Bingham's speech contains his own refutation.

Mendieta Sustained By Wall Street Army Alone

States had, since 1901, reserved the legal right to intervene in Cuba at any time it saw fit; and the Reciprocal Trade Treaty, signed between the U. S. and Cuba in August of last year for the purpose of saving Cuba and Mendieta for Wall Street.

The first of these measures gave Mendieta a short breathing space from the attacks of the middle class nationalist elements, while the second promised a small degree of economic improvement.

These two "concessions" were such in appearance only, as the trade treaty also reacted in favor of American exporters whose Cuban trade had fallen off five-sixths in four years, and the Platt Amendment had outgrown its usefulness and no longer fitted in with the "pacifist" policies of the U. S. State Department. Thus the Sugar Trust and its political allies tried to stem the once more rising tide of the Cuban revolution.

A Single Product Country
But the general contradictions of capitalist economy are inevitably sharper in such "single product" countries as Cuba (over eighty percent of Cuba's economic life is sugar; eighty-five percent of the capital invested in Cuba is American controlled). Cuba is equipped with a highly efficient and modern sugar producing system, capable of producing between 5 and 6 million tons per year. The U. S. government allots it a quota of approximately 2 million tons. These are the fundamental reasons for the state of affairs in the island republic.

The chain of American imperialist economy is today strained to the utmost and is threatening to break at its Cuban link. Therefore it is the foremost task of the American workers in their struggle against the class enemy, to extend their solidarity to their Cuban fellow workers so that by the joint efforts of both, a really serious blow may be dealt imperialism.

The Cuban masses stand alone in America, as masters of the technique of the political general strike. In this respect, as well as for their heroism and great sacrifices in the struggle against the common enemy—Wall Street—they stand out as an inspiration and example to the workers of the United States as well as those of the other Latin American countries.

In August 1933 the general strike was directly responsible for the overthrow of the government. This time, however, it will have greater difficulty in accomplishing this aim. Machado had lost the support of Wall Street; the forces of American imperialism are on the side of the present government.

We must be alert and prepared to support the struggles of the Cuban workers. Our slogan must be: Hands off Cuba; All support to the Cuban masses in their struggle against our common enemy—Wall Street and its lackeys, Mendieta, Batista and Co.!

SUPER RED-BAITING BILL TO KEEP TRUTH FROM SOLDIERS

Of all the flock of red-baiting bills that hover vulture-like over Congress and state legislatures, the one that war or fascism may bring, the bill to guard soldiers and sailors from labor propaganda is conceded the best chances of early success. It makes it "illegal to influence a soldier in any manner," said Rep. Maury Maverick (D., Tex.). "It is another bill through which you can drive a 10-ton truck and do anything you want with it." But nevertheless it is a bill that is wanted by the military-minded in the administration, and they are getting most of what they want these days.

When National Guardsmen are used to gas and shoot down strikers, or when the regular army is ready for duty against them, as in the textile strike, it is "patriotism" apparently for the powers-that-be to fill the soldiers' minds with wildest distortions of labor's aims. But let some of the worker brothers and sisters of these soldiers try to tell them on whose side they are ordered to fight in these labor struggles, and it will be "sedition" under this bill, punishable with the severest penalties.

Why Join the Workers Party

By A. J. MUSTE

Letters to a Worker Correspondent

Fellow Worker:

In my last letter I wrote about how the Workers Party came into existence, after many years of splits and disintegration in the radical movement, as a new unifying center for the revolutionary forces. I concluded by stating that we base our party on the teachings of Marx and Lenin which have been tested in the experience of the international revolutionary movement of the working class and seek to apply these principles to the realities of the American scene.

When we speak of our party as "revolutionary" we mean, on the one hand, that its aim is revolutionary and on the other hand that we believe in the revolutionary method. We do not believe that the masses can be delivered from poverty, unemployment, degradation, war, by any reform of the capitalist system under which we live. That system must be abolished, wage slavery must be done away with altogether. The workers must own and control the machinery of production.

We do not believe that the workers and their allies can overthrow the capitalist state, governmental system, and the capitalist economic system by purely legal, "democratic," peaceful, parliamentary methods. They will have to take the revolutionary road to their goal.

An Example of Reform

As for curing the ills of the workers by reforming capitalism, we have just been living through two years of the Roosevelt New Deal which was to do just that. And you know only too well what that has got us. "Salvation" has been provided not for the workers, but for the capitalist class. Factory pay-rolls are only 60 percent of the 1929 level, for example, but dividends and profits 150 percent. The average wage of the American worker who was lucky enough to have a job at all last year was around fifteen dollars a week. The citizenship paper of millions of "the proud American working class, sons and daughters of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln," is a relief ticket—which entitles them to nicely calculated rations after snoopings social workers have made sure that there isn't an extra loaf of bread in the closet or a nickel in the pants pocket.

This takes place in a country where everybody could have a decent, comfortable home, plenty of attractive clothing, abundant food, educational opportunity, money for travel and amusement, if factories were not standing idle, food being plowed under, and so on.

There is always some one who promises the workers to fix things up. Hoover with his chicken in every pot and two cars in every garage. Roosevelt with his New Deal. Huey Long with a house, automobile and radio for everybody. Isn't it about time that the workers realized what Marx taught long ago that it does not make any difference how well-meaning these capitalist saviors may be, there is no way out for the masses under capitalism?

For example, you tell employers that we now have a New Deal, no one is to get below a certain minimum, everybody is to get high wages so "the masses may have purchasing power to buy the output of our mass production" and then turn around and tell the boss that he must run his business at a profit in competition with other bosses, and his chief concern is necessarily to put his prices up as high as possible and to keep his costs, including his labor costs, as low as possible. Thus all the chattering on wages, the speed up, etc. under the codes and other New Deal rignarole.

If for the moment the wage rates are maintained, the boss looks for some other way to squeeze out profit, as by putting in "labor-saving" machinery and putting workers out on the street. The steel barons have a new process with which 1,000 men can turn out as much as 32,000 do now. Out of every 320 now employed 304 can be fired and the other 16 do the work!

General Trend Today

Under capitalism, in this period of decline, the general trend is toward greater misery for the workers. Capitalists make their profits by paying the worker in wages a smaller value than he creates by laboring. The capitalist thus gets what Marx calls surplus value. It is the only way profit can be created. Under modern conditions expensive plants and equipment are increased, but the work is done with fewer workers. Thus they must be exploited ever more fiercely in order that surplus value—profit—may be squeezed out of their labor, the only possible source of profit.

At an earlier period capitalism found a way out by getting outlets for surplus capital, possibilities of exploitation, etc. in so-called "backward countries." But as the situation grows more tense in the advanced capitalist countries and the "backward countries" also become industrialized, it is a case of bigger and hungrier dogs fighting for fewer and fewer bones. Terrific and awful wars break out. We have had one world-war. Another is in the making.

Things might be better. Plenty and security can be had. But even if the American working class were willing to accept meekly the fifty percent cut in its standard of living since 1929, it will not be given the "privilege." Capitalism will force the standard lower and again lower. It will lead the masses to slaughter unless they take things into their own hands.

Thus the workers become convinced that capitalism cannot be reformed, it must be abolished.

For the most part, however, the workers who have reached this conviction have been under the influence of the "Social-Democratic" philosophy of the Socialist parties and the Second International. According to this philosophy, we can gradually replace capitalism with socialism and we can do it by peaceful, parliamentary, "democratic" means.

Riding in Opposite Directions

What has happened in Germany and other countries since the war shows plainly enough that this philosophy of "Gradualism" means ruin for the workers and their movement. The idea of running a capitalist and a Socialist, a profit and non-profit, system side by side is crazy. It is like trying to ride on two horses going in opposite directions. The capitalist system remains under all these "Socialist housing schemes" etc. and so the crisis is not resolved; it gets worse.

There was a time when concessions to the workers, better the standard of living, without cutting into profits. Then the "gradualism" of the social-democratic parties and the unions brought certain results. Now capitalism maintains itself only by taking away concessions—wages rates, social insurance benefits, etc.—which it once gave. To stick to "gradualism" now means one retreat after another for the workers.

Furthermore, "democratic" methods accomplish nothing. For capitalism itself destroys every vestige, every pretense, of democracy and maintains itself at last by means of an open, brutal, fascist dictatorship. Capitalism will inevitably do this everywhere.

Why? Because capitalism must drive the standard of living lower all the time. In face of this, if the masses have any freedom at all, any union or party no matter how conservative, meek, legal, respectable, peaceful, they will offer resistance. They will fight for mere existence. Therefore capitalism wipes out "democracy," smashes every trade union, farmers' organization, political party. The workers cannot save themselves or their movement by being humble and cautious.

Right here in the U. S. today workers are killed in strikes when they try to assert their right to collective bargaining under Section 7a of NRA. The militia is called out against them, not against the bosses! Radical parties are kept off foot to deprive the unemployed of the right to vote.

Under these circumstances, to rely on "democracy," to say that we will gain our ends by electing a president and a majority of congress pretty soon, is to disarm the working class while capitalism arms itself to smash us. That is what the Social Democracy has done.

History gives us no instance of a ruling class which voluntarily gives up its power. It took the English Revolution, the French, the American, to smash feudalism. It took four years of civil war in these United States to smash the slaveholding aristocracy of the South (even after a president and congress representing a new class had been elected by parliamentary methods) and to put the new capitalist class in power.

The capitalists will not quietly land over their power to us, fellow worker. We cannot use the capitalist state, system of government, whose very purpose is to maintain capitalism, in order to overthrow it. We have to smash the capitalist state and put the workers' state in its place. Then we can begin to build a new society on new foundations.

The Pacific Movement

Japanese Imperialism Stirs Up Race Hatred in America

By SIMON WILLIAMSON

The Pacific Movement of the Western World has been organized in the United States by Japanese agents and Negro nationalists to create solidarity among the "darker races" against the "white race." Seeking to establish itself as the imperialist power in the Orient, the Japanese government is endeavoring to make allies of the oppressed American Negroes on the basis of "color" relationship.

Branches of this movement are located in all of the large cities where Negroes reside. It is growing daily in numbers and influence among the Negro masses.

For Japan finds herself in a critical position. Her natural resources are limited and her opportunities for expansion are blocked by the imperialist aims of other world powers. She must undersell her American and European rivals to gain monopoly of the oriental market, or by demagogic maneuvers, entrench herself so as to make European and American economic aggression in the east impossible without a serious war. However, thus far it has been impossible for Japan to undersell her rivals.

"Friend" of the Negro

Thus Japan has taken advantage of the unrest existing among oppressed peoples in other capitalist nations, and, through her agents, poses as the "friend" of the American Negro. In this new venture, the powerful Japanese who control the government, and oppress the Japanese workingman, hide their ambition and greed behind the thin cloak of "friendship" for the American Negro workers. They want the Negroes to believe that although they treat their own workers like slaves—long hours, miserable pay, wretched living conditions—they really love the oppressed Negro masses in America with whom they have a "color kinship."

Japan points with pride to her victory over Tsarist Russia. She teaches that this was a conflict between races, rather than rival imperialist interests, which served as a prelude for the overthrow of "White Civilization" and for the establishment of a "Darker Civilization" in its stead.

However, let us turn our attention to the history of the birth and development of Japanese imperialism in the Orient. When Admiral Perry entered Japan in 1854, he found the country in a state of feudalism, and for some years after, Japan remained reluctant to accept Western capitalist culture. But once having accepted Western industrial methods, Japan took over all the features of vicious western imperialism with a vengeance.

In 1894 she engaged in war with China. The price of her victory was Korea, which she gained from China in 1895. However, by 1900 the Chinese peasants joined hands with the Chinese bourgeoisie in a relentless effort to drive out Japanese overlords. It was here that the Japanese imperialists showed their love for the darker Chinese peoples by drowning this revolt in blood.

But if weak, backward China could not defend herself, Tsarist Russia was not going to stand by and see her "dear friend" China fall into the hands of Japan, since imperialist Russia also had her eye on the rich booty Japan had captured from the Chinese. The quarrel between Japan and Russia—a quarrel of two greedy imperialist nations over colonial spoils—culminated in the Russo-Japanese war of 1904. In 1905 Japan was victorious and gained Formosa as an indemnity from Tsarist Russia. This then is the wretched story of Japan's first victory over the "White Civilization" at the expense of China, the "Darker Civilization."

The "Friend" in Action

And once having gained Formosa, whose people greatly resemble the Japanese but whose culture is much older and higher, did Japanese imperialists seek to preserve and to further this culture and insure the growth of a "Darker Civilization"? They most assuredly did not.

Japanese soldiers were sent to Formosa, the native culture was suppressed and an era of terror was inaugurated. The natives were denied educational opportunities and shot down by the thousands whenever they tried to revolt against their awful state. Japanese brutality to the Formosans was equal only to that of the United States in her treatment of Hawaii.

More recently the Japanese entered Manchuria, shot down and slaughtered thousands of natives, slashed off a part of the country and formed the buffer state of Manchukuo.

Three or four years ago, Japan became the competitor of Great Britain and the United States in the South and Central American market. Never before 1930 had Japanese commodities been sold in Panama. The quantity was small but it frightened the American finance capitalists. Japan, on the other hand, realizes that if she is to survive she must become the chief power of the Orient.

In order to accomplish her objective she seeks to win friends among the oppressed people of her rivals. She seeks to fool the American Negroes into supporting her on the basis of "color" friendship in order to build up powerful support in America for her imperialist greed, turning the Negro masses against the capitalist government of America in case a war between Japan and America occurs.

The failure of previous labor movements in America to interpret properly the economic causes for the condition of the American Negro makes his plight the more severe. He is left at the mercy of all sorts of fantastic ideas.

The Negro working masses must understand that it does not matter whether they support the greedy aims of Japanese or American capitalism, in either case they will continue to be oppressed, terrorized and lynched. Oppression of the Negro is a result of economic conditions. It cannot therefore be fought on the basis of "color" alliances, but rather economic alliances—class solidarity, the unity of all workers, black, white, yellow and red in the struggle against all capitalists, Japanese, American, regardless of their color.

Wall Street's Priest

July 1930, called on Father Coughlin to testify.

Although the police chiefs of Flint and Pontiac, the President of the Detroit Citizens Committee, and the personnel manager of General Motors, all testified that there was nothing to fear from the Communists (and who would be quicker to bolster a red scare than police chiefs, citizens committees and personnel managers?) Father Coughlin alone testified that the red menace was acute.

With an eye to publicity and perhaps to his own welfare, he charged that none other than Henry Ford was the man responsible for the insidious advance of communism in Detroit... because he had signed a contract for $13,000,000 with the Soviet Union!

Why did he pick on Henry Ford? We can only record that four Fisher brothers, who all sit on the board of directors of General Motors, are Catholics, and their mother is a member of Father Coughlin's flock. General Motors, of course, did not sign a contract for $13,000,000 with the Soviet Union.

On October 5, 1930, as a reward for his stalwart battle against Communism and the Red Serpent, Father Coughlin was promoted from a small three station hookup to a nation-wide hookup on the Columbia system. His affairs began to run into money. A $750,000 Shrine under way, $200,000 per year for the hookup, perhaps $100,000 more for publicity, mailing records, secretaries, etc. Where does he get it?

We confess we don't know. There is a story, a sort of fairy tale goes the rounds, that his listeners, millions strong, support his colossal business with contributions, a few cents here, a few cents there. We can't deny his tale, for Father Coughlin has never allowed anyone to look into his affairs. However, if we don't know where he gets the original capital, we do know how he tried to increase it, how he has involved in a nice little deal in silver, some five hundred thousand ounces, which might have netted him a neat profit.

LIBERALS

(With Quotations From the Authorities)

LIBERALS are a sensible breed,
Well-tempered and soft-spoken;
Truth in the middle is their creed,
And the peace that's never broken.

They view with calm and liquid eye
The smoke and storm of battle.
Wretched millions scream and die;
They see them die like cattle.

And coldly talk of what they've seen
In terms of the sum and total,
Considered through the golden mean
Of the dead Greek, Aristotle.

They "deplore" and "find regrettable"
This epoch's wretched madness"
That "for convictions most debatable"
Cause all this cosmic sadness"

And call "for a moment's thinking
Of just and impartial sort
To keep the ship of state from sinking

And bring it safe to port."

If one would ask which ship of state
Or which the proper port?
"These questions only agitate,
And they furthermore abort

The movement to pacificate
This raging social sea,
Torn by greed and racial hate
And partisanery."

For "Violence is the Major crime,
And Peace the major goal;
And change will come in God's own time
With Progress of mind and soul."

Yes, Liberals are gods of common-sense,
And so it isn't strange
That wanting change without violence,
They'll get violence without change.

CAPITOL NEWS

In particular, we learn: "Farmers in the Corn Belt in 1935 will be faced with widely varying relationships between feed and livestock prices. Feed scarcity in 1934 reduced the number of bushels of corn equal in value to 100 pounds of live hogs, at farm prices (the so-called corn-hog ratio) to less than two-thirds of the long-time average relationship between corn and hog prices. Spring pigs farrowed in 1934 were 26 percent fewer than in 1933, but corn production was 41 percent less; hence corn prices rose more than the price of hogs."

(So long as this disparity continues, it should be noted, pork and lard must move upward in price. The unfavorable status of the corn-hog ratio holds back the farmer from fattening his swine to the full; he sends them to market before they are fully grown; the aggregate of meat moving into and out of the packing plants diminishes. And the "American standard of living" receives still another body blow!)

Only half as many fall pigs were farrowed in 1934 as in 1933. Present estimates of the 1935 spring pig crop indicate a further 17 percent reduction from the short farrowings of last year. All this should be highly enlightening news to wage-earners, particularly the lowest income groups. It serves to put into its true perspective the New Deal's claim of having augmented mass purchasing power, if it has accomplished nothing else.

MORE CHEERFUL NEWS!

"The drastic reduction in the number of cattle in 1934," to continue, "makes likely a relatively high price of beef for several years. (Still more cheerful news for the wage earner who luxuriates in the benefits of the codes). In the worst drought areas, even the breeding herd has been sacrificed," and a shortage of "foundation stock" seems imminent. The situation has become so acute, that the Department of Agriculture advises:

"For all classes of livestock the keynote should be maintenance and building up of breeding herds—the fattening of livestock should be limited rather than to sacrifice foundation stock."

SAGA OF SCARCITY

To continue with the saga of scarcity, how about wheat? Farm stocks of wheat on January 1 declined to 136 million bushels, "the smallest quantity for that date since these data became available in 1926." Market stocks amounted to 91 million bushels, the smallest figure since January 1928". With oats and barley, the same story: scarcity, scarcity, and still more scarcity.

Butter production? The total December production of 103 million pounds was the lowest for that month since 1929. Cheese production? The December total of 23 million pounds was 8 percent less than in 1933. Wholesale butter prices in New York have reached such a high level that for almost the first time in American history, substantial quantities of imports from New Zealand and Denmark have hurdled over the tariff barrier of 14 cents per pound. As for stocks of eggs in cold storage on January 1, they were 11 percent lower than a year earlier and 35 percent lower than the 5-year average. Little wonder then, that egg "prices have shown considerable resistance to the usual seasonal decline."

The New Deal cannot of course be blamed for the drought. But the effects of the drought would be much less severe had not the Triple A program of man-induced scarcity been superimposed on a good, stiff dose of natural scarcity. Capitalist economists in the U.S.A. have long professed to be scornful of Russian agricultural policies; that is, forced collectivization and liquidation of kulaks. These policies, it is argued, were responsible for grain shortages and the destruction of livestock, to the detriment of Russian standards of living.

These economists can now rest from their labors of Red-baiting. If they have scorn to lavish, they can lavish it at home. The AAA program of 1933-1935 will go down in economic history as one of the maddest orgies of capitalist sabotage ever known to man.

The Hokey Long Way

HOOEY LONG says to the press, "Organize a Share-the-Wealth Club and elect me President. Then you can have a house, auto, radio plus $2,500 a year." Everybody will admit that the masses in this land could have plenty and security. The big question is: Is Hokey Long's way the way to get them?

Hoover said, "Elect me President and you will have a chicken in every pot and two automobiles in every garage." Franklin Delano Roosevelt said, "Hoover is a wash-out. Elect me President and you will get a New Deal."

Hokey Long says, "Roosevelt is a flop. Elect me President and you will have a house, car, radio, etc." What guarantee can Hokey Long give to the masses that if they elect a clown like himself instead of an oyster like Hoover or a perpetual snail like Roosevelt, he can end the woes under the capitalist system? The answer is, None.

Long plays the capitalists' game. Long also prepares the way for Fascism, for the ruin of the masses, because he distracts attention from the one way in which they can get freedom and plenty.

Forget the Hokey Long palaver!
Do not expect him to give you the factories, the mines, the houses that you have built! Prepare to take them!

Ask Long why he helped to smash the longshoremen's strike! Why he keeps the workers in the Lane Cotton Mills in peonage!

Build the unions! Build the Unemployed Leagues! Build the revolutionary party! That is the Only Way Out!

A Bloc with Reformists?

IS the Communist Party preparing to make a bloc with "liberal" politicians to form a Labor Party? To make not only a zig-zag to the right but a leap out into empty space?

In New York it is participating in a "united front" anti-Hoover meeting with representatives of the Republican and the Democratic parties! Presumably this will help the workers to know their true friends.

In the Sacramento criminal syndicalism trial, Darcy, C. P. district leader, testifies that "a group of left congressmen" might set up the "new" government to deliver the masses.

An editorial in the Daily Worker for March 11 comments on the organization of a bloc of "liberal" congressmen in Washington. The "test" which, according to this mouthpiece of the infallible revolutionary (?) leader of the masses, the workers must use on these "liberals" is whether they fight against Roosevelt's war appropriations, for the prevailing war on public works, for H. R. 2827, for civil rights. If no, this is only "a new trick to gain the support of labor with false promises."

If yes—and a "liberal" might easily vote thus—are the workers then to accept these "liberals" on the recommendation of the C.P. as making trustworthy and not false promises to labor? Are these "liberals" then to be included in the mass-class-federated-class struggle—not reformist—not revolutionary—highest form of united front—"Labor Party" which the C. P. is advocating?

The C. P., with all its prestige and apparatus, after six years of crisis knows the masses have no confidence in it, will not respond to its call. Therefore this "Labor Party" cry must be raised. Some typical C. P. "boring-from-within" other organizations, especially unions, is to be pulled off.

The workers, if this trickery succeeds, will be led

Unemployed in Ind. Organize Out of the SP

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—A state convention of the unemployed is planned in Indiana, following a trip through the eastern part of the state by Arnold Johnson, secretary of the National Unemployed League, and Robert Birchman. Talking with the unemployed in the important centers, they were urged to bring the N.U.L. in to help organize. They visited Fort Wayne, Muncie, Marion, Wabash, South Bend, Kokomo, Huntington, Hartford City and Indianapolis.

Conditions among the unemployed continue to get worse. An unemployed man in Kokomo said, "Since they broke up our organization here, I have been out on my own again. I have six in my family and get $2.40 per week for everything. That means we are slowly starving."

"Organize or Starve"

In Muncie the unemployed had a strong organization, but its life was short. A leading Socialist said: "We had them organized but we didn't know whether to make the unemployed into temporary members of the Socialist Party or not. While we were discussing this, the organization went to pieces."

Marion has had all kinds of organizations; now they are all trying to revive. In Wabash the Unemployed Council was taken over and smashed by the American Legion.

Indiana's unemployed have gone through many disappointments; but now they are ready to organize again. "It is organize or starve," they told us in place after place.

S. P. Begins Writing Letters

The Socialist Party is starting a campaign of letters to its members, from at least four places, trying to get them to organize into the Indiana Unemployed Union, which has its base in the small town of Montezuma. Most of the unemployed never heard of the place. The letters come from Lasser, Porter, Rasmussen and other leaders.

The basis for this organization is a factional fight. The Socialist Party of Indiana has withdrawn from the Socialist Party, and in turn has been suspended by the National Executive Committee. The fight resulted in rump conventions, a referendum, then another referendum on the first, threats and squabbles of all sorts.

"The Socialists can't organize themselves," a former militant S. P. leader remarked, "so now they are sending us letters from all directions on how to organize the unemployed. I think this Indiana Unemployed Union is just a way for one gang to get another gang out."

Hearing of the victories of the N.U.L., Indiana's unemployed welcomed the news of the plan to organize the Indiana Unemployed League.

Birchman is staying on the job, with others from the state, while Johnson has gone to Kentucky for the first convention of the Kentucky Unemployed League.

PITY THE POOR OWNERS

"We have before us the instance of a father, with a wife and seven children, working in an apartment... over four years, receiving $85 a month for 70 hours a week, and compelled to live in part on charity from several directions. They are proof of the increasing distress of building owners."—From the report of the New York real estate arbitration committee.

straight into a swamp of confusion, into an alliance with "liberal" politicians, into a by-path which can end only in zero results, as did the Federated Farmer Labor Party-LaFollette adventure of the C. P. in 1924. Meantime, precious time and energy which should go into building up a genuinely effective revolutionary party in this period of insurgency among the masses, is lost.

Our answer to these proposals of "unity" with anybody and anything is: Unity of the revolutionary forces! Build the Workers Party!

The Socialist Party

RECONCILIATION will be the major note at the National Committee meeting of the Socialist Party to be held in Buffalo on March 16 and 17. The New York "Militants" and the Old Guard will both go there with the aim of winning to their respective support the reformist groups of McLevy, Maurer and Hoan.

Aggressive moves are avoided by both the "Militants" and the Old Guard precisely out of fear of alienating the McLevys, Maurers and Hoans. That is why the Old Guard at the eleventh hour seated the delegates from the branches it had suspended at the recent New York Central Committee meeting—after the delegates in question had gone home!

However, the nine suspended branches have not been reinstated. The "Militants" have called a meeting to protest the high handed action of the Old Guard.

The appeal for the meeting is addressed: "To All Comrades—Left, Right or Center." It is accompanied by Norman Thomas' open letter to the members of the N. Y. Socialist Party which endorses the "Militants'" protest and meeting.

Thomas concludes his appeal: "I ask your support in order to save our party. This is not remembered, is an issue independent of, and infinitely more important than any opinion you may have on the Declaration of Principles, or the United Front."

Unity above principles! Thomas repeats his old slogan; this time with the aim of making the most of the rift between Oneal and Waldman within the Old Guard to win over sections of the Right. Waldman may yet become the "common enemy." Be that as it may.

There is as yet no clear Left wing group inside the "Militants". As matters stand now the elements in control are not adverse to compromise. The Socialist Call is intended not as the organ of the centrist "Militants" alone, but a rallying center of all "Socialists", that is, reformists, centrists and revolutionaries.

The probable compromise at Buffalo will settle nothing. For it can take place only on an unprincipled basis. Discontent among militant and revolutionary Socialists is certain to arise.

The need of the moment in the Socialist Party is a clear cut Left wing grouping which will conduct a principled struggle against the Old Guard and reformists and those who conciliate with them. For this is required a revolutionary Marxist program on the basic questions of the revolution and on the immediate problems confronting the American working class.

QUESTION BOX

S. B. BRONX—

Question: Where can I find formulated the idea of the increasing misery of the masses under capitalism?

Answer: Marx summarizes his demonstration of the laws of motion of capitalist society as follows ("Capital", vol. I): "The greater the social wealth, the functioning capital, the extent and energy of its growth, and, therefore, also the absolute mass of the proletariat and the productivity of its labor, the greater is the industrial reserve army. The same causes which develop the expansive power of capital, develop also the labor-power at its disposal. The relative mass of the industrial reserve army increases therefore with the potential energy of wealth. But the greater this reserve-army in proportion to the active labor-army, the greater is the mass of a consolidated surplus-population, whose misery is in inverse ratio to its torment of labor. The more extensive, finally, the Lazarus-layers of the working class, and the industrial reserve-army, the greater is the official pauperism. THIS IS THE ABSOLUTE GENERAL LAW OF CAPITALIST ACCUMULATION. Like all other laws it is modified in its workings by many circumstances..." (Emphasis in original.)

Darcy Takes The Stand In Sacramento

ism in Russia in 1917 and even went so far as to assign the setting up of the "new" government to "a group of left Congressmen"! Where Mimi said that "the workers would have to take hold of the capitalist state and destroy it", Darcy made absolutely no mention of the class nature of the state!

How the C. P. Uses the Courts

Not satisfied with opportunist betrayals of Marxism, the Communist Party is further aggravating the trial by using the capitalist court as a rostrum to denounce its political opponents. No opportunity has been left slip for introducing into the proceedings the maximum amount of Stalinist "argument" against the Socialist Party, the Workers Party and Lovestone. Whole pages of slander and lies against Comrade Muste and the former A.W.P. have been dragged in. Darcy went out of his way to read something that called Comrade Cannon a "petty bourgeois careerist" and so on.

In this barrage the capitalists as real people and not abstractions—Calif. Packing Corporation, Associated Farmers, Bank of America—have been completely forgotten since the first of the week. The prosecution and the court have contented themselves with playing the merely passive role of ruling out of evidence almost anything that would go to show what the actual policy of the Communist Party (last year's policy) is.

Outside the courtroom, however,

Will They Make Them?

The Paris Commune

By JOSEPH CARTER

"When the Commune was set up in Paris after the war of 1870, we know what bloody work had to be done by French soldiers to rescue the capital and the country from the deadly menace." (New York Times, February 8, 1934.)

In these words the spokesmen of the American master class rightfully consider themselves the heirs of the butchers of the heroic Paris Commune of three score and four years ago. And four days after this editorial the bloody work against the Communards was repeated in the civilized Europe of today, by the reactionary, Fascist soldiers of Dollfuss against the Austrian workers.

Violence against the oppressed, against the masses, that is patriotism and justice; but violence of the masses against the handful of exploiters for the purpose of building a free and human society, that is treason, a "deadly menace" against which all means are justified.

"All this gaudy, which the party of order never fail, in their orgy of blood, to raise against their victims," wrote the founder of the modern militant workers' movement after the suppression of the Paris Commune, "only proves that the bourgeois of our days consider himself the legitimate successor to the baron of old, who thought every weapon in his own hand fair against the plebeian while in the hands of the plebeian a weapon of any kind constituted in itself a crime."

How true this is to this day! The march of Fascism in Europe, the growth of the vigilante groups in the United States, the terrorism against the trade unions, the Hearst red-baiting campaign, these are the acts of an outlived, but desperate parasitic class which glories in its Paris Commune traditions.

Deadly Menace to Whom?

"The Commune was a deadly menace to the old world, founded on slavery and exploitation," wrote the incomparable leader of the international and Russian working class, Lenin. Provoked by the reactionary national government, the workers, supported by the small shopkeepers of Paris, established their own government on March 18, 1871.

In the seventy days of workers' rule, the church was separated from the state, education was taken out of the hands of the priests, the system of fines for workers was abolished, night work for bakers was prohibited, plans made for the taking over by workers' associations of factories and shops abandoned by the former owners.

The standing army, which stood apart from the people as a power for its oppression was replaced by the armed people. The Commune abolished the old apparatus of government and replaced it by an administration in which the officials received the equivalent of the average wages of the Parisian workers. In a word, they rid themselves of the reactionary government and put in its place "a truly democratic proletarian government."

This was too much for the parasites who were accustomed to live by the labor of the masses! The national government of France could not suppress the rebellious workers by itself. The French "national patriots" did not hesitate to call upon their yesterday's enemy-in-war, the Germany of Bismarck, to supply hordes to suppress the Paris Commune, murder French workers, destroy Paris. And Bismarck willingly supplied the aid. Once again showing the internationalist character of the class struggle, which knows no national borders! An excellent lesson for the workers!

Toll of the Bloody Work

The bloody work was successful. 30,000 Parisians were brutally murdered, about 45,000 were arrested, some executed, thousands were exiled or imprisoned. 100,000 victims was the toll paid by the heroic Paris Communards. In this way, the narrow-minded and short sighted reactionaries thought that they would once and for all do away with the threats of workers' revolution!

What an illusion! For the development of capitalism itself, bringing workers together in large factories, mines and mills, creates the conditions for renewed workers' struggles, for trade union and political organization, for revolutionary action. From the defeat of the Paris Commune the workers learn the lessons of their future conflicts.

The Communards had no strong trade unions or clear headed, trained workers' party. The Parisian workers of 1871 were in the main artisans or workers in small factories. The development of capitalism had not yet reached that stage where the working class could be sufficiently developed to unequivocally go forward to socialism. They had little experience of past workers' battles to go by.

That is why the Communards did not understand the need of concentrating the political power in the hands of the Central Committee of the National Guard, starting an immediate offensive against the national government at Versailles, taking over the national bank, before proceeding with the elections for the Commune.

Russian Workers Learn Lessons of Commune

Drowned in blood, the Commune has remained an inspiration for the producing masses the world over. As the first example of a workers' government it served as the guide to the victorious Russian working class.

They built their revolutionary leadership, the Bolshevik Party, with a clear understanding of the tasks of the revolution.

The Bolshevik Party understood that the old state apparatus, whether its form be that of a monarchy or of a democratic republic, had to be smashed and replaced by workers' institutions. Out of the Russian class struggle arose the Soviets, the councils of workers from the factories, soldiers from the barracks and forts, peasants from the fields. Later the Soviet form arose also in Western Europe, showing that it is not a purely Russian phenomenon.

Under the leadership of the Bolshevik Party, the Russian workers and peasants, organized in Soviets, overthrew Russian capitalism and established their workers' government as the first stage of the world revolution to usher in international

Race Prejudice

In reporting the gangster attack of Ben Gold's (Fur Workers Industrial Union) thugs on members of the Joint Council of Furriers, A. F. of L., the Workers Age (Lovestone) says: "B. Collenberg was attacked by an Italian thug, not a furrier, on the payroll of Ben Gold. This same Italian thug was involved in the crippling of Joe Ferber some months ago." Appeals to race prejudice so strongly and correctly condemned by Lovestone when made by Stalinists in Local 22, I.L.G.W. U., are apparently O.K. in the fur market.

Reviewing the Crisis

10U—SOS—FDR—NRA — AAA
—PDQ—SOL. —M.L.

Building the A. F. of L.

From the Swan Song of the T.U. U.L., Daily Worker, March 11, we quote:

"It is no accident that where the T.U.U.L. unions were most active (coal, garment, textile and marine) the workers were most able to build mass unions in the A. F. of L."

It is a fact known to all that the T.U.U.L.—(C. P.)—denounced the A. F. of L. union in each of these industries as "tools of Wall Street", "Fascists", "stool pigeon agencies", "White Guards", etc. etc. Under this barrage "the workers were most able to build mass unions in the A. F. of L." It therefore appears that the Stalinist turn is not a change in policy but in tactics. Finding that the more they attacked the A. F. of L. the more the workers supported it, they have decided to support the A. F. of L. in the hope that this will drive the workers away from it.

From the New York Herald Tribune, March 9, we quote: "The move to glorify Stalin was begun by his colleagues in the Polburo and spread rapidly down through the Communist Party ranks until today it behooves every speaker at a political meeting at Moscow or the provinces to pay glowing tribute to the dictator before taking his seat." A picked group of peasant delegates to the recent collective farm congress fell into line easily. Here are a few phrases selected from their speeches. Delegate Sid-orov—"Our dear, our warmly beloved Stalin," and "our beloved friend and comrade, our chief, our Stalin." Delegate Filipenko—"Long live our dear leader, our darling Stalin." Delegate Masenova—"Our shock worker, our best of best, our Stalin."

On this showing it must be admitted that the peasant delegates are one up on the American Stalinists in this international servility competition. However, knowing the flexibility of back-bones and knees plus the readiness of tongue of such "leaders" as Olgin, Browder, Mike Gold, etc., we are sure that they can catch up and surpass any and all contenders before many moons have passed.

Olgin, God, and Father Divine

The New York press reports that M. J. Olgin, editor of The Freiheit, Communist Party Jewish daily, writes in Pravda: "Two hundred and fifty thousand ignorant, disease ridden, poverty stricken Negroes live in Harlem. Thousands consider Father Divine their God, and James W. Ford their political leader."

Hailed before Judge Panken on some charge, Father Divine was asked—"Are you God?" Divine had to answer, "No, but thousands of people believe I am and I like them to think so."

If James Ford were to answer truthfully the question—"Are you the political leader of Harlem's Negroes?" he would have to answer—"No but some people like to be fooled and Olgin is the boy to fool them."

socialism. On the basis of the experiences of the Commune they succeeded in warding off internal counter-revolution and imperialist intervention. That is how the present workers' state, the Soviet Union, was established.

Commemorate the Commune—Build Workers Party

The lessons of the Commune and of the Russian revolution must become part of the living movement of the American workers. In the present period, the need of a revolutionary organization which unites the most intelligent, courageous and experienced workers on the basis of these lessons which form an integral part of Marxism, and puts these lessons into daily practice, is greater than ever. The true commemoration of the Paris Commune is the building of the Workers' Party of the United States as a section of the coming Fourth International of revolutionary labor.

CAPITOL NEWS LETTER

By JACK ELDER

A BIGGER AND BETTER BOARD THE WORKS-RELIEF BILL

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Organized labor, the A. F. of L. leaders once again inform the world at large, has no use for strikes as a method of bringing employers to terms. Organized labor would much rather depend on laws which "guarantee" the right of collective bargaining, and on government boards "empowered" to put such laws into effect.

So argue Green and Company in defense of the Wagner Labor Relations Bill, upon which the Senate Labor Committee is now conducting hearings. Pass this bill, they plead with the committee members. If you don't pass it, they warn, wage-earners will fly off the handle; they will become enraged and strike; and then what will become of the New Deal's pretty little dream of class collaboration?

The stupidity of the A. F. of L. leaders transcends all understanding. They have had almost two years of Section 7a and of Wagner boards, Garrison boards, Biddle boards, Wolman boards, Stacy boards, et al. The statute, on the one hand, and the boards on the other, have brought American trade unions absolutely nothing. Company unionism has flourished as never before; the technique for kidding wage earners out of striking has been perfected; employers have thrown the orders of the labor boards into the wastebasket; and President Roosevelt has condescended to deliver several swift kicks in the pants to his "Supreme Court" of industrial relations.

What does all this mean to Green and Co.?

Not that "guarantees" of collective bargaining are hardly worth the paper they are written on. Not that labor boards are good for nothing but sugaring the pill of compulsory arbitration. Not that trade unions must, given a capitalist society, rely on their own capacity for direct and militant action.

Because Section 7a has not worked, the A. F. of L. leaders reason, let us have more of it. Because the law has been a dead-letter, let us have a bigger, better and more elaborate law of the same sort. Because labor boards have been incapable of forcing anti-union employers into collective bargaining, let us confer a permanent status upon the boards and redefine their purely theoretical powers.

Section 7a, it is true, provided the psychological push which started the great organizational campaigns of 1933 in the iron and steel, automobile manufacturing, bituminous coal and other industries. But by relying upon the abstract rights of Section 7a rather than upon self-help, the A. F. of L. stultified its ability to profit from that initial push. By proposing what is on the face of it a tacit bargain—enact the Wagner bill and you need not fear strikes any longer—the A. F. of L. prepares to paralyze the labor movement in the United States, once and for all time.

THE WORKS-RELIEF BILL

Successful for the time being, in their drive against high wages, Administration forces have induced the Senate to knock the "prevailing wages" amendment out of the Work-Relief bill. The substitute amendment which was passed leaves the whole matter of wage rates, for any practical purpose, to the President's sole discretion. This means, all things considered, that $50 a month will receive official sanction as the government's idea of how large a living wage ought to be.

It was hardly to be expected, not-

Nations Tatter On Brink of Another Imperialist War

Capitalists Profited $12,000 For Every Death in Last

The imminence of the Second World War was vividly demonstrated last Saturday by the action of Hitler Germany when she tore up the Treaty of Versailles and threw it in the faces of the other European powers. Henceforth, announced the Nazi leader, compulsory military service will be introduced in Germany and the Third Reich will enter openly into the race for arms on land, sea and in the air.

This announcement came at the end of a week filled with talk—and acts—for rearmament. And it came as no surprise, despite their public expressions of righteous indignation, to the responsible—or to be exact, irresponsible—rulers of France, Italy, Great Britain—and the United States. That Germany has been arming ever since Hitler came to power has been an open secret for many months. The pretence that she was not had to end sooner or later. The fact that Hitler chose last Saturday to end it only illustrates the increasing tension.

The Second World War

After less than seventeen years after the end of the "war to end war," preparations for the second World War are now publicly proclaimed. The death merchants throughout the world are happy. The "dollar-a-year" boys are practicing drill. And the war-pseudo-chology-making machines are being oiled.

Meanwhile the conditions of the masses of the people of the world become more desperate. Unemployment and destitution increases. Living standards of the employed workers are being driven down either by direct reductions in wages or by the increasing cost of food and clothing. Appropriations for relief of the victims of the profit system are curtailed while appropriations for battle ships, guns, etc., are doubled and tripled.

Yet the following facts, showing what war means to the masses of the people, have been repeated time and again:

What War Means
The fact that nearly 10,000,000 young men were killed in the First World War, that 20,000,000 more were wounded, and that prisoners or "missing" numbered nearly 6,000,000 does not deter the capitalists for one minute from making ready for the Second World War. In addition to soldiers killed, wounded and "missing" in the last war, famine, disease and pestilence took a total of over 28,000,000 people "among the civil population alone," according to the Swedish statistician, Hersch.

Left fatherless as a result of the war were 9,000,000 children. War widows numbered about 5,000,000 and some 10,000,000 were rendered homeless due to the war.

Direct money costs of the war for all belligerent countries amounted to over $200,000,000,000. For the U.S. alone, during the two years, the direct cost was over $22,000,000,000. Total indirect costs (property damage, etc.) amounted to about $150,000,000,000 for all countries. The total cost of the war in 1918 was $224,000,000,000.

According to a pamphlet written by Senator Nye it cost about $25,000 to kill a soldier.

Who Won?

But for every casualty a profit of $12,000 was made by the capitalist class, according to Lehman-Russbult, German expert on war. Profits of leading American corporations ranged from 25 per cent to 3,000 per cent and more. Eighteen leading United States companies increased their net profits of $74,650,000 for the 1912-1914 period to $337,000,000 for the period 1916-1918. The number of known multimillionaires in the U.S. increased from

NEW CLASSES IN SCHOOL

Two new classes have been added to the courses in the International Workers School. The first in elementary Russian, will begin Thursday, March 28th at 7 P.M. under the guidance of Sara Weber. The other is a course in public speaking for members of the Workers Party and Spartacus Youth League, to begin Monday, April 1st at 8:40 P.M. with Martin Glee as instructor. Registrations should be sent to the School office at 2 West 15th Street.

Sacramento C. S. Trial Near End

Judge Rules Case to Continue Despite Ford's Illness

SACRAMENTO, Cal., March 15.—The Sacramento criminal syndicalism case is coming to a close. Practically the last two weeks have been spent reading to the jury. A significant and interesting point of the trial came when Attorney Gallagher, in trying to show that the Communist Party would never think of calling a revolution without the support of a majority, wanted to introduce evidence about Germany.

"I can't see where Germany has any bearing on the case," the judge said.

"It certainly has," Gallagher shouted. "We intend to show that in Germany, where the Communist Party was supported by 6,000,000 voters, the Party allowed Hitler to come to power without raising a finger, because it did not have a majority behind it!"

But most of the time has been spent by the I.L.D. attorneys going over the 205 exhibits of "communist literature" introduced by the prosecution. Scattered excerpts have been read to the jury on almost every conceivable topic: left social fascism has been followed by the Soviet Army, industrial unionism by self-determination in the black belt, conditions of the working youth by the Labor Party. Absolutely no attempt has been made to present a coherent picture of communism to the court. Everything has been garbled, confused, disorganized.

Early this week defendant A. G. Ford, weakened by his 6 months' confinement in jail, had to be taken to the hospital with a serious attack of pneumonia. In this situation the judge cynically ruled that the case should go on, minus defendant Ford!

A BRITISH PATRIOT

NEW YORK (FP).—Germany's rearmament move came on the heels of a loan of some $200,000,000 granted her by Sir Henry Deterding, international oil magnate and Standard Oil rival, according to an exclusive story by Johannes Steel in the New York Post.

Cannon Rorty And Chas. Malamuth Will Tell of Cal. Terror

James P. Cannon, Editor of the New Militant, James Rorty, author and newspaperman and Charles Malamuth, well known journalist, will address a meeting at Irving Plaza this Sunday evening, March 24 on "Class Struggles in the West"

Comrade Cannon has just returned from a two months tour of the country, including one month in California, the heart of recent strikes, terror, and class war. He will touch on the aftermath of the great San Francisco general strike, the Sacramento criminal syndicalism trials, on his visit to Tom Mooney at San Quentin, on the famous Agricultural and Cannery Workers Union, on the vigilante terror, and (no picture of California is complete without them) on the Sinclair Epitaphs and the Utopian movement, and last on the rise of the Workers Party.

James Rorty and Charles Malamuth have just arrived in New York after their now famous expulsion from the Imperial Valley, where they were investigating the incredible peon system of slavery among the agricultural workers.

Democracy Violent In S.P.

Led by Julius Gerber a crew of Old Guard Socialists broke into the New York Ypsel office late last Monday and took possession of all the property therein. Milt Cohen, a young Socialist, who accidentally wandered into the office during the raid was severely beaten up.

These desperate steps taken by the "democratic socialist" gentlemen were an outcome of the conflict between the City Executive Committee of the Socialist Party and the Y.P.S.L. following the latter's "New Leader" as an organ of the Old Guard promoting splits in the S.P. and as unworthy of the support of the young Socialists.

The S.P. Committee retaliated by preferring charges against the entire Ypsel committee; disqualified the candidates for city organizer and city secretary, in a pending election, because they voted for the resolution against the "New Leader," and called upon the Ypsels to postpone the elections. At the same time they appointed a special investigation committee. The Ypsels defied these decisions and proceeded with plans for the elections.

The Executive Committee of the S.P. met last Monday evening, according to the Ypsel office: "with only 7 members attending out of a total of 17, they accepted the report of the subcommittee appointed to investigate the YPSL, doing so by a vote of 6-1. The committee consisting of Algernon Lee, Bela Low

NUL Blasts Roosevelt's Relief Plan

Like Trying to Fight A Forest Fire With Tea Cups

COLUMBUS, OHIO.—Criticizing the Administration's social security program as an attempt to "extinguish a forest fire with a tea-cup of water," the National Unemployed League has issued a tentative draft of the Workers Security Bill which it is sponsoring. This draft is being submitted to state and local Unemployed Leagues for approval and recommendations before being put into final form. Suggestions should be sent to the National Unemployed League, 232 North High Street, Columbus, Ohio.

An extensive drive to win public support for the bill is under way. Plans are going forward for the League's Caravan to Washington in May to push the bill before Congress adjourns.

The comprehensive bill drafted by the League is called "A bill to limit the hours of labor, to provide additional appropriations for public works, and for the relief of the unemployed and to establish a system of unemployment and social insurance."

30-Hour Week

It provides for the 30-hour week for all national, state and local government employees and all wage employees in industry, mining, transportation, agriculture, domestic, technical, clerical and professional services and "all other occupations".

The minimum wage is fixed at $30 a week, with the prevailing union rate wherever it is higher.

A ten-billion dollar public works program is provided; the money to be spent within one year. This program is to include the building of modern low-rental homes; an up-to-date, fully equipped county hospital in every county; modern libraries and recreational centers in every city and county; rural electrification, and elimination of grade crossings.

Nothing For War

It is specified that none of this money shall be spent for military or naval purposes.

Immediate establishment of a system of unemployment and social insurance by the Secretary of Labor is authorized. All unemployed workers and farmers are to be cared for with insurance equal to average local wages, the funds to be raised by a government tax on inheritances and gifts and on income of individuals and corporations where they exceed $5,000. The insurance is in no case to be

Membership, Trade Union, Strike, Unemployed Work Shows Gain; Daily Paper Up for Discussion

Nearly 100 active workers, representing all important industries such as steel, mining, automobiles, textiles, rubber, gathered in the Active Workers Conference of the Workers Party of the U.S. held at Pittsburgh in connection with the plenary session of the National Committee of the Party March 15-18. The outstanding impression left by the conference was that of the remarkable strides taken by the Party during the first three months of its existence in carrying out the six months Program of Action adopted by the founding convention of the Party last December.

The fusion of the former Communist League of America and the former American Workers Party on which the formal launching of the party was based has been accomplished at the center and in the branches. Fundamentally, the problems and issues now confronting the organization are those of the new Party and not of the old organizations.

Membership Increases

An increase of nearly 40 percent in membership has been recorded. The work of projecting the party and its membership in the unions, unemployed leagues and other mass organizations is proceeding everywhere.

A great impetus has been given to unemployed work as is symbolized most dramatically perhaps by the appearance of Mass Action, the weekly organ of the National Unemployed League, to which the Party has given support and assistance. The Party membership has taken a prominent part in a score of strike struggles in every section of the country.

The Party as a whole, and especially its California section, has assumed a leading role in the labor defense movement in the United States in connection with the Sacramento criminal syndicalism trial. The destructive policies of the Communist Party in this trial have been made a national and will be made an international issue by the Workers Party.

The Party print shop has been reorganized and provided with new equipment and is now in a position to turn out regularly the party organs, its pamphlets, etc.

While the fulfillment of the pamphlet program has lagged somewhat, an educational department has been set up, an International Workers School giving 11 courses established in New York, one or more classes organized in practically every branch of the Party, three sets of lessons have been sent out and others are ready, and preparations for the first session of a national training school are under way.

S. Y. L. Doubled Membership

The youth organization, Spartacus Youth League, has doubled its membership, issued its monthly organ regularly and immensely improved its organizational set-up.

Comrade Cannon, the editor of the New Militant, has made a coast to coast tour. Comrade Muste, the National Secretary, has visited practically all of the party centers as far west as Minneapolis, Davenport and St. Louis. One other tour as far west as Chicago has been carried out.

External relations have been established with the Secretariat of the I.C.L. in Europe, with the newly organized Revolutionary Party in Holland, product of the merger on March 10 of the Revolutionary Socialist Party and the Independent Socialist Party of Holland, and with parties and groups in Canada, South Africa, Australia, China and other countries who have declared for the Fourth International and stand on the same programmatic foundation as the Workers Party of the U.S.

Many important problems confronting the revolutionary movement in the United States and abroad were discussed by the National Committee, the Active Workers Conference, or both. These include the Labor Party, Third Party, Huey Long, Coughlin, etc. developments; the recent events in the Soviet Union; the war danger as exemplified in occurrences in the international arena; the tumult in the Socialist Party of the United States and the proper course to be pursued by the revolutionary party toward the splits which appear likely to occur in the S. P.; the present position in the trade unions and the unemployed organizations. The decisions of the National Committee on these points will be published in this and forthcoming issues of the New Militant or communicated to the membership and to the workers in other ways.

A Daily Paper

Impressed, on the one hand, by the numerous opportunities springing up before the Party and the eagerness of the Party membership and the workers for information about the Party and its position, and on the other hand by the swift pace of events both in the labor movement in the U. S. and on the international arena, the National Committee authorized the Political Committee to continue a canvass which it had tentatively begun as to the possibilities of raising a sustaining fund for a daily paper.

BUSINESS AND FINANCE: "To grant the soldiers' bonus would be a national calamity," says Eugene Grace, President of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, which profited to the extent of $49,427,000 on war orders. Grace received a bonus of $3,600,000 from his company. "I wonder if it wouldn't be all right to pay a soldier $5 a day," he asks. . . . Evidence discloses that the Wierton Steel Co. paid the officers of its company union $25 per month, permitted them to meet on company time, and paid a $6,000 printing bill for the union. . . . The Federal District Court of Delaware holds that the Wierton Company union was free from intimidation, domination or control by the management. . . . "Roosevelt is just the man we need now," announces the arch-reactionary magazine Steel, organ of the steel bosses.

Nation-Wide Strike of 500,000 Bituminous Coal Miners Looms in April

Short Sweet and Victorious Under Rank and File Control

Danger of Separate Agreements by Leaders

By GERRY ALLARD

Unless leaders of the existing miners' unions succeed in stifling the rank and file through means of separate local agreements, there will be a national walkout of some 500,000 bituminous coal diggers beginning April 1, of this year.

It is unlikely that a compromise will be effected suitable to the mine workers by the time current wage agreements expire. Turnout in the hard coal region, Illinois, the Southwest, Washington and Nova Scotia is teaching John L. Lewis, International president of the United Mine Workers of America, a few lessons.

The rank and file are again cracking down on their leaders and from Washington, D. C., Lewis has been making statements that appear "progressive". The dictator of the largest union in the soft coal industry is bellyaching for action on the part of the solons on the Black-Connery 30-hour week and the Guffey-Snyder coal stabilization bills. The favorable enactment of these bills by Congress would save Lewis a great deal of embarrassment. It would enable him to consummate wage agreements with the national coal operators association with a minimum of friction.

Never before have the bituminous coal miners of this country been in a better position to strike. What is more, they can make the strike so effective that it will prove to be short, sweet and victorious. That is, of course, providing the rank and file can exercise control over the strike situation.

For the first time in 30 years, the bituminous coal miners' wage agreements expire simultaneously. With the wrecking of the central competitive field through Lewis' treachery in 1927-28, states and parts of states were signed separately, thus enabling one district to be pitted against another, much to the profit of the coal operators. Now, however, the miners, through the peculiar contradictions of the NRA, are so organized that any attempt to split them will be the signal for wide-spread action, both externally and internally.

Dual Movements

Some readers will perhaps point to the dual unions in several states as a hindrance to real success. This situation does contain an element of danger. But it is precisely this situation which is causing Lewis to step a little livelier than he has in the past. If he is to hold his army he will have to produce the goods. If he doesn't, the dual movements, and new revolts from within the U.M.W.A. will inevitably amalgamate their forces.

Prior to the NRA, Lewis' organization was practically reduced to a paper union. The complete servility of the U.M.W.A. leaders to the coal operators had almost destroyed, by pressure from within and without, the last semblance of solid union organization in the bituminous coal industry. Along came the NRA and Lewis wasted no time. Approximately 350,000 new members were thrown into his lap. The Appalachian region is solidly organized. With the exception of spots as in Alabama, parts of Kentucky and the coke region of Pennsylvania, the U.M.W.A. and various independent unions have the miners pretty well under control.

Demands

The outstanding demands of the miners are the six-hour day, 5-day week and substantial wage increases.

The 7-hour day, product of pressure of the miners in the Appalachian region under the NRA, has robbed the coal operators of some powerful arguments. Heretofore, coal operators argued that the shorter work day would destroy the coal industry due to the competitive threat of oil and gas. Class collaborating trade union leaders and conservative coal miners were lulled to sleep by this argument. However, the 7-hour day has proven to be both feasible and practicable. Coal operators have maintained their usual production, in some cases increased it, and what is more, the coal operators have been making larger profits.

Separate Agreements

In the beginning of this article I pointed to the only condition which prevents an effective national walkout in 24 states where bituminous coal is mined. Separate agreements are nothing new. It was an effective tactic in the days when the coal industry was a young, booming industry. The industry was decentralized and the market was usually favorable. By permitting one coal operator to recognize the union and concede favorable wage increases, this tactic almost ruined stubborn operators. It served the purpose of entrenching a rising labor union.

Under present circumstances, the coal industry being one of the most decadent sections of capitalist economy with operators consolidated or associated the tactic of separate agreements has a reverse effect. It is on this bone that all present coal miners' unions might break their teeth, consequently defeating the miners at a most opportune time to advance their cause and interest.

All Males Under 30 in CCC Plan of N.Y. Relief Bureau

Second Letter From A Relief Investigator

The Home Relief Bureau is a tremendously important institution in the life of New York City. It thrives and prospers. Every month larger and larger sums are allocated to it. However, it is one industry which the capitalists would like to curtail. They look favorably upon all schemes to contract its field of endeavor—from Conservation Camps to detectives masquerading as social workers.

The Home Relief Bureau is a scant three years old. But it is already a giant. Today it has on its rolls over 200,000 families and 22,000 single men. Almost one seventh of the population of the city depend upon it for subsistence.

Besides those on relief, there are another 100,000 families, one of whose members, in order to take the family off relief, has been given a relief job. At least another 100,000 have been on relief during the last three years. It is safe to say that the lives of two million people in New York City alone have been directly affected by the Bureau.

The Home Relief Bureau is the capitalist answer to the needs of the unemployed. In 1930 there was a tremendous demonstration of the unemployed. Towards the end of 1931 it was clear that private charity could no longer handle the situation; it was prepared to care for the "individually maladjusted" but not for mass maladjustment. The relief given was intended to take off the edge of discontent. It was and is a miserable sop.

Some Facts

It is necessary to point out what a wretched sop it really is. For many people, unacquainted with the details, actually believe that in New York City relief is adequate. Families of five have come to the Bureau expecting that their $28 a month rent would be paid. They were surprised to find that they would be allowed $17.50 per month if they proved they were destitute.

For food the actual allowance is $3.30 every two weeks per man, $2.10 for a woman, $2.40 for a child under 16, $2 for a child under 6, with a 50 percent increase for one person, 25 percent for two, 15 percent for three, then the straight budget until a family of eight is reached, when there is a 5 percent reduction, etc.

Obviously this is a starvation allowance.

Left Wing Program for Silk; No More Skulking Cliques

By FELIX GIORDANO

In spite of the betrayal of the last strike by Gorman & Co., the American Federation of Silk Workers still maintains itself as a department of the United Textile Workers. The workers refuse to be again unorganized, and, in spite of the many weaknesses of their union, cling to it and try to make it what they would like it to be, a real fighting organization of textile workers.

The silk workers realize that they have a task to perform, a job to finish. Their demands have not been met by the bosses; the government Boards have gone the way of all government boards; their conditions have not improved. Instead, the average wage of silk workers hovers close to the "minimum" of $13 for a week of 40 hours, and from the present condition of the industry, they face a period when the full week of 40 hours is going to be as rare as a snowstorm in July.

Conditions in the silk industry have not improved. They are, if anything worse than immediately before the strike. The union, as at present constituted, is unable to cope with the manufacturers, or else unable to get started. But the workers cannot keep on tolerating these conditions. They need the 30-hour week, and they demand it.

They demand that there be an end to wage cuts, to speed up, to additional machine load. The union must get ready to fight. And the workers also realize that the union's fight cannot be left in the hands of the Gormans and McMahons. That is why they must be ready to do and direct their own fighting, that is why they need a left wing, organized nationally on the basis of sound principles and of a sound program.

The Task of the Left Wing

It is evident, then, that the task of the Left wing is to consolidate all the militant elements in the union for the purpose of supplying leadership to the workers in the coming struggles. For it is only through such a left wing that the workers can achieve victory. It is only upon the left wing that they can rely when all else fails them. The Left wing must be the crystallization of the active union members in an intelligent body working within the union, shaping policies and fighting so that the bureaucracy in the union be forced to accept them and follow them.

No Cliques

The left wing, we repeat, must be the crystallization of all that is genuinely progressive and militant in the union. It can not work in the dark, in secret, but it must agitate the workers, make its program known, and win the confidence of the whole membership.

The silk workers have known too many cliques that never produced the still-to-be-formed left wing. Cliques have wrought havoc among the silk workers before, they must not be allowed to do so again. For it is only the reactionary elements who fear publicity that work in secret, "springing things on" the workers and "getting them across". Let the left wing differentiate itself from such elements, and not follow their system and their tactics.

No cliques then, skulking and plotting behind the scenes, but a genuine, intelligent movement, which has the confidence of the workers, and which acts sanely, without adventurist ideas, without advocating adventurist or showy action if nothing can be gained from it.

In that sense we cannot approve of the newly reorganized group in Paterson, for it has all the earmarks of a clique and not of a left wing movement. We cannot approve of their desire to remain a secret organization, and we cannot approve of their first "practical" proposal of carrying on a demonstration of strength when we are not ready to use such strength. That group shows both cliquism and adventurism, the two greatest evils that could afflict any group working in the union, ostensibly for the benefit of the workers.

A Program for the Left Wing

What then are the essentials of a left wing movement, and more specifically, what would be a minimum program for such a movement?

In the first place, it must not confine itself to a locality or to one branch of the industry. A local movement cannot achieve national success, and no success can be effective unless it is national.

Secondly, it must not be a secret organization. It must, instead, agitate among the workers for the adoption of its program, and must therefore be known to the workers as an organized movement with a definite program, drawing in members on the basis of it.

It must, in the third place, fight for the union to adopt its program; it must convince the workers of the soundness of it and see to it that it is carried through. Such a program must include as goals:

- a) The 30-hour week.
- b) Establishment of a maximum machine load.
- c) Establishment of minimum wages on a graduated scale.
- d) Industrial organization of the union, as well as the spreading and strengthening of it.
- e) Autonomy of the American Federation of Silk Workers as a distinct Department of the U.T.W.
- f) Local autonomy in the assignment of organizers.
- g) Seniority right in the mills.

These points must be included in the minimum program. The workers have already in the majority of instances come to realize the necessity of securing these demands both internally and in their relations with the manufacturers; they are the first task of the national left wing movement.

Wages Lag Profits Soar Since 1849

A.F. of L. Figures Condemn Own Policy as False At Best

Workers need no figures to tell them that they are constantly producing more goods and more profits for every dollar they are paid—that their wage slavery is becoming more severe all the time. But figures published in the March issue of the American Federationist, the magazine of the A. F. of L., vividly illustrate the meaning of the speed-up in dollars and cents, in wages and profits.

Between 1849 and 1933, the value of manufactured products per dollar paid in wages increased from $4.30 to $5.99. A slight decrease, from $6.06 in 1929 to $5.99 in 1933, may be credited to the NRA; but recent reports, government figures themselves show clearly that when 1934 is checked, the workers will find that "efficiency" has re-established itself—and that efficiency is another word for increasing exploitation of workers.

The percentages are telling: In 1849, wages formed 23.2 percent of the total value of goods produced; in 1919, 16.9 percent; in 1933, 16.7 percent.

Stated in another form, as wages versus profits and overhead, the figures show that of value added by manufacture (minus cost of raw materials), in 1849, 51 per cent went for wages and 49 for overhead and profits; in 1919, the ratio was 42.2 percent to 57.8 percent; in 1933, 36.4 to 63.6; in 1933, 30.8 to 69.2. It is significant that even before 1929 and 1933, when the value produced per dollar of wages decreased slightly, the ratio of profits over wages continued upward.

New Militant Drive News

In spite of all obstacles the circulation drive is going over. Charleston increases its bundle. Canada increases bundle orders by 50 per week. Minneapolis continues to send more subs than any other branch to date, achieving a score of 32 percent to date. East St. Louis enters the field with a score of 20 percent. Akron also achieves 20 percent. New York, Philadelphia and Chicago continue to lag behind. Bronx branch, New York, has made the best showing to date in the New York District. Plentywood is climbing up and scores 20 percent at the present time.

But even this is not enough. We must have more—many more—subs and increased bundle orders to make the drive a success. This week should bring in at least 200 new subs. Branches, friends, you are the ones who can make this drive a success. It must be successful in order to put the Party

Thus once more is demonstrated the fact that all the fine talk about spread of income has no meaning as long as the necessity for profits, under capitalism, robs the workers of the benefits of their increased productivity. Thus is shown once more the falseness of the "prosperity" that preceded the depression; for even while the American workers' standards of living were going up, they never rose in proportion to the amount of goods produced.

It is a sad commentary on the class-collaborationist policies of the A. F. of L. that even during the best period of the Federation, this increasing disproportion between wages and profits, between goods produced and the purchasing power of the producers, continued. There are lessons for the A. F. of L. bureaucrats in these figures—but they have never shown a disposition to learn such lessons.

Not through these methods will prosperity come. Only when goods are produced not only by the workers but also for the workers, when we own the factories ourselves, will we benefit from the efficiency the machine can give. Only then will we and our children begin to live.

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

Hitler Unmasks German Rearmament

That disquieting open "secret" of European diplomacy, the rearmament of Germany contrary to the Versailles Treaty, has finally become the accomplished fact (fait accompli) that Hitler planned from the start. The acquiescent attitude, however grudging and unwilling, revealed by the British and French governments in the recent negotiations, created for Hitler the proper atmosphere in which to practice his fascist foreign diplomacy. Hitler weighed carefully the consequences of outright denunciation of the Versailles Treaty in regard to the arms clauses at this particular time. No doubt he would have preferred a less open break with the other Western powers, even to the extent of rejoining the League of Nations for equality of armaments.

But the string attached to the negotiations of his signing an Eastern Locarno Pact "guaranteeing" peace with Soviet Russia, was diametrically at variance with the avowed objective of Nazism to expand eastward at the expense of the Soviet Union—at the same time acting as the spearhead of capitalism to crush the workers' state. Hence Hitler cut the Gordian knot and saved the English and French diplomats the onus of "permitting" this impetus to the speeding up of European armament—and decided to call the bluff of the victors of the last war.

The comment on this unmasking of fascist Germany's preparations for the coming war, particularly in the English press, proves that Hitler judged the situation correctly. Nobody thinks of sending troops into Germany to enforce the terms of a treaty that now goes by default. On the contrary, Hitler meets with distinct encouragement from the reactionaries who draw the same sharp distinction between a Locarno for the West and an Eastern Locarno. Thus and an Eastern Locarno becomes ever more ominous for the Soviet Union.

Stalinism in France

Internally and externally Stalinism pursues the politics of the "lesser evil"; that is to say, the politics of meeting reaction half way. Even before Hitler's casting off of all bounds that prevented the formation of a conscript army to be hurled against the Soviet Union, Soviet diplomacy strained every nerve to achieve a military alliance with France to maintain the status quo. French capitalism entered conditionally into this alliance as a guarantee against its external foe, German capitalism, and also its internal foe, the French proletariat. The C. P. of France thus used to uphold the Flandin government as the "lesser evil" to fascism. The French fascists would instantly break off friendly relations with Soviet Russia.

The Stalinists pose the struggle basis to maintain bourgeois democracy. In this popular front—intended to diffuse and weaken the too dangerous united front of the proletarian forces leading the masses—the Stalinists include the bourgeois radical and radical socialist parties in direct alliance with Flandin. The true government of this shrewd politician meantime pursues a policy, copied from Roosevelt, of constant promises to and just as constant betrayals of the workers. No flagrant have become the extreme right policies of the Stalinists that the left centrist current in the SFIO (French Socialist Party) have begun to sharply criticize them from the left. The Trotskyist fraction in the SFIO are beginning to gain ground and to exert some influence, tending to clarify issues for the militant socialists. In this process the Trotskyists come into greater and greater conflict not only with the right wing of the S.P., but with the Stalinist bureaucracy.

Danger of a French Amalgam

There can be no clearer explanation for the denunciation heaped on the Trotskyists as police agents by the Stalinists. Where the former call openly, in view of the dangerous situation in France, for the arming of the working class to combat and disarm fascist forces, the Stalinists lead the socialist forces to the trap of calling on the Flandin government to disarm the fascist bands.

S. Y. L. Looks to the Future Of the American Revolution

By REVA CRANE

Today the S.Y.L. is the youth section of the W.P. and endorses its political program. It has consolidated its forces and is now in a position to challenge the existing youth organizations for the leadership of the toiling and student youth of the United States. In addition, it has connections with youth organizations of other countries through its affiliation to the International Bureau of Revolutionary Youth Organizations for the formation of the new revolutionary youth international.

Only under the leadership and guidance of a revolutionary party can the youth organization fulfill its tasks and serve as a true rallying center of exploited youth. Lacking such a party, the youth organization must fall under the influence and control of non-revolutionary and anti-working class organizations.

Today, however, there exists a party which is capable of leading the revolutionary youth, of guiding it politically and aiding it organizationally. There is every opportunity for the Spartacus Youth League to grow and develop and to fulfill the tasks of a youth organization. Its membership will become two, three—even ten times that of the Party. From its ranks will come trained revolutionists for the Workers Party. In the coming struggles, the S.Y.L. will be at the side of the W.P., leading the American working class and the youth. It will show that the theoretical conception of a fighting, militant youth organization has been turned into a reality.

The Workers Party has a great responsibility with regard to the youth movement. There is no other force in the country which can create a movement that will keep the youth from falling victim to fascist demagoguery and militaristic jingoism.

In the ranks of the W. P. are many comrades who were the founders of the early revolutionary youth movement after the war. Many of them played leading parts in the life of the Y.C.L. and these comrades can be of invaluable assistance in guiding the S.Y.L. In those cities where S.Y.L. branches do not exist, it is the duty of these comrades to aid in the establishment of such branches and to give both political and organizational guidance to the young comrades of the S.Y.L. It is the duty of Party comrades to study and understand the needs of the youth organization and to participate in the solution of the problems which confront the League. The joint work of the two organizations depends to a great extent on the relationship existing between them. Conscious attempts must be made to have the Spartacus Youth League function as an independent youth organization which is politically subordinate to the Workers Party. By exchange of representatives on committees, by a careful survey of the needs of the S.Y.L., by an active interest in its life, the Workers Party will demonstrate that it can build and lead the Spartacus Youth League and that it defends the immediate and ultimate interests of the working class youth.

Class Struggle In the S. P.

and Adrian Gambet demanded: (1) That the YPSL rescind its statement on the New Leader even though passed unanimously by the YPSL Executive and approved by an overwhelming majority of the Central Committee. (2) That the YPSL call off the pending elections, which are being held subject to the approval of the Party NEC. (3) That Harold Draper be expelled from the YPSL in spite of the fact that the matter is now before the Party NEC. (4) That the YPSL comply with these demands by March 25 under the penalty of "re-organization." In the interim subcommittee was to have full power to act. The subcommittee acted.

"That same night the YPSL Executive rejected the demands. The Party subcommittee went into immediate session. On inquiry, from official representatives of the League, Bela Low and Adrian Gambet indicated that no action would be taken that night. Low stating that a decision would be reached the next day." The Ypsel office was then closed. Later a young Socialist who walked into the office while the Old Guard heuchmen were there, was beaten up.

The National Ypsel office has empowered the YPSL City Executive Committee to go ahead with its work. A special subcommittee has been appointed to help it. The entire matter will go before the National Committee meeting in Buffalo this week end. The N.Y. "Millions" are supporting the Y.P.S.L. Meanwhile several N.Y. Socialist party locals have adopted resolutions calling upon the N.C. to reorganize the New York State organization. The National Committee of the S.P. has already notified the N.Y. State Executive Committee that it should show cause why the State organization should not be reorganized.

Why Join the Workers Party

Letters to a Worker Correspondent

By A. J. MUSTE

Fellow-Worker:

My last letter pointed out that we workers cannot obtain plenty and security, deliverance from misery and war, by trying to reform the capitalist economic system. We have to abolish it. And we cannot abolish it except by the revolutionary method. The capitalists are not going to retire gracefully and without a struggle from this scene!

In your answer you said that the workers in your shop kicked about a lot of things like wages and the way they are being speeded up and the high cost of food, but that they did not read any serious papers or books and were against any "radical theories." You added that although they growled a lot they did not show much fight and that you did not think they would ever be ready to "make a revolution."

If by this you mean that you do not have any hope that the masses of the workers will become students of economics and government, will understand and accept the theories set forth in Marx's Capital, and as a result of intellectual reflection will determine to overthrow capitalism, you are perfectly right. That is not the way things happen in history.

You know how it is when a strike occurs in your mill. It does not happen primarily because the workers have been reading statistics of what is happening in the industry, or because in general they have become radical in their thinking. It comes because of grievances about things in which they are directly concerned, the way in which a foreman treats them, a wage cut, an attempt of the boss to squeeze more work out of them. Such grievances pile up. Presently workers who have had a meek attitude and still regard themselves as thoroughly conservative, strike and fight. In the strike they learn a great deal about the economic system, the banks, the role of the government. Many a worker has become class-conscious and been started on his way to a life of activity in the labor and revolutionary movement in this way.

WHAT THE MASSES FIGHT FOR

The masses may be said always to fight for direct and simple things, for the right to exist, for a better life. When the great Bolshevik revolution broke out in Russia in 1917, they were not moved by a conscious determination to build "a new social order" and a clear picture of what kind of an order it would be. The slogans in the fight were Peace, Bread, Land. The whole economic and political machinery of the Czarist regime was broken up, was causing to function altogether. The soldiers wanted to quit the army where they were being slaughtered like cattle. The masses in the cities wanted to eat. The peasants wanted the land which was in the possession of the big land-owners.

The time had come when in order to exist, in order to prevent complete ruin, the masses had to carry on their fight, ever more bravely and intensely, and at last against the economic system which served to maintain that economy. Thus, under the leadership of the revolutionary party, the masses carried through the revolution to overthrow capitalism and establish the workers' state.

All the details as to how the job was done in Russia, or how it may be carried through here where, of course, the conditions are not exactly the same, we need not go into here. But we can see before our own eyes how things may shape up. We recall how last year in Toledo, Minneapolis, San Francisco, and plenty of other places, tens of thousands came out on the streets and picketed in support of strikes which in many cases involved directly only a small number. When a "general strike" occurs, even on a restricted scale, who decides whether milk shall be delivered to children or the light and power kept on in the hospitals?

The mayor, the city council, etc. have become powerless. The instruments of capitalist government cannot function. The workers' Strike Committee, or in some cases where food is involved a farmers' Strike Committee, decides such things. You have them taking over some of the functions of government. Thus we can see the possibility of Workers Councils emerging, the instruments with which workers carry on the fight and also the instruments through which the government of the workers functions after they have taken power. The Russian name for councils is Soviets. That is why we often speak of the workers' state as Soviet power.

Thus the picture unfolds. The capitalist system, though the development of productive forces makes plenty possible, cannot function effectively any more. It presses the standard of living of the masses ever lower. The capitalist state also begins to break down. The workers, in order to exist, have to fight on a broader and broader front. Presently they have to overthrow the state and abolish the capitalist economic system altogether. Then they establish the Workers' State which functions through new governmental instruments and disbands or destroys the old agencies and forms of the capitalists' military forces, etc. Then and not until then, under the workers' state, the masses can use the productive forces to provide plenty and security.

HOW ARE STRIKES CAUSED?

At this point, another important factor must be emphasized. You know that agitators and radicals do not cause strikes, as the kept press tries to make out. You have had plenty of experience of how at certain times no amount of agitation can cause the slightest stir among the workers. Rotten conditions cause the workers to revolt, particularly when they see a chance of doing something about them. But you know also that when last year the unrest increased in your mill, it was you and the other fellows I have been writing to who got together, talked things over, called a meeting at Bill Roberts' house, got a lot of workers to sign cards that they would join a union if and when half the mill was signed up, later called a mass meeting, set up the union, sent for a charter from the international, etc. You fellows and a few others are the officers of the union, you serve on the department committees, you were on the strike committee.

In other words, there was a leadership. It consisted of the men who had read and studied some, who knew more about the labor movement than the general run of the workers, who could organize, who had courage and fighting qualities, who could look ahead and plan. Besides, you acted as a group, rather than as individuals. "The time before when the workers wanted to do something, but everything was led by this fellow Jackson, a good fellow in many ways but erratic and a free-lance, everything went wrong. The same conception holds good for the entire revolutionary struggle of the working class.

THE REVOLUTIONARY PARTY

That is why we say that the basic instrument of the workers in the revolutionary struggle is the revolutionary party.

The working class as a whole is not homogeneous. It is divided by many interests. Many sections are backward. It cannot, as a class, directly plan and guide its battles. Just as you found in your mill, a staff, a vanguard is necessary. If there is none, or if its basic policies are wrong, only confusion, defeat and disaster can result for the workers. As our Declaration of Principles puts it, "This is the revolutionary party. It embraces the most advanced, the most militant, the most devoted workers, unites them firmly on the basis of tested principles, and welds them together in rigorous discipline."

The party does not impose its leadership on the masses. It wins their confidence and support by its devotion to the interests of the masses, its courage, the correctness of its policies. Even immediate struggles are carried forward effectively only where such leadership plays an important role.

When, and only when the revolutionary party, as the crisis deepens and conditions ripen, gains the support of the majority in the Workers' Councils, or whatever the mass struggle organizations of the workers may be called, establishes its leadership, can the revolutionary struggle of the workers be carried to a victorious conclusion.

That is why it is so important that you and workers like you should join the W.P.—why on the one hand you should contribute your strength, energy and intelligence to it and on the other hand receive from membership in the revolutionary party the training, discipline, comradeship and enthusiasm which can come in no other way, and without which we cannot accomplish the colossal and urgent task before the Party, before the working class here in the U. S. and throughout the world!

Criminal Syndicalist or Renegade ?

From a Statement of Norman Mini in Reply To the Slanders of the Stalinist Press

By NORMAN MINI

One of the Sacramento Defendants

On the orders of the Associated Farmers and the Industrial Association, the State of California charges me with being a criminal syndicalist. I am not guilty. I am guilty of helping to organize the working people of the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys into a union to fight for higher wages and improved living conditions. For that "crime" I may have to go to San Quentin for forty-two years. I am ready to go if I must; I maintain my right the right of all workers, to organize labor unions, and I will not be terrorized into abandoning that right.

On the orders of the Communist Party, all my fellow-defendants except Jack Warnick charge me with being a renegade and a stool-pigeon. I am not guilty. I am guilty of disagreeing with the Communist Party, of being a member of the Workers Party of the United States. For that "crime," my defense is being cut to pieces by the Communist Party. Again, I am ready to suffer the consequences; I maintain my right, the right of all workers, to disagree with the Communist Party, and I will not be terrorized into abandoning that right.

The statement in the official Communist Party Daily Worker and Western Worker of March 7, bearing the names of my fellow defendants (except Warnick), was dictated by Sam Darcy, District Organizer of the C. P. . . .

Hoping . . . to distract people's attention from the C. P.'s record of criminal mismanagement and wrecking in the Sacramento case, the Darcy machine broadcasts the yarn that the prosecution, which is trying to railroad me to San Quentin, has my cooperation!

If I "sold out," if I am a renegade, why do I still stand in the shadow of the penitentiary? This question can't be answered, nor does the C. P. try to. That fact alone shows the falseness of its charges.

Had it not been for the C. P., all we defendants might today enjoy the active support of a great mass movement of labor. As it is, the whole policy of the C. P., including its malicious attacks on me, is jeopardizing us all increasingly. In the interests of an effective, militant, honest defense fight, I am going to answer these attacks and call on all working people and friends of labor to rally to my cause, which is the cause of the whole working class.

The McAllister Interview

When arrested last August, I gave the prosecutor an interview. To talk to a prosecutor may be an even greater blunder than to let police get hold of letters from prominent sympathizers. . . .

Darcy's indictment charges that my interview helped the prosecution. It fails to specify how, because the truth is it did not help the prosecution. That is why, after McAllister read it to the jury, several signers of the Darcy indictment declared the famous interview to be "a flop."

In the interview I stated only such facts as were common knowledge (for example, Hougard's connection with the C. P.), or as I considered it shameful to hide. I also expounded my Marxist belief in the necessity for a social revolution in which the vast popular majority, led by the working class, will use every necessary means to overcome the violent resistance to be expected from the exploiting minority now in power. I did not then know that the C. P. wanted to keep two sets of books, to talk one way outside and another way inside court. . . .

I thought it shameful to try to hide my opinions. My fight is for the legality of workers to organize into labor unions, and also for the legality of all workers' political parties to hold and advocate their views. To make such a fight, the views involved must be expressed and defended, not hidden or disguised. I stood by my views and still do.

The Darcy indictment lies in saying I kept the interview secret until McAllister produced it in court. It was reported in the Sacramento press in August, and the other defendants and I discussed it in jail. When I gave the interview, I had been in the C. P. not a few months, as the Darcy indictment says, but almost two years. Far from associating with the Workers Party then, I had never seen a member of it.

The C. P. did not "expel" me for giving the interview. It "expelled" me months later—after I had quit it and joined the Workers Party. Then Darcy decided retroactively that I had been a renegade!

The Darcy indictment charges that I gave the interview out of "fear of a beating, hope of leniency or sheer vengeance." . . . All the defendants had to "forget" that, after the interview was read on February 7 but before Darcy had time to give them orders, they unanimously chose Mike Quinn to draft for them a declaration refuting the prosecution's claim that my interview was a "confession." Pat Chambers has to "forget" that he signed the following statement after the interview had been read:

"Not only has Mini made no such offer (to turn State's evidence, as reported by the lying Hearst press) and no such confession, but he has repeatedly refused McAllister's offers of immunity in return for turning State's evidence."

Another Prisoner Speaks

The whole question has been settled by our fellow-defendant, Jack Warnick, whom Darcy has not yet dared to call a stool-pigeon, and who has had the courage to defy Darcy and write:

"The characterization by the Western Worker that Mini is a 'cowardly, treacherous stool-pigeon' must be condemned as an attempt to fame the boy, and ruin his reputation for the rest of his life. . . .

The Darcy indictment also attacks my testimony given on the witness stand in my own behalf. The Western Worker of February 18 had this to say about the capitalist press reports of my testimony:

"Newspapers reported the last two days' sessions by completely lying about the Trotskyites' testimony. Reports that Mini confessed a plan for violent seizure of power in event of war are based on distortions of his testimony. Quotations alleged to have been made by him are entire falsifications. Immediately following yesterday's session, newspaper reporters held a consultation with G. H. Parker, publicity director for the Associated Farmers, and he dictated the distortions they should publish."

At that time the Western Worker admitted that my testimony made McAllister "squirm." Today the Darcy indictment contains the same distortions as G. H. Parker dictated! The purpose of the distortions is to make it seem that I made "fantastic," wild, criminal statements on the stand. While it is true that I neither concealed nor hedged as Darcy did, I said nothing fantastic or criminal. I explained my ideas without concealment, and that is what made McAllister squirm. That is why, when I finished, my fellow-defendants congratulated me. . . .

The Darcy indictment also charges me with aiding the prosecution through the policy of my attorney, Albert Goldman, the Chicago Socialist who was for years the I.L.D.'s leading attorney in that city. It falsely states that Goldman "has done nothing to aid our defense." To sign their names to this charge, Decker and Chambers must "forget" the hours they spent with Goldman getting counsel. The Darcy indictment states that Goldman has sided with the prosecutor in attacking Gallagher. This is untrue.

When Gallagher for the third time squabbled with a juror and declared in front of the jury ("see Western Worker, February 7): 'I am not talking for the jury; I am talking to the people in the courtroom,' Goldman publicly expressed his disagreement with these tactics. After all, it is the jury which renders the verdict, and it is good that they should know that somebody in the court besides the prosecution is concerned with what they think. "The masses" in the courtroom's 112 seats (half of them empty lately) won't affect the verdict. That is why Goldman—first privately, finally publicly—as well as some defendants and their friends (always privately and therefore futilely) tried to get Gallagher to behave like a militant labor attorney instead of like a soap-boxer who can't see his audience for the blood in his eyes. . . .

The "United Front"

The Darcy indictment accuses the Workers Party of disrupting a "united front." Now, from July until January the C. P. avoided the building of a united front Sacramento defense, and advocated party members who disapproved one. It was forced into one by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense (the N.P.L.D.) which is defending me. Before the united front committee could take any public action, the C. P., introduced (on orders from New York) policies which necessarily drove out the N.P.L.D., the Workers Party, the Socialist Party, the American Civil Liberties Union—everybody who rejects the authority of the C. P.

Consequently the defense is split today. "The growing working class movement" which the Darcy indictment says I slander is powerless to impress prosecutor, court or jury because reality is that the C. P., its phony affiliates and a handful of liberal innocents who represent nothing and nobody. And the movement my defenders are trying to build is knifed by the C. P.!

Who Bailed Out Decker?

The charge that the N.P.L.D. has done nothing for the defense is just another of Darcy's lies. His indictment says:

"One of the most vicious lies created and spread by Goldman and the Trotskyites is that the I. L. D. did not bail out Caroline Decker and Pat Chambers . . . because they were not supposed to be in agreement with the Party line. . . . We were in agreement."

I shall answer this by quoting a document never before published, a letter written by Caroline Decker to a member of the Workers Party on December 18. I have had the original since December: when Caroline Decker calls me a stool-pigeon and pours filth on the N.P.L.D., to whose ball she owes her freedom today, I do not hesitate to answer her with her own words: "I'm convinced now that the District Committee has definite reasons for not getting me out. Elaine's (E. Black, I. L. D. organizer) escape on the matter by saying bail must first be raised for Nora and Loraine, I think is just that—an escape. We long ago agreed that Nora should be getting out. The fact remains, however, that no one is being bailed out."

"I do not want to take issue with you now on the C. and A.V. I.U. (the union). I'm not prepared to say that the criminal neglect of the union by the District Committee was 'opposition.' . . . Elaine says it's not important for me to be out. I'm definitely resigned to that now. . . . So you see—here I am—in jail—ostracized by my own Party . . . feeling myself that the Party is not sufficiently utilizing the case. . . .

"There are only the bars to bat against—the gray walls to question and a stone wall as far as my letters of inquiry to the District Committee are concerned."

Decker got out on bail because she appealed to the N.P.L.D. for bail and, as she knew, because the N.P.L.D. took her out despite the instructions of the C. P. to her and all defendants to accept no "count-ter-revolutionary bail," as Black called it. Decker's letter proves this when it says with reference to N.P.L.D. bail money:

"Gallagher received a letter from Gordon denying permission to accept the bail."

And Decker has repeatedly said that the action of the N.P.L.D. alone compelled the I.L.D. to suddenly produce a wad of bail and take out the other prisoners whom they had kept in jail for six wretched months!

Who Hurts the Defense?

No, I am neither a criminal syndicalist nor a stool-pigeon. I am as innocent of the charges in the Darcy indictment as I am of those in the State's indictment. I am simply a worker who helped organize a union, who believes that the workers' rule alone can save human society from increasing misery, oppression, war and decay, and who does not take orders from the Communist Party.

HOOEY

What is this? Strip poker? Originally Huey Long wasn't going to allow Huey to have more than a million dollars. In his reply to General Johnson he raised the ante by setting the upper limit at four million dollars. Last week a speech in Philadelphia Huey increased the limit still further, to nine million dollars. If someone doesn't call pretty soon Long will add on a few more million just so as not to keep Henry Ford and Andy Mellon from playing.

We Accuse William Green

UPON the request of Huey Long, William Green, A. F. of L. president, sent a letter to the N. Y. Evening Post in which he says that Long's "legislative record upon legislation sponsored and supported by labor" is "thus far 100 percent favorable to labor."

Not a word about the Lane Cotton Mill workers in Louisiana where Long's word is law, kept in a state of peonage, their strike smashed by the state's forces.

Not a word about the Longshoremen's strike last year smashed by the militia in the state where Long's word is law.

Not a word about the older backwardness of Louisiana in such matters as old age pension legislation, unemployment insurance, child labor.

Not a word about the way in which Long is skillfully trying to make the workers believe that his Share The Wealth Clubs and Long For President movement are the road to salvation.

Not a word about the fact that a mere vote for an A. F. of L. bill under circumstances where it means nothing is enough to get a credit on the A. F. of L. legislative committee's record.

Who gives William Green the authority to put a "labor" stamp of approval upon this demagogue? And in doing that to hide the most important facts, practically all the important facts, about his labor record?

Once again, and in the most outrageous fashion, Green plays the role of a misleader of labor.

Friends of Labor

THE A. F. of L. has long pursued the policy of playing up liberal politicians of the old parties. The Communist Party with its new "labor" party line is beginning to do the same thing.

The other day a few of these politicians gave an exhibition of how they can be counted on in the pinch to sabotage even the most elementary of labor's proposals. Wagner, author of the new labor relations bill purporting to outlaw company unions and on which the A. F. of L. today bases all its hopes for unionism in the basic industries, Bob La Follette, white hope of many third parties, Black, author of the 30-hour bill, switched their votes in the U. S. Senate and thus helped to defeat the McCarran prevailing wage amendment to the Public Works Bill!

To the last, the A. F. of L. leaders plead for the amendment. They should now, logically, be attacking Wagner, La Follette and Black as betrayers of labor. They are doing nothing of the sort, because they have nobody but these same men to depend upon for support of the 30-hour bill and the Wagner labor relations bill.

And what assurance have the A. F. of L. leaders that these men in the pinch will not again back down? The answer is: Not only is there no assurance that they will not back down; it is certain that they will on anything that really matters. Capitalism is no longer in a position to give substantial concessions to the workers. Liberals, for all their good intentions and noble emotions, will simply serve as smoke-screens for the insistent drive against the standards of the masses.

The worker must build their own political party; but not a reformist "labor" party which also cannot play a progressive role today. The workers must build their own revolutionary party for the overthrow of capitalism.

QUESTION BOX

Conducted by A. Weaver

MILTON B. BRONX—

Question: Is it true that M. Olgin, editor of the "Freiheit", took a patriotic position during the war? Can you give proof?

Answer: Not only did Olgin, who is now one of the chief of Stalin's Trotsky-slayers, take a patriotic position, but he reached heights of eloquence in urging the American workers to shed their blood for Morgan's profits. Here is a typical excerpt from his writings of that time:

"The war has lost for the Socialist world its threatening appearance. It is not a war for enslaving but a war for freedom. One must be blind or insane not to see progressive character of this war. The world at present is not sunk in the depths of darkness but in a severe and risky struggle which must bring light to out-worn humanity."

"A different sort of bravery and a different sort of beauty calls and entices: the bravery of the battlefield, the beauty of people who sacrifice their lives for their country, for that which their country has declared to be their holy duty."

"There is a world of idealistic enthusiasm poured over the present war, a stream of sincere belief in the ideal of freedom. The American is firmly convinced that his country has no egoistic motives in the present war."

"A strenuous task-war. But in it appear many fine sides of both people and nations." (M. Olgin, N. Y. Forward, June 1, 1918.)

It is no accident, therefore, that Olgin occupies his present position.

B. H., BOSTON—

Question: What is the significance of the recent "Gold Clause" decision of the Supreme Court? Is it true that the way to further inflation is opened by it?

Answer: The existence of the clause in contracts requiring that debts be paid in gold of a certain weight and fineness was a certain deterrent to inflation since the latter without repudiation of the gold payment provision, would automatically increase the government debt considerably (all "gold-clause" debts would be increased about 67 percent), and engender new financial convulsions, so that the support given by the Supreme Court to the cancellation of the "clause" removed this barrier.

It was necessary, of course, that this be done in an indirect manner, and this explains the delay and hesitation in finding the proper formula, since a direct approval of the cancellation of the "gold clause" would have given a legal sanction to the repudiation of debts by the European countries and would have stamped as legal the prior claim of society over the property rights of the individual, a dangerous precedent, which might be interpreted by the workers as the right to expropriate capitalist private property. The approval was therefore given by saying that such cancellation was illegal but that nothing could be done about it since the perpetrator of the unlawful act, i.e. Congress itself, was the only power to judge or nullify it.

It would be a mistake, nevertheless, to overemphasize the importance of this legal decision, since, as evidenced by the fact that the change in the gold content of the dollar was made prior to such decision, the existence of the "gold clause" was insufficient to prevent inflation. With or without the opinion of the court, inflation is and will be decided by the laws of money and currency as they are conditioned by the decline of capitalism internationally, and by the juggling of currencies as part of the struggle of the imperialists for a greater share of the world market.

However, the decision has other extremely significant aspects. In the first place it is living proof of the Marxian concept that laws are merely an expression of existing facts ("... the ideal is nothing else than the material world reflected by the human mind, and reflected into forms of thought..."). Faced with an accomplished fact, the court rendered a decision compatible with it and maintaining the status-quo.

In the second place the court action, like the NRA, is legal recognition of the decline of capitalism. Capitalism, based upon commodity production, requires that contracts, i.e. the right of the commodity owner to his own property, be sacred. The repudiation by Congress of the "gold clause" in contracts was a partial cancellation of this fundamental law and the decision of the court that such repudiation was illegal but that it could

Currency Inflation War of Today Leads Inevitably to Military War of Tomorrow

NEW YORK.—The world money war is on—in full force.

While rapidly grooming their armed forces for the great conflict they know is coming, the world powers are fighting another semi-secret war in the money capitals of the world. They have not yet called into action their armies, navies and air forces, but they have put their money experts on the battlefield. In Washington, New York, London, Paris and Tokyo the battle is being fought out, gaining intensity every month.

Although much of the battle is fought behind closed doors and the actual maneuvers are kept secret, occasional incidents and trends reveal the way it is going. The sudden decline in the value of the British pound from over $5 to around $4.75 immediately after the U. S. Supreme Court gold decision is such an indicator. Another is the flood of rumors in Wall Street that the Roosevelt administration will in the not-too-distant future further devalue the currency of this country, perhaps to 50c, perhaps lower.

Stabilization Funds

The use of gigantic stabilization funds helps the governments to jockey their currencies into positions they desire. The British government has such a fund, estimated to be above a billion dollars. The United States' fund, since devaluation of gold, probably amounts to at least two billions.

The governments can and do use these funds in speculation. They can help to push a currency up in value, or down, by their buying or selling of other currencies. Each nation's aim is, of course, to get into a position where its large corporations can sell their products as cheaply as possible to buyers in other countries.

The fall of the British pound followed the United States gold decision and the announcement in England that their depression was still severe, previous optimistic reports notwithstanding. A flight of capital from the pound resulted, and the stabilization fund was not called into play—the British government, in other words, assenting to the currency's drop in value. With that drop Britain gained a favorable position in the battle for foreign markets which it had not had since the United States abandoned the gold standard in 1933. At that time the price of the pound was as low as $3.50.

The low price of the pound, and the even lower price of the Japanese yen, which has been depreciated to an extremely great degree, has had its effect on American markets. Reports from South America and the Far East indicate that American trade is falling off very rapidly. They indicate, too, that American industrialists will soon pull the strings that will devalue the American dollar even farther. And after that has been done once or twice another method of retaining markets or of gaining new ones will probably be tried.

That method is war.

less than $10 a week plus $3 for each dependent.

Administered by Workers and Farmers

Administration of the insurance is to be by workers and farmers under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, through unemployment insurance commissions committees.

Like the 30-hour week provisions, the unemployment insurance section covers all types of workers and farmers. It further specifies that workers shall not be disqualified from receiving insurance because of refusal to work in place of strikers, at less than normal or trade union rates, under unsafe or unsanitary conditions, or where hours are longer than the prevailing union standards, or at any unreasonable distance from home.

Pending establishment of the insurance system, provision is made for an appropriation of five billion dollars for cash relief for all unemployed at the rate of not less than $10 per week with $3 additional for each dependent.

AF of L Leaders Hope for New Gov't. Sell Out Board. Want Labor to Confide In Capitalism

WASHINGTON.—"A bill to create confidence in law, on the part of American workers". That is how Pres. John P. Frey of the Metal Trades Dept., A. F. of L., described the Wagner bill to strengthen the National Labor Relations Board, when he testified before the Senate education and labor committee March 19.

Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers also stressed repeatedly the idea of confidence in the government. He asked particularly that the proposed strong National Labor Relations Board be made part of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, in which he declared labor has "particular pride" (He means the A. F. of L. bureaucrats.—Ed.).

"Labor has confidence in the Dept. of Labor," Lewis said. "Labor has confidence in the Secretary of Labor; and that goes for whoever becomes Secretary of Labor, as labor believes the president of the United States will always appoint someone in whom labor has confidence." (Bill Doak, for instance.) He also expressed his own confidence in labor board appointments of "present and future presidents."

Besides asking amendment of the bill to put the board in the Labor Dept., Lewis also advocated representation of trade unions and employers on the N.L.R.B. Non-labor members, no matter how well-meaning, could have no background in the understanding of labor problems, he said.

Under the present conditions and those proposed in the Wagner Bill, Lewis said, there is a "situation where only men who are ignorant of their subject can be appointed to boards of this character."

There Are Exceptions

Despite his expressions of confidence in the government and his stressing of creation of confidence among the workers, Lewis mentioned one government official in whom he had no confidence, Roosevelt's close adviser, Donald Richberg, often dubbed "assistant president", was given a severe drubbing.

"Richberg has sold labor down the river," Lewis said. "In his attitude and his interpretations, he has driven a knife to the heart of labor."

Frey called for passage of the Wagner bill to create confidence in law as an antidote to radicalism. "There is no point at which the radical can reach labor more quickly," he said, "than to be able to point out that the workers are an unprivileged class—that they can't enjoy certain privileges (such as the right to organize) which the employers enjoy."

J. A. Farquharson, national legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, offered testimony in particular support of the section of the bill preserving the right to closed shop union agreements. Under the Railway Labor Act, he pointed out, the closed shop was not permitted. The P. of R. T. had 23 set contracts previously, which were set aside.

"Where minority groups contract, they can destroy the conditions of the majority," he said.

Vice Pres. E. J. Helck of the Axton-Fisher Tobacco Co. also spoke in favor of the Wagner bill.

CAPITOL NEWS

withstanding the Senate's first "revolt", that the Senate would long hold out against the President's express wishes. The Senate and the President are spokesmen, after all, for one and the same kind of economic system. They are puppets operated by one and the same set of master hands. The earlier "revolt" was just a bit of play acting, for the benefit of the back-home votes controlled by the building trades unions. Having staged their gesture, the revolvers can now say that the President forced their hands. Unless they gave in, they can explain, there would have been no Work Relief bill at all.

The imminent enactment of the measures raises certain fascinating speculations. It is proposed to pay $30 a month to unemployed wage-earners who go on "work" relief. This sum, it is assumed, will be sufficient to maintain them in "decency" if not in "comfort". How low will the payments be to wage earners for whom no suitable "work" relief can be found? How much lower will the payments be to the "unemployables"?

The history of the whole Work-Relief program is a beautiful example of the progressive intellectual bankruptcy of the New Deal. PWA got going as a grandiose project in "planned public works". The government was going to spend its way back to prosperity thanks to roads, tunnels, bridges, dams, power plants and the like. FERA got going as an equally grandiose project for alleviating the evils of unemployment. The government would see to it that every unemployed

He said that his firm had had 36 years of dealing with the union, and not once had there been any strikes or lockouts, or any labor disturbances. The company has found the arrangement most profitable, he testified.

Progress Seen At Pittsburg

The P. C. is instructed also to make a careful check-up of the political, organizational, financial and technical considerations involved in a project of such magnitude and importance and to take into account the increase of size of the weekly New Militant as an alternative. If the results of the check-up are favorable the P. C. is authorized after a referendum of the full National Committee to act in the matter of a daily paper.

Important decisions were also made looking toward the implementation of that portion of the Declaration of Principles and the Constitution of the W. P. which, although action on any organizational affiliation must be submitted to the National Convention of the Party, authorizes the N. C. to cooperate with groups and parties in other countries standing on the same fundamental program as our own, in the elaboration of a complete world program and in steps looking toward the speediest possible establishment of the new revolutionary international.

In line with suggestions contained in communications from the Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland through its secretary, Comrade H. Sneevliet, and in a personal communication from Comrade L. Trotsky, the P. C. is authorized in cooperation with the newly founded Dutch party, to take the lead in discussions with the above parties and groups of an international program and of steps which might be taken toward the setting up of a Joint Committee, which in the beginning would have no administrative functions but would concern itself with the preparation of basic documents and perhaps the publication of an international bulletin. Action on the correspondence of the P. C. along these lines is to be taken at the next N. C. meeting in June where also a full report on all sister groups and parties, and groups and parties moving in our direction is to be made.

Recognizing the terribly swift pace of international developments and that any day may bring world-shattering events, the N. C. authorized the P. C. in the interim to take a referendum vote of the N. C. immediately if some major event such as a declaration of war should make it imperative to establish more formal relations with sister parties and groups and to set up more definite machinery at once.

Meanwhile an internal party bulletin which will deal with international affairs, particularly developments in the international revolutionary movement, has been provided for.

Monroe Clears Up Press Lie

A recent issue of the New Militant reported that Lillian Monroe, former C. P. section organizer, had joined the W. P. recently. The Fresno, Calif., Bee printed a garbled statement regarding Comrade Monroe's attitude toward Communism and the Communist Party. That our readers may know her exact position, we are printing here her letter to the editor of the Fresno Bee.

Fresno, California
March 10, 1935

Editor, Fresno Bee
Fresno, California
Mr. Editor:

The article you publish about me in your Sunday's issue, March 10, is distorted and incorrect. I ask that you publish this letter in correction.

Firstly, and let's make this clear, I denounce the bankrupt official Communist Party of America and the Third International as a whole as misleaders of the working class. This does not mean however, as you distort it, that I denounce Communism. The corrupt Communist Party has discredited and blackened the doctrine of Communism as advocated and practiced by Marx and Lenin. While I condemn and denounce the Communist Party as misleaders you must get this straight: I am in wholehearted agreement with Marxian-Leninist communism.

Secondly, your article is dominated by an overtone to the effect that I am finished with the class struggle. This is absolutely not so. Always shall I be sincerely devoted to the struggles of the working class in our fight for betterment and final emancipation from wage slavery and the profit system.

I am applying for membership into the Workers Party of the United States and I now advocate the necessity of a new, a Fourth International, as advocated by Leon Trotsky. I am convinced that the program of the Workers Party will lead the American working class to victory.

Sincerely,

(Signed) LILLIAN MONROE.

ONLY A SPARK IS NEEDED!

THE inevitable world carnage is drawing near with a speed and precision that is reminiscent of the months that preceded July 1914.

Hitler Germany has taken the last defiant step in denouncing the provisions of the Versailles Treaty which were calculated to keep the vanquished foe of the Allied powers in a state of virtual disarmament. Not only has Der Fuehrer proclaimed that universal conscription is once more to be introduced, but he now openly demands of the other powers the right to increase Germany's heavy ordnance, to legalize her secret air fleet and expand it, and to make her a dominant sea power once again, at least in the North Sea.

Fascist Italy, using its African punitive expedition and the highly charged European atmosphere as its pretext, has announced that it intends to put additional hundreds of thousands of armed men in the field.

Schuschnigg, chancellor of Austria, has asked the European powers for the right to multiply the armed forces of the country to the point where it will have 200,000 men at its command, with corresponding increases in arms and equipment.

The French Chamber of Deputies has voted almost unanimously for a sharp increase in military credits.

Once more the fuse has been lighted that may blow up the powder barrels of the Polish Corridor, for which Germany is now renewing its claim, and Memel, where the antagonism between Germany and Lithuania is only a formal expression for a deeper antagonism among all the rival imperialist powers of the Old World.

The whole continent is being overrun by the diplomatic advance agents for the more substantial and ominous armed forces. From London to Paris to Berlin to Vienna to Budapest and the Balkan capitals and to Warsaw and Moscow—the lines are being kept feverishly busy with the activity of wire-pullers who are setting the stage for the impending war, jockeying for most favorable positions and the greatest and most potent set of confederates.

The imperialist rulers, themselves subject to laws of development beyond their control, are plunging headlong into a new world war, and dragging the masses of the working people along with them, as the cannon fodder to be sacrificed on battlefields in order to determine which of the imperialist bandits, or which set of them, shall exercise the more dominant position in world finance, in world markets, in world politics. The friction among the competitors for leading position has reached that overheated stage where the tiniest spark throws the accumulated tinder into blazing flames. Yesterday, the preliminary shifting for position exploded a bitter civil war in Greece. The day before yesterday, an incident provoked a full-sized military expedition against Ethiopia. Tomorrow, the contest for Memel, or an episode in an even more obscure locality, may prove to have the significance of a Sarajevo—the last straw to break the back of the hitherto maintained armed truce, which is the closest that world capitalism can ever come to a peaceful situation.

With striking force, which must cut to the very heart of every workingman, it is being demonstrated that modern imperialism cannot even approach a solution of the social and economic problems that wrack it, without flinging the million-headed masses into a horrible massacre carried on with all the cruel refinement of a diabolically exterminative war technique.

No longer is the "coming war" to be visualized as something that may or may not appear in the remote future. The "coming war" is at the very top of the order of the day in Europe.

How it will start is really a matter of little moment. Capitalism is naturally pregnant with war of conquest. Any spark may touch it off at any time. The fact that Hitler asks for re-armament rights in the name of the Holy War against Bolshevism, that he pretends to put himself at the service of world imperialism in the role of a super-Wrangell, that he really wants to begin Germany's imperialist re-expansion by exterminating the Workers' State—does not mean that if the war started as a reactionary crusade against the citadel of revolution, it would end that way. Quite the contrary. The conflicts in the camp of the imperialists make a war among themselves inevitable, regardless of the manner in which the hostilities commence.

Nor is it conceivable that the imminent war could be confined to the Old World. The first lesson of the last world war was that there could no longer be a purely European war. The evolution of world politics since 1914 has only accelerated the tendencies which draw every nation inexorably into an interdependent world system from which none of them can escape. In the first place, no war in which the Soviet Union's existence would be at stake, is thinkable without the participation of Japanese imperialism. In the second place, no war of such scope is thinkable without the participation of the world's mightiest imperialist power: the United States.

There could be no greater self-deception practiced in the American working class than that which consoles itself with the illusion that the United States will not enter the coming world war! American imperialism has interests in Europe and Asia far too vital to its preservation and expansion for it to allow them to be affected by the outcome of a new world war without its own, that is, America's active and direct intervention.

It is precisely in this connection that the direct problem of the American working class arises. In the struggle against imperialist war, as, basically, in all other important struggles, the central axis of working class policy revolves around the need of fighting its own ruling class. More than ever, imperialist war puts the question of the principles and policies of this fight in the most acute and inescapable manner. Evasions and half-heartedness which are sometimes possible in "normal" times, become impossible in the struggle against war. Every party, every group, every tendency, is here put to its highest test!

It is in the struggle against imperialist war that a firm

Akron Workers Set For Siege in Rubber

Bosses Import 3 Thousand Hired Thugs As Union Girds for First Test in 20 Years

BULLETIN

AKRON, O., March 28 (By wire).—Big three unions are delaying strike action pending approval from A. F. of L. on overwhelming strike votes at the Goodrich and Firestone plants.

The Goodyear has been granted the right to take a strike vote this Sunday.

3,000 deputies have been sworn in by the companies and organized into Vigilante committees. The bosses are preparing for a long siege.

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, March 24.—Akron's rubberworkers' unions were swiftly mobilizing their growing forces this week for a walk-out on Monday, April 1, in what promises to be the most bitter struggle of labor for its rights since the great strikes of last spring and which should mark the rise of a great strike wave this year.

Unions at Goodyear, Goodrich and Firestone plants, the big three of the tire industry, have made strike plans and are preparing to be the spear-head of an industry-wide fight against the arrogant and notoriously open shop rubber barons.

The unions are demanding recognition, abolition of the company unions and a 30 hour week. These have been insolently turned down by Goodyear, Firestone and Goodrich are expected to follow.

A simultaneous strike is expected to begin at Los Angeles, Cal., where the big three companies maintain their most important plants outside of Akron.

Scabs Ready

The companies have already hired thugs from strike-breaking agencies in Youngstown, Ohio, supplied the sheriff with a large stock of tear gas bombs, and are planning to run in scabs, if necessary to smash unionism once and for all, company spokesmen have admitted.

Although the peak production season of the tire industry has passed and hundreds of workers have been laid off, the unions are determined to make a stiff resistance to any attempts to smash them and it is openly predicted by spokesmen that the battle will be a real one.

The fact that the unions have not more than fifty percent of the 30,000 workers involved in the three factories in their membership is expected to be overcome when the walkout is begun since the plants work in three shifts and militant pickets can prevent anyone from entering on the second or third shift with the picket lines being established on the first shift at 7 A.M.

City Tense and Expectant

The city is tense. The entire city, predominantly union labor in character, can be swung to firm solidarity with the strikers if a determined and militant course is pursued by the strike leadership.

Highly-bribed "company union" scabs will try to work and will be guarded by the out-of-town thugs. A call for National Guards is felt to be a matter of a day or so after the strike is called. And this will

Thomas Offers Olive Branch To Old Guard

In face of the flagrant defiance of the National Committee by the Old Guard, including its refusal to appear before the Committee and show cause why the New York State Socialist Party should not be reorganized, the National Committee, at its Buffalo meeting last week-end, delayed final action in the case and attacked the Left wing Socialists. The Old Guard is allowed six weeks to comply with the N.E.C. demands; the expulsion of revolutionary socialists is authorized without delay.

This retreat came as a surprise to many militant Socialists, particularly since it came close on the heels of the forceful eviction of the New York Yipsels from their office and the suspension of the organization. However, little else but a compromise in the internal struggle was possible with the present composition of the leading groups. Such an outcome was forecast in the New Militant editorial, "The Socialist Party", March 16, 1935.

The New York question was the main point on the agenda of the meeting. A seven point decision was adopted by a majority vote, with Haggood and Daniels abstaining from the left, and Oneal abstaining from the right. The decision made advocacy of armed insurrection incompatible with

General Strike Shuts Down LA Hat Industry

Morale of Workers High As Strong Picket Lines Surround Shops

BULLETIN

LOS ANGELES, Cal. (by wire).—After four days of picketing the morale of the milliners is sky-high and the strike in an excellent position.

The militant work of the blockers' section has proved very effective in keeping shops closed.

Support has been promised by other labor unions in town. Fulfillment of this promise would guarantee speedy victory.

An effective demonstration organized by Sam Myers in the Downtown shopping section gave testimony to the power of the strike front. It also called forth loud squeals from the bosses and their scabby friends.

By SAM MYERS

LOS ANGELES.—When this story sees daylight 1,200 milliners will have quit their benches in a general strike for union recognition and better working conditions.

After several weeks of negotiations with the Millinery Manufacturers Association it became obvious that the bosses never intended to renew the old agreement or come to a new one. The milliners had but one resort—the strike. They have taken it and mean to win.

The militant strike of a year ago wrested an agreement from the bosses.

On March 20 this agreement expired. Emboldened by vigilante activities throughout the state and the promises of Captain Hynes' "Red Squad", the bosses broke off the agreement in dispute over the right to hire and fire at will. Equal division of work is another right refused by the bosses although incorporated in last year's agreement.

Negotiations with the bosses have come to naught. Last minute efforts of the Regional Labor Board have proved futile. The workers are on their feet and will set them in motion on the picket line with the firm conviction that strike action alone will force the bosses to terms.

Dan Tobin Rats on Fargo Drivers But Ranks Remain Firm

FARGO, N. D.—Last week the charter of General Drivers Local 371, Fargo, was revoked by Daniel Tobin, president of the Teamsters International. At Tobin's suggestion, the striking union was also expelled from the Fargo Trades and Labor Assembly; and to top Tobin's attack on the workers, the labor-hating Fargo Forum, at Tobin's request, printed statements

4 Unions on Strike

Joint Action Committee Established "March of Labor" Takes the Field; W. P. Members Active

BULLETIN

TOLEDO, Ohio, March 25.—The eight-day old milk drivers' strike ended late tonight when 350 union men voted 277 to 48 to accept the agreement drawn up earlier in the day by the Toledo Milk Distributors Association, Union representatives and the Toledo Regional Labor Board. The agreement provides for increases of wages ranging from 14 to 24 percent for the lower paid men. Adjustment of the wages of the higher paid men is to follow. The worse feature of the agreement is a provision leaving the re-employment of strikers arrested and convicted on charges arising from their strike activities to the "option" of the employers. Under such a provision the most militant strikers can be victimized.

The failure to develop the sentiment for sympathetic strike action and to secure a better agreement can be attributed to the pressure exerted by the conservative section of the Central Labor Union and representatives of the Teamsters' International. Another factor was the inexperience of the leadership of the Milk Drivers Union, which is a comparatively new body, and their failure to understand the possibilities of the situation. An organized progressive force in the Central Labor Union could have successfully mobilized support for the idea of broadening the strike along the lines advocated by members of the W.P. and the Unemployed League. The organization of the progressive labor forces will be given an impetus by the present experiences.

TOLEDO, Ohio, March 21.—Toledo is seething with labor revolt. The cauldron of discontent which caught the eyes of the entire country last year is overflowing again. Five strikes are in progress at this writing:

1500 FERRA workers in a general walkout on all projects—800 milk drivers in 23 dairies—650 metal workers closing down the four plants of the American National Co.—

500 building trades men working on the docks of the Empire Construction Co.—

25 grocery employees of the Overmyer Wholesale Grocery Co.

At the suggestion of members of the Workers Party a Joint Board of Strategy was set-up to coordinate the activities of the various strikes and direct picketing. This Joint Board of Strategy includes representatives of the striking unions and Sam Pollock of the Joint Action Committee of the FERRA strike. The FERRA Joint Action Committee previously established is composed of 7 members from the Building Trades Council, the Lucas County Unemployed League and the Relief Workers League.

"The March of Labor" Flying squadrons, the battering rams of the Minneapolis and textile strikes of last year, are the official strike method in the current Toledo strikes. Here, however, they are called the "March of Labor".

This "March of Labor" which might also be called the "Drive for Victory" consists of a mass picket line which concentrates on all the vital and danger points of the various strikes. In two run-ins with professional strike-breakers employed by the Overmyer Grocery Co. and the large dairy establishments the "March of Labor", under the leadership of Comrade Sam Pollock and other W.P. members, and Tim McCormick, militant Socialist and a leader of the Relief Workers' League, success attended their efforts. The scabs were physically driven from the job and the plants closed.

On Saturday a giant mass "March of Labor" is being called. All of Toledo union labor will parade through the city. The morale and

Starvation Faces Million New York Jobless

Relief Inadequate, Conditions Appalling Is Finding of Mayor's Committee

One of every three wage earners employed in New York City in 1930, one year after the crash, is now totally unemployed!

This is only one of the truly appalling figures revealed in the report of the Mayor's Committee on unemployment made this week.

The survey shows that there were approximately 1,000,000 unemployed wage earners in March of last year. With small increases the figure remains substantially the same. Let us quote the report: "There are approximately one and a half workers in an average New York City family, so that the 1,000,000 unemployed wage earners live in 666,000 families. The size of the average New York family is a little over four. Thus the number of persons directly affected by the unemployment of these wage earners must be estimated at 2,644,000—37 percent of the entire population of New York City!"

To date, the report further reveals less than half the unemployed have applied for relief. On Feb. 4 this year there were only 245,000 families on relief as compared with a possible total as seen above of 666,000.

To quote again: "Approximately 325,000 families in which wage earners are unemployed but not on relief constitute a reservoir (a reservoir of misery) from which a constantly increasing number will, as the reserves of these families and their friends and relatives are exhausted, be forced to seek relief."

The Mayor's Committee made a further report on the quality of the relief now extended. We shall quote without comment, none is needed, the treatment that part of "the reservoir" which has already come to the attention of our benevolent government receives:

"Private agencies use their budgets as guides with the provision that a case worker must in each cash determine the actual needs of the family. The Home Relief Bureau uses its budgets as inflexible schedules, regardless of the facts of the case. . . . In addition, part of the home relief budget is still paid in voucher rather than cash which discounts its value to the client.

"When the Home Relief Bureau was first set up a committee of expert nutritionists drew up a schedule of minimum food allowances which would maintain health standards if every penny were well spent. Due to lack of funds the Bureau could not apply the schedule, and frequently granted only one half the minimum requirement.

In October 1933 a new food allowance was set up which allowed the then current minimum standards. . . . This schedule has been continued up to the present time, although a committee of experts recommended on Jan. 22 that the food allowance be increased to meet the 11 percent increase in the retail food costs. . . .

"Interviews with the administrators of the thirty-four precincts throughout the city showed that in only one precinct was the food allowance adequate for maintaining health standards, that it was found barely adequate in three precincts, and inadequate in the remaining thirty precincts. . . .

"Under the present food budget the allowance to each person is eight cents per meal. . . .

The report includes a table showing the percentage of malnutrition (starvation in plain words) found among school children. It is startling to find the figure 13 percent even in 1932. It increases to 21 percent in 1933, with a slight drop in the last two years.

Quoting again: "Under a ruling made in the past year an additional allowance for food is made to individuals for whom a special diet has been recommended either by a physician or a clinic. The extra allowance, however, is based on the assumption that the basic home relief food allowance is adequate, so that here again the actual increase in the cost of food is not met."

The Sick Allowance Perhaps the full meaning of these formal phrases is not quite clear. In plain language: the relief allowance for healthy persons is not sufficient to maintain their health. They become sick. The allowance which originally destroyed their health is then used as the basis for their sick allowance. Thus the insufficiency of their allowance is twice visited on them, once while they are healthy and once when they become sick. This system is nicely calculated to drive a person either to death or insanity.

"The thirty-four precinct administrators with one exception reported that the home relief rental allowances were not sufficient to meet the average rentals in their districts. . . . The maximum home relief rent allowance is $25, while average rents in most districts were reported to be from $30 to $40 a month.

"To get an accurate picture of the housing situation the homes of 2,201 home relief families were studied. The survey disclosed appalling conditions. Many of the houses were old law fire traps.

"The survey showed that 833 of the 2,201 families studied had no private toilets, 647 had no steam

Need for Unity Is Leading Issue at Coming Steel Workers Convention

Trend of Steel Union Depends On Action of Progressives

On April 23 the sixtieth annual convention of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers is scheduled to convene at Canton, Ohio. It will have before it issues of unusual importance. Chief among them is the question of whether or not to make a serious attempt to organize the industry. Of course, this question involves the fate of the union itself. It is now split wide open by the expulsion actions of the union officials, and any approach to the problem of organization would of necessity be connected directly with the issue of restoration of unity.

In these as well as in a number of other questions that are pending before the convention the progressive forces are naturally particularly interested. Much depends on how well they are prepared.

We need not expect that the official union leadership of Mike Tighe and his cronies will be deeply concerned about the organization of the industry. All past experiences have refuted any such expectations. Nor can it be expected that they should show any interest in restoring the unity of the union. For them the present situation means the elimination of a militant opposition, many of the regularly constituted lodges now operate under a suspended charter as a result of the high handed action taken by the Tighe administration following the Feb. 3 progressive conference.

A total of 78 local lodges were represented at this conference, called jointly by several district organizations of the Amalgamated Association. All were since declared expelled. A much smaller number have been actually expelled; but they were the ones operating in the most important steel mills. Most of the leading progressives have been read out of the organization.

All indications so far point to the strenuous efforts being made by the union officials to unseat all delegates coming from these lodges. If successful that would remove from the agenda any serious consideration of the organization of the industry.

So far Tighe has succeeded in dealing the union a heavy blow. From its promising revival and growth last year it has been reduced to the old negligible tin mill division. However, the issue is not yet finally settled. Much still depends on what the progressive forces are ready and able to do.

All Promises—No Action

Those who looked to the A. F. of L. for any support to the organization of the steel workers' union have been disappointed. Nothing has come of its much heralded San Francisco convention decision to organize the steel industry. It is reported that plans for organization were laid before the February Executive Council meeting; but the craft union officials insisted that not one penny of the A. F. of L. funds be spent on any campaign which did not assure separate unions for the machinists, pattern makers, electrical workers and the other crafts. The plans were shelved.

Still the organization of the steel industry remains a key question for the trade union movement. Upon the solution of the problem it presents depends the firm establishment of unions in other basic and mass production industries.

Unity Chief Issue
But the organization forces are divided owing to this open breach between the Tighe officialdom and the A. F. of L. Executive Council on the one hand and the progressives on the other. Without the progressives nothing will be done about organization, and there is little inducement for the steel workers to join the union. The progressives therefore have as their main duty the fight to restore the unity of the union. Unity in this case means to fight for reinstatement.

In our opinion there can be no evasion of this vital issue. Any attempt to obscure the fight for reinstatement can only introduce new confusion. This appears to be the case in the announcement coming from the sixth district, calling upon the steel workers to join the rank and file Amalgamated Association. It fails entirely to make clear to the steel workers that the first job is to fight for unity of the union forces. It attempts to put before the steel workers something that is unreal, when it is necessary to name things by their right name. When speaking to the steel workers today in the name of the locals that have been declared expelled, or calling upon the steel workers to support them, it is necessary that the support be conditioned on carrying on the fight for reinstatement, that is, carrying on the fight to restore the unity of the union.

Stalinist Parades

The other policy will become only a duplication of the sorry role played by the Stalinists in the extent to which they influenced recent events in the steel workers' union. They were chiefly interested in parade maneuvers to further their own momentary aims with no concern for the actual organization of the steel workers. In this they became a purely disruptive force preventing the progressive movement from attaining a genuine mass basis.

Only a movement having a genuine mass basis can appeal effectively to the steel workers. A union to be successful in the industry must show that it can mobilize the power of solidarity and of united action of the workers. The Amalgamated Association leadership has not shown this at all. But the progressives have the opportunity still. Their fight has just begun. It should have reasonable prospects once they solidify their own ranks and establish a genuine mass basis which is easily possible. The first step toward an accomplishment of this objective is to take up an effective fight for restoration of unity of the union, that is, to fight for reinstatement while keeping the expelled locals intact as the force to back up the fight.

The fight for unity will have to be instituted inside the Amalgamated Association, through the still existing lodges and the organized districts as well as through the contacts available in the A. F. of L. city central bodies and all the way up to the Executive Council.

Solidarity Forever

By FLORENCE WYLE

The interesting story printed below is written by a participant in the Los Angeles Millinery Workers Strike reported elsewhere in this issue. The characters are written about living strikers.

The tiny line moves slowly 'round and 'round. From tired throats comes a weary wisp of song. It is very early. Only strikers with eager hearts would venture forth this cold California morning to watch and see that no scabs go through.

A voice is raised. Big Tony shouts and the line straightens; weary voices are refreshed anew as they sing their song of strength and unity...

... Solidarity For-e-ver!

Tony

Big Tony gave the shout. Big Tony is a blocker. He takes the felt and straw, and steams and shapes them and brings forth the lines in the hats that later on saleswomen will gushingly call—"Panama", "Bolero", "Rhumba". Tony is a good blocker. In the old days he made his eight to ten dollars a day. But Tony sighs. He works much harder now and faster. His once proud shoulders are bent and lifeless. His boss has cut his wages down 'till Tony does not know how he can ever feed the many mouths at home. So he is out on strike. At home his poor bambinos cry some more—but Tony is on strike!

"Little Annie"

The line is filling. Big Tony raises a hand in welcome. Annie, the little floor girl is here. Little is right! When the boss first saw her he was glad because he thought that he could brow-beat her. And so he could—and did. But Annie's brother is on the bum now that he is black-balled after the seamen's strike and Annie's father can still be called upon to tell the story of the Railroad strike—so Annie knows the ways of bosses and when they called the strike Annie stopped her endless scurrying between the various benches and went out with the others. Her boss yelled and raved and then was dumfounded because she didn't listen. Annie is on strike!

The Old-Timer

The line is full now, even to old Morris. Morris can tell you all about hats—(if you understand Yiddish because Morris speaks no other tongue). For you see, Morris has been bending over the machine for thirty years. So now his shoulders are humped and misshapen and his chin has made a well-worn niche in his chest. Many times has Morris been on strike and few were victories. But Morris wouldn't scab and is the first to leave his shop. Each defeat finds him more misshapen, more humped, more weary than the last—but Morris is on strike!

Surging Hopes

'Round and 'round the endless line goes, and no longer weary. There is Evelyn whose mother has T.B.; and there Manny who is quite sure that now he'll have to wait another year before he's got enough for college; and there is Joe and Jake and Mike and Everyone—all with their little woes but each big enough to see the common struggle. Their hopes are surging now and they are singing. And the ears and eyes and minds of the craven scabs and bosses are full with the steady heat of the strikers' cry...

Allard Calls on the P. M. A. Convention For United Struggle in Coming Coal Strike

The following is the substance of a speech delivered by comrade Gerry Allard at the scale convention of the Progressive Miners of America which met at Gillespie, Ill., Feb. 12-17. Comrade Allard made the speech extemporaneously in the course of discussion on the question of the strike situation in the Illinois coal fields which involves about 8,000 miners victimized because of their opposition to John L. Lewis and because of their allegiance to the Progressive Miners Union.

Allard's Remarks

This question is, indeed, the most crucial question to come before the scale convention of our union. As I view it, the question whether our union is to survive depends upon the policy which we set forth on the strike situation. Thousands of our members have been on strike for nearly three years. What they have gone through is almost indescribable. It would take an artist of unusual gift to portray the woes, sufferings and tribulations which our people have undergone in the past many months. The remarks of delegate Centers, of Kincaid, Ill., moved me very much. He is from the striking territory. He spoke with unusual eloquence as to the conditions in the strike field, and I dare say he expressed the fervent wishes of the rank and file there.

I do not choose at this time to deal with the emotional aspect of the situation in the strike field—although that is important. That part of the question has already been covered.

What I want to do is to attempt in the little time allotted me to analyze the situation to date and on that basis present proposals for the successful termination of the strike. An issue which will determine whether our organization—the Progressive Miners of America—is to perpetuate itself as a medium for the defense of the interests of the American coal miners.

Two Roads

There are two roads open to us at this time on the strike situation. Firstly, to militate the strike and carry it forward backed by the full resources of the P. M. of A., or, secondly, to plan to call off an organized and strategically retreat in an organized and honorable fashion. There is no third road middle road. We must frankly face the situation and set forth a program just as courageously as the rank and file have fought during the many months of bitter struggle.

I said there were one or two roads open for us at this time. Being a Marxist, a revolutionist, it is my opinion that we should militate the strike, revamp the Women's Auxiliary along the original lines, augment our forces by seeking the organizational support of the powerful unemployed movement in Illinois, seek allies in the rank and file of the United Mine Workers of America, and go forward once again with the same determination that built this union. This is the road of struggle, not the road of least resistance. This is the only correct road, and a program contrary to the one that has been pursued in the last twenty months.

Unholy Alliance at Work

Today's newspapers report that Lewis is to begin negotiations with his cronies in Washington—the coal operators and the NRA agents. Significantly timed with this and the meeting of our convention here this week is the fact that newspapers report that federal authorities from the department of justice are to begin wholesale arrests of miners in connection with a mysterious "$1,000,000 bombing ring" which has for months terrorized the countryside of the Illinois coal country. And along with this, we have the intensified efforts of Ray Edmundson, Lewis spear-head in Illinois, to win our membership back to the United Mine Workers. These developments are no accidents. They are well organized and planned to wreck the Progressive Miners of America. The alliance of local and federal agents along with Lewis and the coal operators is a conspiracy to prevent the miners from improving their conditions through the Progressive Miners of America. We cannot meet this situation by silence. We must, if we are to live as a union, counter-act this conspiracy by wholesale mobilization and preparation for strike if necessary.

A union is a medium by which wage earners fight to advance or protect their economic interests. It is not something to be set on a pedestal and worshipped blindly. A union is a fighting instrument, day by day, to protect our conditions and advance the cause of our class when the situation is favorable.

On this point I might state that there is a great possibility for us to gain the six-hour day and $6 basic wage scale. And more than that, we have the chance to increase the prestige of our union and probably in the course of the fight for shorter hours and more pay, pull our striking forces out of the rut to complete victory.

Rank-and-File Holds Key

The key to the situation is the rank and file of the Illinois miners irrespective of what union they belong to. We might differ as to what union we want to belong to, but I know that there can be no disagreement as to the need or the shorter work day and the $6 basic scale. We coal miners know that we cannot continue to live even meagerly in the face of the steady inflationary measures of the federal government and subsequent sharp rises in the cost of living all down the line. This is a problem for the rank and file of both the United Mine Workers and the Progressive Miners. On the basis of this need it is possible for us to arrange some sort of unity on the demand for shorter hours and more pay.

Functioning in the Twin Cities functioning in the Twin Cities and throughout the state of Minnesota. The Workmen's Circles in this territory are appealing to their membership for financial aid for the Fargo strikers. Tag days, dances and card parties are being given in Minneapolis to popularize the fight and to raise funds. Socialists, Farmer-Laborites, comrades in the Workers Party, trade unions, fraternal groups, etc. have been drawn into the defense movement.

In short, it can be truthfully said that the conduct of the Fargo strike has contributed to raising the entire trade union movement in the Northwest to a new high level. The example, and the direct aid, of Local 574 has been the decisive factor in the Fargo resurgence.

President Keck has raised the question: "How are we to help the striking miners by striking the miners that are working under our jurisdiction?" In answer to this question let me state that the P. M. of A. is attempting for the first time, and rather late at that, to meet the strike problem. A convention of this kind to discuss the strike situation should have been called twenty months ago. There was a greater chance for us to rejuvenate our forces then there is now. It would have been easier to answer Keck's question twenty months ago. Now the forces of reaction have had their breathing spell. They have gained new courage and are knocking at our doors with unusual boldness.

Strikes Looming Everywhere

Let me point out further, in answer to Keck's question, that there are other forces and developments to look at then our own situation. Look at the steel, rubber, textile and auto situation! Strikes are again on the order of the day. No greater opportunity have the Illinois miners had than the present one. Strikes will again boom up from one end of the country to the other. There is tremendous pressure being brought on the government for social security legislation and the 30-hour week that is unequalled. The working people of this country are beginning to feel the thrill of their power as never before. The Progressive Miners of America can lead the way for the shorter work week. It's going to take strikes, and plenty of them, to complete the pressure for enactment of the six-hour day.

And if we take advantage of this situation we will steal the thunder from John L. Lewis. We can start the ball rolling that will not only save our own situation but immeasurably increase our standing with the workers throughout the United States. A spark now on the shorter work day will have profound repercussions in the American labor movement. The possibilities of spreading the strike to other coal sections of the country and other heavy industries, such as rubber and automobiles, are great.

There is always time to retreat. Now we must examine the possibility of advance. The proposition to retreat at the least opposition of the coal operators with whom we have contracts must be repudiated. We must initiate the movement for less hours and more pay with undiluted determination.

Plan of Action Proposed

My time to speak has elapsed. Let me say this, however, in conclusion. I have hurriedly scribbled several points which briefly embody what I think ought to be done to win our demands and the strike of 8,000 of our members. They are as follows:

1. Strike every mine in Illinois and elsewhere for the six-hour day and five day week and $6 basic wage.
2. Offer to the members of the United Mine Workers of America a proposal for joint action on the basis of these and other demands.
3. A referendum vote of all Illinois miners to determine what union the Illinois miners want to belong to.
4. Lifetime compensation for the dependants of all victims slain in the mine war.
5. Release all prisoners now serving prison sentences.
6. Unity in Action of our forces with the Illinois Workers Alliance which is now organized 150,000 strong.
7. Call an extraordinary convention of the rank and file of all Illinois miners to finally consummate the aforementioned program.

This is the program that will win for us. This is the program that will save the situation for our already striking brothers. This is the program that will get us our demands. There is no other course. If there is I would like to hear it before this convention adjourns.

Poverty and Discrimination

BEHIND THE HARLEM EVENTS

The recent riot in Harlem is closely linked to the Home Relief Bureau and its maladministration of relief. The population of Harlem is, roughly, 250,000. Calculated on a basis of 65,000 adults capable of holding jobs, 80 percent are unemployed and almost all who are lucky enough to have work earn miserable wages. Yet only 15 percent of the population is on relief.

It is almost unbelievable but a simple calculation reveals that 65 percent of the 250,000 are without any means of support either from work or relief.

In Harlem where the real-estate is almost exclusively owned by white landlords (the bankers) rents are 40 percent higher in relation to the rest of the cities.

Death Stalks the Streets

Price-levels are, even on essential commodities, like bread, 7 to 30 percent above the city level. Is it any wonder, then, that four or five Negro families are crowded into a one-family apartment with no heat, no bathing facilities, no air—no room to live?

The death-rate for tuberculosis through the city is 60 per 1,000 dead. In Harlem it is 250 per 1,000, and in the "lung-section" between Madison and 5th Avenues, 116th Street to 125th Street it is 275.

In 1934, the Harlem Hospital in examining clients found that 6,000 had syphilis and had to turn away 5,000 of these because it had no adequate facilities to treat them.

Home Relief Discriminates

What have the Home Relief Bureaus done? In the first place it is of interest to point out that two precinct supervisors, a Mr. Courtney and a Mr. Swarz, have been transferred to different sections of the city after their open discrimination against the Negroes on the staff of the Home Relief Bureau had brought a strong protest from the Employees Association.

The Bureau has deliberately rejected thousands of Negroes on the basis of no residence proof. Under the Wicks Law an applicant for relief must establish two years residence in the state the last year of which must be spent in New York City. The Negroes, because they live jammed together, because they are evicted wholesale and have no place to preserve letters, cards, etc., because thousands never live in one place long enough to register and to vote, because the rude band of poverty compels them to live in chaos, find it difficult to prove residence.

Special Rules for Harlem

In every part of the city notarized letters saying that Mr. So and So knows that the applicant has lived at such and such addresses for such a period of time are accepted as residence proof. Everywhere except in Harlem. Only through pressure and workers' demonstrations have notarized statements been accepted. The Urban League, and organization ended by the numerical very few Negro petty-bourgeoisie and supposedly interested in welfare work, has stood calmly by.

In face of the high rents in Harlem, the Bureau gives the Negroes the minimum rent. To illustrate: Every precinct supervisor is allowed a budget in relation to the social pressure which groups, within that precinct's territory, can exert. A strong unemployed movement means more blankets and clothes, etc. The rents vary within a small margin: the simplest example is a single man or couple; they can be allowed $14 to $16 a month (1 or 2 people get the same amount) depending upon the discretion of the individual supervisor.

The Iron Starvation Rule

In Harlem the iron rule handed down to the investigators is pay $14. Of course higher rents can be paid for "case-work reasons". And it is always an easy task to discover a "case-work" reason for a petty-bourgeois who happens to know the local ward healer, but not for a Negro worker.

Further, the Negroes on home-relief are discriminated against when it is a question of filling a work-relief project. This particular discrimination is, to a degree, rooted in the A. F. of L. bureaucracy's stand against admitting Negroes on an equal basis into the trade unions. One of the main tasks of progressive unionists must be to hammer down this bar.

New Color in Spectrum

Naturally, the same discriminations are used against the Porto Ricans. As a matter of fact, the discriminatory artists of the Dept. of Public Welfare have invented a new color. On the basis of color, applicants are classified as white, black, and Porto Rican!

The question which Marxists must ask is: How does the Home Relief Bureau get away with its malpractices? Of course, the general answer is that it has behind it all the repressive machinery of capitalism. Briefly, however, the enormous influence of the handful of Negro misleaders, agents of Tammany or Fusion, can not be overlooked. They spread confusion, utopian and quack ideas. Secondly, the impotence of the Stalinist party which, although it has concentrated in Harlem for years, because of its theory in regard to the Negroes has accomplished nothing. Nor is the Unemployed Union free from criticism. Its tactic of isolated case-work, conferring with the Home Relief Bureau like one charity organization, with another, has noticeably sapped the militancy of the workers within its ranks. Our comrades in the W.U.U. have got to propagandize and agitate for mass action. It is the only way the discrimination can be smashed.

The Negroes all over the United States are a crucial problem for the American revolutionists. We have little European experience to go by. The Workers Party must undertake this task by intensifying its work among those who are the most oppressed and downtrodden, the scorned, the insulted, the injured—the Negro workers and tenant-farmers.

March 23, at 4 P.M. Three hours later the new union had recruited four hundred members, and a queue of men and women was still waiting down the steps from the headquarters and out on the street. Today the Fargo-Moorhead Local 173 confidently faces the bosses across the picket line, with every assurance that the Local can quickly force a favorable settlement from the Associated Industries.

N.P.L.D. Attorney At Work

Through the efforts of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the Fargo strikers have had for the past two weeks the services of one of the crack labor lawyers of the country, Francis Heisler of Chicago, a former I.L.D. man. Since Heisler has been in Fargo, he has abruptly checked the high-handed tactics of Judge Paulson and States Attorney Bergeson. A 30-day extension has been granted the 16 defendants now under sentence from 2 to 6 months hard labor for "inciting to riot". All strikers are out of jail for the first time since January. Heisler has not only functioned in the courtroom but has also aided strikers to get relief, and participated in the organizational work. In short, he is everything that a labor attorney should be. His name is in the signal for a standing cheer everywhere in Fargo.

attacking the union, Miles Dunne, and the local leadership.

This treacherous blow to the Fargo workers came in the tenth week of a heroic struggle against the reactionary Associated Industries of Fargo-Moorhead. The union has held firm in the face of virulent terrorism, of a raid on strike headquarters, of the arrest of practically the entire section of Local 371 out on strike, of the most vicious attacks from the Fargo Forum and from local pulpits, of a recent injunction prohibiting the union and all its friends from doing anything but sit still and breathe. It was precisely at this point that the bureaucratic Mr. Tobin chose to perform his signal service for the employers by revoking the charter and bitterly attacking the strikers.

Tobin's attack on Local 173, by far the strongest and most militant union in North Dakota, was followed by exactly the opposite reaction from that hoped for by Tobin, Green, Woll and Co. For hours after the revocation of the charter, workmen and women walked around stunned and grim with rage. A provisional committee began recruiting on Saturday,

WHAT TO ATTEND

Philadelphia, Pa.

March 31, Sunday evening—A. J. Muste, National Secretary of W.P. will speak on "Coming Struggles in Rubber, Auto and Steel Industries". Grand Fraternity Building, 1626 Arch Street.

New York City

March 31, Sunday afternoon, 2:30 P.M.—General Membership Meeting. N. Y. headquarters, 2 West 15th St. Report on Pittsburgh Conference.

April 6, Saturday evening—Tri-Borough Branch. Headquarters, 2 W. 15th St., 3rd floor. The date has been postponed from March 30.

April 13, Sat. evening—Spartacus Youth League Dance.

April 20, Sat. evening—Chess Contest and Spring Frolic by New York District membership. Headquarters, 2 West 15th St. All paid Red Cabaret tickets given out Feb. 16th will be honored at this affair.

The date has been postponed from the 13th because of the S.Y.L. dance.

A dance class has been established and is now meeting regularly on Tuesday and Friday evenings. Rates are nominal.

Plentywood Leads Drive

Plentywood has led the way in real achievement on the circulation drive. By March 31 the drive will reach the half way mark. All branches should have at least a 50% score by that time.

Cincinnati, Minneapolis, Davenport, Louisville and Youngstown should have minimum of 50% mark during the next week.

Greater effort is needed in the other branches and districts. New York has not given the drive sufficient support. Chicago and Philadelphia are still behind. These Branches must get solidly in line with the campaign and push it to a successful conclusion. Only if every one does his part can this be done.

Bundle orders have increased also, but not enough. New bundles are going to California, Oregon, Arizona, Illinois and Canada, but here again the New York branches have fallen down. Their bundles have decreased. Fortunately this decrease has been more than compensated by the gain in the rest of the country. However, it is about time for New York to get busy again and show the way.

What is your answer? What are you going to do about it during the next two months?

The answer must be a vote of support expressed in increased subs and bundle circulation. Your scores here will indicate your willingness to lay a solid basis for the movement.

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

The AAA and the Tenant Farmer

Just as the development of capitalist industry results in the ever greater concentration of wealth in the hands of the few fabulously rich financiers, so the development of capitalist farming exhibits also the concentration of land ownership in the hands of fewer and fewer land barons. By means of its complex control of the market for agricultural products, of the prices charged to farmers for the goods they need, and of the credit system, monopoly finance capital exploits the small farmer more intensively than under any previous economic system. Helpless against the gigantic forces not of nature but of monopoly capitalism, the farmer gradually falls into hopeless debt through the process of mortgaging his land, his home, even his future crop in his desperate struggle to keep from starving.

The bankers' mortgage system is merely a stage in the degradation of the independent farmer to land tenancy and into share-cropping and the status of farm laborer. The capitalist ruling class in the advanced countries has created this inevitable process with dread, for it creates the allies of the proletariat in the struggle for power and thus menaces the "social stability". American capitalism is now face to face with the problem of "stabilizing" agriculture and subsidizing farmers so as to maintain them for use against the working class when it becomes necessary. The AAA was created with this in view and was intended to aid in "solving" the farm problem. Actually its attempts reveal, leaving aside the hypocrisy of every ruling class when dealing with the exploited and oppressed, the utter inability of capitalism to solve the farm problem.

Driving Farmers Off the Land

The report by the Committee on Minority Groups in the Economic Recovery, just issued, shows how the AAA has worked not in the interests of the actual farmers, but in those of the exploiters of these farmers through the well-established modes of usury. The bankers have been enabled to borrow funds at low rates of interest and to loan out these same funds at the usual extortionate rates. Far from "stabilizing" the farming industry, the policy pursued by the government under the New Deal has had the effect of degrading the lot of the tenant farmer even more, and of actually driving him off the land.

Curtailment of crops to raise prices has put out of employment hundreds of thousands of tenant farmers in the South. It pays the landlord to evict these tenants, whites and blacks alike, thereby evading all responsibility for feeding them and throwing them on the starvation relief handed out by the government. Meantime, while its policies result in this wholesale wave of evictions and driving of farmers off the land, the government makes empty gestures of establishing "subsistence homesteads" and "peasant proprietorships". And this is the reactionary solution offered by the Committee on Minority Groups. Only socialism, not capitalism, can really set out to solve the agricultural problem, by organizing the farmers into collectives and giving them a fair exchange in manufactured goods and services for their crops.

The Attack on Trotsky

The constantly growing and ever more vicious attacks made in the Stalinist press on Comrade Trotsky, assume more and more the aspect of a widespread preparation for new efforts of the Soviet bureaucracy to perpetrate a frame-up against him. In their desperate eagerness to trick the working class into believing that Trotsky can, by some occult process known only to the Stalinists, be lumped together with counter-revolutionists and white guards, not to mention police agents, the Stalinists form a real united front with bourgeois reaction.

Nothing would suit the French reactionaries more than to see this Bolshevik-Leninist snuffed out of existence. They recognize that the real menace to French capitalism comes from those revolutionists who are working to create the Fourth International. The New International would at the same time be a menace not to the Soviet Union to the defense of which it would be devoted, but to the corrupt bureaucracy that has ruled in Russia since Lenin died. In order to scotch the growing movement of workers in the countries of Western Europe for the creation of the Fourth International, as symbolized by the building of the new Dutch Revolutionary Party, the Stalinists feel it necessary to discredit Comrade Trotsky.

Their effort at a "plant" in the Kirov assassination—through a letter that the GPU had hoped to obtain with the aid of a foreign consul—fell through. But this makes all the more likely a new and worse attempt in France where the Soviet bureaucracy feels its whole opportunist policy jeopardized by the revolutionary course pursued by the Bolshevik-Leninist fraction of the French Socialist Party. The growing and concerted attacks in such sheets as the Daily Worker thus merely serve to set us on our guard against the danger of a new frame-up against Comrade Trotsky.

Dutch Parties Raise Banner of Fourth International

(Ed. Note: At the recent Paris Conference of the Left Socialist and Independent parties the two revolutionary organizations of Holland, the Independent Socialist Party and the Revolutionary Socialist Party, strongly defended the slogan of the Fourth International, and urged that steps be taken to further the movement for its constitution. The Socialist Workers Party of Germany (S.A.P.) appeared as the chief saboteurs of the slogan which they once publicly espoused. We print below a polemic on the question from the columns of De Banbreker, official organ of the Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland in response to an editorial in Het Volk, the organ of the reformist Social Democrats. We hope in the near future to have more complete reports of the Paris Conference as well as of the fusion of the two Holland parties under the banner of the Fourth International.)

TRANSLATION OF ARTICLE IN DE BAANBREKER (March 2, 1935, on the Paris Conference of Feb. 14)

Het Volk under the heading "Splitters Hold Congress" states: "The New Leader (British) contains a report of the conference of so-called left Socialist groups recently held in Paris. Holland was represented by the O.S.P. and R.S.P. The chief point on the agenda was the question of the building of a New International. The report indicates the greatest differences of opinion on the subject exist among the various parties and groups. The Hollanders were proceeding as rapidly as possible with the building of the New International. Representatives of the German S. A. P. remarked that it would be an illusion to suppose that the workers are waiting breathlessly for the New International. The Poles regarded a New International as desirable but opined that the question still remained a theoretical one. In the voting three groups, namely, the O.S.P., R.S.P. and Youth Bureau, voted for the New International; three, the English I.L.P., Swedish

As indicated in a previous issue, the German S.A.P. was chiefly concerned with bringing together the greatest possible majority for a purely platonic utterance on the New International. The importance to this activity that it should be the resolution of the "Het Volk" enforces the "wisdom" of the S.A.P. in this connection. We wish to make it known in a plain manner that the plottings for the regeneration of the revolutionary working class movement we do not appreciate such "wisdom".

Official Communists and Social Democrats are naturally of one mind in combatting the idea of the new growing Fourth International. Nothing else can be expected from them. Entirely incorrect is the view of those workers who use the formula that the New International will stand "between the Social Democracy and the official C. P." He who cherishes this idea is obsessed in the same way as those confused element who think of a fusion of the Second and Third International and consequently, so far as possible, avoid facing the question of rallying the forces of labor in the Fourth International.

No one among us has the foolish notion that we have simply to "proclaim" the Fourth International in order to establish it as a factor in the political life of the working class. Neither, however, is there anyone among us who cherishes the sickly notion that in the process of bringing the Fourth International into being we can dispense with the banner which symbolizes the new idea. For our part we do not tire of presenting the evidences of the progressive and rapid bankruptcy of the Second and Third Internationals.

But we are not defeatists. We do not go on utopian voyages of discovery after brand new ideas which would have only one characteristic, namely, freedom from "taint" of traditional Socialism.

Why Join the Workers Party?

By A. J. MUSTE

Fellow-Worker:

You say that quite a few of the men you have been talking to have been impressed by my arguments about the need of overthrowing the present economic system and of building a Marxist revolutionary party to lead the workers and their allies in doing the job. You have, however, a member of the Communist (Stalinist) party in your shop and he says that the C. P. is the only revolutionary party, and the Third (Communist) International the only International revolutionary organization. You are against the Soviet Union, according to him, if you are against the C. P. The C. P. is the party that is doing the fighting for the workers, the Negroes, etc. Of course it has made some mistakes, but it has corrected them, and "any one who attacks the C. P. or builds another party now when the C. P. is being attacked by Hearst and others is helping Fascism and attacking and undermining the Soviet Union, and is no better than Hitler himself." The Workers Party is ready to meet that argument and to meet it in no uncertain terms.

We hold that the C. P. and C. I. are no longer revolutionary organizations. They have in recent years organized and are now organizing defeats and not victories for the working class. Insofar as they have influence, they retard the building of a healthy and vigorous revolutionary movement everywhere. Furthermore, the policies of the Stalinist leadership which dominates the Soviet Union and the C. I. do not strengthen the defense of the Soviet Union, the one workers' state in the world; they are weakening and destroying those defenses; they are preparing the way for the overthrow of the workers' state.

We must not be deceived by the paper programs of the C. P., by the claims it makes for itself, or the fact that it still has a considerable number of members and adherents. The Social Democrats called themselves Marxists, claimed to have the only way to establish Socialism and maintained big parties of the Second International in various countries after the betrayal of the masses into the hands of nationalism in the Great War of 1914-18. But the Social Democracy had ceased to be a progressive force, had become a hindrance to the onward course of the workers' revolution. The vanguard workers, the best fighting elements left the S. P. Under Lenin's leadership the perspective of building the new, Third, International was raised. Although the number of those who accepted this line was at first small and they were apparently isolated from the mass movements which had plunged into support of the war activities of the imperialist powers, the future was with the forces looking toward the new International. Very soon, in the crisis in Russia in 1917, they demonstrated their soundness and their power by giving the final blow to Czarism, overthrowing the middle class and establishing the Workers' State. Even so, the future today is with the parties and groups looking toward the Fourth International.

I do not have the space in this letter to go fully into all the evidence to back up our estimate of the C. P., the C. I. and the Stalinist leadership of the Soviet Union. We have dealt and will deal with them in the New Militant, the New International and in pamphlets and books. Here I want to list just a few points which I am sure will convince you and which you can use in discussion with workers who are still under official C. P. influence.

1. The Third International has not had a Congress since 1928—seven years! Why not? Back in the days when the Soviet Union was being attacked on a dozen fronts World Congresses of the C. I. were held in Moscow every year. If the leadership of the C.P.S.U. prevents the holding of World Congresses now, it must be because it does not care to or dare to face a World Congress—or both. What kind of a vanguard international party of the working class of the world is it which in these years of the triumph of Fascism, in these days of war preparations everywhere, holds no World Congress? What evidence is there that the present leadership of the Soviet Union is interested in the world?

Revolutionary Marxism remains for us the living fountain from which spring the ideas that must serve as the basis of the Fourth International. There is continuity in the development of the working class movement. Even in times of depression in the movement this continuity obtains. Whereas the Second International presents a hopelessly crippled version of the fundamental truths of revolutionary Marxism and the Third International has falsified revolutionary Marxism, the fighting proletariat will nevertheless understand that it must carry through its international battle in the Marxist spirit and that its organization, the coming Fourth International, must be a revolutionary Marxist organization.

revolution? How many more years have to go by without a Congress of the C. I. before the C. P. will admit that in reality there is no longer a C. I. and will graciously allow that it is not "counter-revolutionary" for the workers to build a new International?

2. Consider the debacle of the Communist Party in Germany. Here we had the mightiest Communist Party in the capitalist world. Ever since the war a powerful Communist movement had existed in Germany. Yet this movement collapsed like a toy balloon at the advent of Hitler—without a gesture of resistance, without a single fight in the streets. Surely this is evidence of a terrible degeneration in the C. I. How many debacles like that in Germany do we have to permit before the workers have a "right" to call a halt, brush the C. I. aside, and build a new International?

3. All the leading policies of the C. P. of the U. S. in recent years have proven bankrupt and have recently been tossed overboard. The A. F. of L. unions are company unions and must be smashed; "revolutionary" unions dual to the A. F. of L. must be built; a federation of labor dual to the A. F. of L. must be established; we do not enter into a united front with the S. P. etc. but only into a "united front from below" with the members of the S. P.; Socialists are social-fascists; "Social Democracy is the twin of Fascism"; those who advocate a labor party are simply trying to keep the masses out of the C. P.—these have been the basic policies of the C. P. in this country for six years. They were reaffirmed by a unanimous vote (all votes are unanimous in the C. P.) at a party convention last June. Any who questioned any of these policies were denounced in the most vicious and scurrilous manner as counter-revolutionists and social-fascists. Today all these policies are tossed overboard without even the formality of a party convention. A somewhat in fact has been executed. Stalinists have to go into A. F. of L. unions. C. P. leaders fawn upon trade union bureaucrats and S. P. leaders. They are silent as the grave about the dearly beloved united front from below. It seems that there are no more social fascists on the earth. The C. P. takes the initiative in building a "labor" party—a mass, class, federated, revolutionary, not reformist, not revisionist, highest form of united front "labor" party! I cannot imagine that this group of workers meeting at your house will "fall" for this C. P. "conversion", a conversion like that of the habitual drunk at the Rescue Mission; and for the colossal impudence of the C. P. plea to American workers: "We have a 100 percent record of failure on all our policies. Everybody else saw it years ago. Even we see it now. Consequently, we are the only qualified revolutionary leaders of the working class!"

4. A Dictatorship of one man, Stalin, exists in the Third International. Earl Browder, secretary of the C.P.U.S. is his messenger boy. Under these conditions the C. P. is utterly incapable of correcting its mistakes. It can only execute zig-zags. Consider what happened a month or two ago. The C. P. is against a "labor" party. Browder steps off the boat; just returned from Moscow. He hurries to Washington. A non-party gathering, the Unemployment Insurance Congress, is in session there. Some Lovestones (whose main aim in life, curiously enough, is still to get back into the C. P.) distributed a leaflet calling for the building of a labor party. Using the type of argument at which they shine most brightly, the Stalinists tore up the leaflets and beat up the Lovestones distributors! Then the meeting opened and Browder made them a speech informing them that they were now for a labor party!

What happened? True, some of the comrades turned pale momentarily and experienced that sick feeling at the stomach. There had to be some explanation in the Daily Worker. The nature of this explanation is the best evidence anyone could ask of the low intellectual level of the C. P., and that includes the "intellectuals", critics, novelists, poets, artists, social workers, preachers, etc. who are C. P. members or stooges.

The Daily Worker explained: The Labor Party question is one of tactics not principle, so we can change the line without much ado. Anyway, it was not really a change of line; we always were for a labor party under proper conditions. As for having a party discussion before changing the line, in the first place in the C. P. the members have such confidence in the Political Committee that the Committee can act without consulting the membership; in the second place, in the C. P. discussion does not precede action—we discuss and act at the same time (though to the eye of the simple-minded outsider it looked as though Stalin gave the order, Browder obediently repeated it, the party leaders and members blinked their eyes, swallowed hard, accepted the order like the robots they have become, and only then indulged in a little "discussion", a very little "discussion" in which no one breathed the least doubt of the omniscience of Stalin, "the beloved and genial leader of our party and of the working class", as he is now described in the Soviet Union which would have had a word for). Naturally enough about all that emerged from a "discussion" conducted on that level was that "Trotskyist" opposition to the labor party or criticism of the way in which the turn in the party line had been effected was part of a counter-revolutionary plot to assassinate Kirov!

5. Many an honest worker in the C. P. and outside finally swallows all its mistakes and crimes and remains loyal to it, because he accepts the C. P. argument which runs something like this: The Soviet Union is the only workers' state in the world. It is the workers' fatherland. It is in terrible danger today. Our main, practically our sole task, is to defend it. Save the Soviet Union and all is saved; lose it and all is lost. "Attack" the C. P. today and you attack Stalin; attack Stalin who has the full support of the workers in the U. S. today and you attack the U. S. Any one who does that is doing just what Hitler does: he lines up with Hitler, he is an assassin of Soviet leaders, he is that vilest of all creatures, one who under the disguise of a revolutionist would destroy the Soviet Union and the October Revolution.

We too believe that the Soviet Union is a workers' state. We point to the achievements of the workers in the U. S. as evidence of how planned socialist production even in the face of the greatest obstacles and when as yet only the beginnings of the foundations of a socialist system exist alongside of vestiges of capitalism, can do more for the masses than capitalism can. We stand, and we alone, for the real defense of the Soviet Union.

To hold that you can defend the U. S. and advance the interests of the Soviet workers only by accepting the Stalin regime and not criticizing Stalin is like saying that in order to defend unionism in the U. S. and advance the interests of organized labor you have to accept the regime of Bill Green, John L. Lewis, Matty Wolf and Dan Tobin and have to regard any criticism of these bureaucrats as treason. Our contention is precisely that in both cases the interests of the workers can be advanced only by defeating the present leadership.

The Stalin theory is that Socialism can be built—that is, poverty abolished, classes done away with, etc.—in the Soviet Union alone and although capitalism still holds sway in all other lands. It is natural that under these circumstances those who believe this and especially office-holders in the U. S. should become lukewarm about the revolution in other countries, should concentrate all their attention on "building Socialism" in the U. S. and tell the Communist parties in other countries that their only job is "defending the Soviet Union".

What is the result of the working-out of this theory? The international revolutionary movement is emasculated. Not a Congress of the C. I. has been held out in seven years, as we have pointed out. The Communist parties in capitalist countries are forced to change their line mechanically as the exigencies of the foreign and domestic policies of the present leadership of the S. U. dictate. Upon parties thus weakened Fascism inflicts one defeat after another.

The Soviet Union not being able to count under these circumstances on the backing of any powerful revolutionary force in capitalist countries, the Stalinist leadership leads it further and further into a swamp. In order to postpone war, the S. U. enters the League of Nations which Lenin described as a league of imperialist robbers, and Stalin proclaims this as a victory for the workers. A military alliance or "understanding" is entered into with imperialist France. Non-aggression pacts are signed with various countries. "Leagues against War and Fascism" mainly composed of middle class intellectuals, are organized. Workers are imbued with the pacifist illusion that peace can be maintained by these means. But even that is not the worst that Stalinism can do and has done.

The Bolshevik party in the U. S. has been destroyed. Of the Political Bureau of the party in Lenin's time no one but Stalin remains. All the rest are in prison, exile or retirement. Party opponents of Stalin are sent to Siberia or shot. In their place men like the present Soviet ambassadors to London, Paris, Berlin, Washington, who were bourgeois professors or Mensheviks or actually engaged in counter-revolutionary activity at the time of the October revolution are elevated to office, and along with professors and social workers in the U. S. who discovered Russia yesterday, become authorities on how to defend the Soviet Union!

Recently one of these 1935 model Bolsheviks, Troskyanovsky, Soviet ambassador to Washington, spoke to the big shots of the Bond Club of New York about non-aggression pacts (with capitalist powers) as a means to preserve peace. He argued that the nations must go further—"dig to the bottom of contemporary troubles". How? "It is necessary to work out practical plans for the economic rehabilitation of the world, and especially for Europe." In order to make it perfectly clear that he meant rehabilitation under capitalism he added: "Probably the advice of broad-minded business men would be available and useful in this connection."

Thus the way is prepared for Communists (Stalinists) to work for the rehabilitation, not the overthrow of capitalism and to fight for some imperialist nation when war comes on the ground that this nation is allied with the Soviet Union and that failing to fight for it will mean to weaken the "defense of the Soviet Union". Thus also the destruction of the workers' state in the Soviet Union is prepared, for a war in which the S. U. is involved, while the revolutionary working class movement is demoralized and the workers are the peasants have any need for democratic reforms. So long as Stalin keeps both his hands upon the throat of the proletarian vanguard all constitutional reforms will remain Bonapartist reformism.

QUESTION BOX

QUESTION: How do you account for the fact that Hearst makes use of Trotsky's pamphlet "The Kirov Assassination" to attack the Soviet Union so that the Daily Worker of March 20, pointing to this fact, is able to claim that Hearst and Trotsky are allies?

ANSWER: To clarify the question let us first consider an analogy. When a trade union bureaucrat is proven to be corrupt, the capitalist press, identifying the corrupt union bureaucracy with the union itself, points to the facts with glee for the purpose of discrediting unionization in general. From the workers' viewpoint, however, which makes a distinction between the union as a workers' organization and its corrupt bureaucracy, it is necessary that the progressive elements within the organizations unceasingly expose such corruption so as to correct it, and only in this way can it be corrected and the corrupt leadership replaced.

The bureaucrats never attempt to reply to this criticism on its merits, i.e., are the charges true or not; that is too dangerous. Identifying themselves with the union to divert from the real issues, they usually answer as follows: "By attacking us you people are attempting to destroy OUR union. See! Even the press of the boss is using the information you are spreading to discredit us so that workers will quit the organization or refuse to join." As a matter of fact many workers, under the pressure of the capitalist propaganda, are repelled by the dishonesty of many trade-union bureaucrats, and consider unions as rackets, but the responsibility for this lies, not in the necessary criticism of the left-wing workers, but in the DEEDS of the bureaucrats.

Except that it is on a much higher historical plane and therefore more difficult to visualize, the degeneration of the Stalinist bureaucracy in the Soviet Union might be compared to that of the bureaucracy of the trade unions in the capitalist countries. Identifying themselves with the Workers' State, the Stalinists consider and label any attack on their mistakes and crimes as an attack on the workers' fatherland itself. In this they stand on the same premise as Hearst, who also identifies the Stalinists with the Soviet Union and attacks the latter through the misdeeds of the former, using if necessary the fact that Trotsky, who does not identify the Stalinist clique with the proletarian dictatorship and sharply criticizes their bureaucratic machinations in an attempt to correct them. (It is to be observed that Hearst does not even hesitate to use Lenin's critique of the Paris Commune for the same purpose, but the Daily Worker conveniently ignores this fact.)

The Stalinists have not answered the criticism made in Trotsky's pamphlet (that would be treading on thin ice), even though they have devoted much space to slandering it. The attempt of the Daily Worker to draw an equation sign between Hearst and Trotsky is merely a smoke-screen to divert from the real issues, a procedure in no way differing from that used by corrupt trade union bureaucracies.

The gist of the matter is this: Analogous to the case of the trade unions, any discredit which may come to the Soviet Union flows, not from the necessary and correct criticisms launched against the Stalinist bureaucracy by the revolutionists, but from the DEEDS of this bureaucracy itself.

That the destruction and defeat of imperialist powers is their aim mean no more than the declarations on peace and socialism of the Social Democratic leaders before 1914. The defense of the Soviet Union today and the liberation of the masses in capitalist countries depends today upon the building of new revolutionary parties and the new International.

Sometimes workers have protested that these are "Russian" questions and do not concern American workers. But it is clear that nothing can concern American workers more directly than questions of the trade union policy, labor party, war, and on all of these the situation in the C. I. determines the policy which the C. P. tries to impose on American workers. Whatever weakens the revolutionary movement and strengthens Fascism anywhere directly concerns us, in this world where peoples do not live within sky-high national walls, where the workers must build a new international economy or perish in the slaughter created by the nationalists and imperialists.

It is just because it is so tremendously important that we build a powerful revolutionary party in the U. S. that we must deliver the revolutionary movement in this country from the domination of the C. I. and the C.P.S.U. That can be done only if we understand the fundamental reasons for the degeneration which has taken place in them under the regime of Stalinism.

The Right to Vote for Stalin Is Granted

"Soviet Democracy"

In order to erect some sort of a partial screen to counteract the repulsive impression which has been created by Stalin's manhandling of his political opponents, under the guise of waging a struggle against terrorists, much publicity has been given to a great democratic reform: collective farmers, as members of a socialist society, have been given equal electoral rights with the industrial workers. Upon this score the flunkies have raised a hullabaloo about the entry into to kingdom of genuine democracy [but what was there yesterday?]

The Role of the Party

The inequality in the electoral rights between the workers and peasants had its social reasons. The dictatorship of the proletariat in a peasant country found its necessary and open expression in electoral privileges of the workers. The inequality of rights presupposed, in any case, the existence of rights. The Soviet system provided the toilers with a genuine possibility for determining the fate of the country. The political power was concentrated in the hands of the vanguard—party. Through the Soviets and the trade unions, the party was always submitted to the pressure of the masses. By means of this pressure the party kept the Soviet bureaucracy subordinate to itself.

It is utter nonsense that the peasantry has sensibly succeeded in reeducating itself socially during the two to three years of collectivization. The antagonism between the city and village still preserves all of its acuteness. Even today the dictatorship is inconceivable without the hegemony of the proletariat over the peasantry. But the inequality in the electoral rights between the workers and peasants has lost its real content, in so far as the bureaucracy has completely deprived both the former and the latter of political rights. From the standpoint of the mechanics of the Bonapartist regime the appointment of electoral districts is of absolutely no significance. The bureaucracy might have given the peasant ten times as many votes as the worker—we would obtain the very same result, for each and all possess in the last analysis the one and only right: to vote for Stalin.

The secret ballot may at first sight appear to be a genuine concession. But who would dare to oppose his own candidacy to the official slate? An oppositionist, if elected by "secret ballot", would, indeed, be declared an open class enemy, immediately after the elections. Thus the secret ballot cannot effect any real change.

The entire reform represents a Bonapartist masquerade—and nothing more. The very need of such a masquerade is unmistakable testimony to the growing sharpening in the relations between the bureaucracy and the toiling masses. Neither the workers nor the peasants have any need for democratic reforms. So long as Stalin keeps both his hands upon the throat of the proletarian vanguard all constitutional reforms will remain Bonapartist reformism.

W. P. on the Firing Line

THE pages of this issue of the New Militant are alive with direct reports of labor action on many fronts. Everywhere the American workers are stirring. The third great strike wave under the New Deal is in the making. From all indications, the strikes breaking out in various parts of the country are simply preliminary skirmishes which presage the deeper and more widespread labor rebellion to come in the next few months. And what is of exceptional significance in the situation is the active role of the members of the Workers Party in the struggles now under way and in the course of preparation. Our reports are not written in the office; they come direct from the firing line, from party members in the midst of the actions.

In the strikes at Los Angeles, Fargo and Toledo—three of the hot spots at the moment—party members are in the forefront, playing an active and, to a certain extent, a leading part. Our comrades are on the job at Akron where a great rubber strike impends. At St. Louis they are busy in the preparations for a strike of gas workers. In cooperation with other progressive and militant forces they are leading the turbulent left wing movement in the Illinois coal fields. Party members are the mainspring of the Unemployed Leagues, the most imposing movement of the unemployed in the entire country which only recently held a state convention in Ohio with 400 bona fide delegates.

This remarkable activity in the class struggle on so many fronts is a heartening sign of the times and a magnificent prospect for the future. The party of revolutionary theory is revealing itself, from the start, as the party of action. That road will lead unflinchingly to a rapidly increasing strength and expanding influence of our party. Clarity of principle and resolute, energetic action—this combination is the formula for victory. Our activity under this sign during the first period of the party's existence has already brought gratifying results and has started the party on the right road. Nothing can stop us if we stick to this line.

The Socialist Party Crisis

IF THE Socialist Party is turning revolutionary, as some conscientious people believe and some conscious deceivers maintain, nothing happened at the Buffalo meeting of the National Executive Committee to support the contention. On the contrary, the leading body of the party demonstrated once again at Buffalo that it has sufficient political affinity with the reactionary Old Guard to overlook its splitting provocations and allow six weeks longer for a reconciliation. At the same time the N.E.C. showed no less hostility to revolutionary ideas than that which animates the Old Guard itself.

And what else was to be expected from this body? The motion declaring the advocacy of the overthrow of capitalism by revolutionary means to be "incompatible with membership in the party" was not a reversal of position or a betrayal of principles previously held by the N.E.C. majority. The party leaders were simply reaffirming the Detroit Declaration as they understand it, and not as pseudo-lefts and apologetic ex-communists explain it. Louis Waldman, spokesman of the Old Guard and champion of bourgeois democratic "socialism" without one percent discount, branded the action of the N.E.C. as a "capitulation" to the Old Guard. That, however, is an unjust accusation. The left reformists in control of the National Committee only remained true to their own color by their motion to purge the party of the troublesome "reds." Red is not their color.

What are they fighting about?—the perplexed and disappointed radical workers in the Socialist Party may well ask themselves. Not over principles, but rather over methods of coping with the radical sentiments of the socialist workers which have been given a powerful impetus by the debacle of social reformism in Europe and the sharpening class struggle in the United States. Not over roads to power in the struggle against capitalism—the N.E.C. majority is no less devoted to "democratic" methods than the Old Guard—but over power in the party. That is why the struggle against the Old Guard centers around organization questions and such abstractions as "unity"; the real political blows are directed against left wing tendencies in the party.

What is the political tendency of the dominant leaders of the party which is so extravagantly—and so falsely—advertised as the "party of revolutionary unity"? They have made it clear long ago for those who judge actions politically and report them honestly. It was written in deeds once again at Buffalo. The Oklahoma Guardian, that priceless representative of Detroit Declaration socialism, gives over its columns to a campaign for a third party to include Huey Long and the LaFollettes and carries articles from the facile pen of the democrat, Upton Sinclair. That is O.K. with the N.E.C. of the revolutionized party; there is no censure for Ameringer. The New Leader dares—at this day, after Germany and Austria!—to present the Scandinavian socialists in the governments of capitalist States as comrades in arms. There is not even a suggestion of criticism from the party leadership. But the five Buffalo party members, appealing to the N.E.C. against their expulsion, are cynically referred back to the State Executive Committee—the very body which instigated their expulsion! And mention the appalling fact that there are people of "Trotskyist", that is, revolutionary Marxist tendencies in the party—as Oneal did accusingly at the meeting—and Norman Thomas promptly retorts: "Point them out to us and we will kick them out." In these acts of omission and commission the political tendency of the leaders of the "party of revolutionary unity" is revealed.

All this is not to deny that there are profound political causes for the internal struggle in the Socialist Party. At the bottom of the whole conflict is the impulse of the proletarian and youth sections of the movement for a revolutionary policy. But these elements have not yet clearly formulated their program or found leaders worthy of their cause. That is why their sentiments can be exploited so shamelessly; that is why they are made into pawns of an unprincipled struggle for place and position.

The Buffalo comedy warns the revolutionary elements again to formulate their own program and begin a real fight on principled lines. Such a fight will necessarily be directed against the present pseudo-left majority of the N.E.C. as well as against their reformist kin of the Old Guard. It will reject out of hand the treacherous formula of "unity" with scoundrels, reformists and labor fakers masquerading as socialists. The first plank in such a revolutionary program of the socialist workers will be: Revolutionary unity!—Break with reformism and reformists and unite with the revolutionary forces of the Workers Party!

The Paradox of New York

NEW YORK CITY contains one of the greatest anachronisms of modern times. It is at once the richest and poorest city in the land.

Here is concentrated the greatest wealth in all the universe.

Here are amassed the croesus treasures of Rockefeller, Vanderbilt and Astor.

Here the "400" form an aristocracy as would make the kings and nobility of old green with envy.

Here lies the center of the Morgan empire whose money power holds the million masses of the world in its grip.

The capital of the United States is in truth in Wall Street and its symbol is the almighty dollar.

New York as is commonly known has the largest population of any metropolis in the world and the plutocratic "400" form but an infinitesimal portion of it.

A report by the Mayor's Committee on Unemployment, of how the "other half", the 5,999,600, live tells a ghastly tale of rich and poor, of have and have-not. A sane observer from Mars would rub his eyes with incredulity over this striking comparison. Here they are summarized:

One million wage workers are unemployed. One out of every three workers employed in New York in 1930 is unemployed.

With their wives, children and other dependents the grand total of those affected by unemployment is 37 percent of the entire population of New York City.

Of the 666,000 unemployed families only 245,000 are on home relief.

Another 325,000 stricken families haven't applied or can't get near the government dole.

Those on relief don't live a kingly existence either—EIGHT (8) cents is the allowance per person per meal.

It is therefore not unnatural that 18.1 percent of New York's school children are suffering from malnutrition. That is, one out of every five border on starvation.

And piling suffering on misery, the allowance for rent is so meager that 17 percent of the families on relief were using food money to keep from being evicted.

New York is indeed the capital of the world—in poverty as in wealth. This it is because it most graphically epitomizes capitalism itself.

Our news story on the Mayor's report refers to a large section of the jobless as a reservoir of misery—

Let us add, a combustible reservoir of revolt.

Akron Labor Set for Siege aid in crystallizing resentment against the companies. The memories of Toledo, not over 100 miles away, are still fresh in Akron workers' minds.

A rapid increase in membership has heartened the unions and given them much additional strength. While they are still far short of the number they had last year (over 70 percent of the workers were in the A. F. of L. then), the long-promised action is finding a warm welcome among the workers. One local alone reported 625 new members in the last two weeks.

Support of the organized auto workers has been pledged and union leaders declare that the A. F. of L. unions in Detroit will walk out at the same time. Along with this, the rubberworkers will need the backing of all organized labor throughout the country in the forthcoming struggle. A victory at Akron would greatly strengthen unionism throughout the country.

It is the duty of class-conscious workers everywhere to do their utmost to help win this strike. Our party at Akron has been prepared for the strike and will be in the forefront of the struggle.

Toledo in Grip of Strikes

solidarity of the strikers will reach a new high when the organized working class comes out into the street to roar its defiance of the open shop bosses.

The sympathetic strike movement is in the air. Several unions are standing by, waiting for the call to action. The Central Labor Union has met to consider a general strike. All of Toledo is tense with expectation and only the most stubborn resistance of the conservative leaders of the central bodies can stem the tide—and then with the greatest difficulty.

Toledo can touch off the powder keg that has been gathering with resentment over the results of the New Deal since the last strike wave. Word has come that the Ohio Unemployed League plans to extend the FERA strike on a statewide scale. Bill Truax, President of the O.U.L., has addressed a letter to the State Federation of Labor asking that a joint action committee be set up to initiate a statewide strike on FERA projects. The demands of the O.U.L. in this proposed strike action adopted at its March 10 conference are: $1.00 per hour; the thirty-hour week for common labor and the highest prevailing rate for skilled labor, and others which cover conditions of work.

As has been indicated above, the W.P. members are carrying on the tradition they established in the great Auto-Lite strike. They are in the forefront of all activities, in the thick of the battle with scabs and gunmen and in leading posts in the action committees. They are giving the party a reputation that it well can be proud of.

of the proletariat, a soviet government, but only an abstract "Workers and Farmers Government".

The honor of Communism was partially saved by the testimony of Jack Warnick and Caroline Decker. Warnick took a bold and uncompromising stand. He said that he had been among the instigators of the Workers' School, that the workers must be organized and given a communist education in preparation for the proletarian revolution. He stated that the workers would have to get this education in their own schools because, being a university graduate himself, he knew they could never be anything but miseducated in the capitalist controlled schools.

Decker took up a position much to the left of the others and even had the courage to mention that at a certain stage of the struggle soviets might be set up.

What is the cause of this miserable showing on the part of the defendants? It lies partly in the cowardly testimony of Sam Darcy, district organizer of the C. P., who testified as an "expert" on Communism and laid down the line for the others. It also lies in the confusion in the minds of these members of the Communist Party as to what Communism really is. They were committed by the old party program to the policy of "revolutionary unions", of united fronts from below, of social fascism, of unemployed councils, and a central slogan of soviet power. But all of them know that there are no more revolutionary unions, no social fas-heat. . . . It also revealed that 24 percent of the families were crowded together so that there were more than two persons per room, excluding the kitchen.

"The rent allowance for 386 of these families was being supplemented definitely from the food allowance. In other words, 17 percent of the families on relief were using money sorely needed for food to keep a roof over their heads.

"In still other cases it was discovered that the family was meeting additional rent from boarders and part-time earnings. Upon discovery of this fact the Home Relief Division proceeded to deduct such income from the family relief budget, thus making it necessary for more families to turn to the food allowances to make up the differences."

Thus resulting, although the report does not mention it, in further malnutrition and sickness, demanding a larger food allowance, and in the end costing the Home Relief Bureau just as much as if they had originally permitted the family to supplement its relief allowance. But such an economy is far beyond the ability of the penny-clutching representatives of capitalism who administer relief.

"The private agencies include a regular clothing allowance in their budgets which average $200 per year for a family of five. . . . During the year 1934 the average Home Relief Bureau allowance for clothing was $16.20.

Clothing Inadequate

"Month after month appropriations originally intended for clothing were subsequently assigned to meet the additional food and rent requirements of new families added to the rolls. . . . Occasional and inadequate allowances for clothing work a particular hardship in families where there are small children who need clothing in order to attend school. . . .

"A survey of every Home Relief precinct in the city resulted in additional evidence that the Bureau has never been able to allow sufficient funds to cover even the barest necessities in clothing for either adults or children. The failure to provide clothing has been a vital factor in the breakdown of the morale of the unemployed. No man or woman can expect to remain employable or seek work if he is not decently clothed."

The report goes on. In summer the little food spoils for lack of ice. In winter the relief bureau fails to maintain a proper supply of coal. The misery and oppression rises in an overwhelming mountain.

There are 245,000 families on relief now. There are at least 325,000 more who will be forced on relief as the months pass. This in New York City alone.

Only a Spark Is Needed

adherence to revolutionary Marxist principle reveals its patent enormous superiority over phrase-mongering, lack of principle and playing with principle. It is in the struggle against imperialist war that the "big" parties and the "big" institutions, built up on a weak or rotten foundation, crumple like a house of cards.

What can be expected of the Socialist Party in the form of leadership in the struggle against war? Worse than nothing! Right at this moment, when the sound of war drums become ominously louder, the parties of the Second International are preparing to play the same despicable part that made them so hated by class conscious workers during the war of 1914-1918. In the Scandinavian countries, the social democracy is in the government, taking over in advance the job of mobilizing the working class for the capitalist powers—that be and restraining them from revolutionary action. In France, as in other so-called non-Fascist lands, the social democracy is preparing to head the war recruiting drives under the slogan of "Defend democracy against Hitler Fascism!"—as the Allied social patriots of 1914 defended France and Russia from German Kaiserism and their Entente brothers under the skin defended Germany and Austria from Russian Czarism and Japanese autocracy.

Blind also would be the worker who trusted to the Stalinist party to conduct an effective struggle against imperialist war. The crew which has lost one battle after another, which has destroyed the revolutionary and labor movements in one country after another, which has made an art of capitulation, is hardly the one to lead a fight under the conditions of war. The party which retired from the field without the firing of a shot when Hitler took over power, and which made such an ignominious showing in the battle of the Saar, will not prove to be a bit abler in a sterner test. The party which cannot think or act for itself, which is a mere puppet of the Soviet foreign Office will not be able either to combat imperialist war or fulfill the elementary obligation of a class conscious proletarian: effectively defend the Soviet Union. The party which has already committed itself in part to the piratical League of Nations, and in whole to the misleading pacifist nonsense about "disarmament" as a preventive of war, will wilt and collapse at the first serious moment.

Now more than ever, therefore, must the basic principles of Marx and Lenin in the anti-war struggle be emphasized. The imperialist war can be conducted only on the basis of revolutionary principle, of the consistently pursued class struggle. All talk of fighting imperialist war which does not proceed from the need of utilizing the crisis of the ruling class for the purpose of carrying the class war into its camp and ending the war by overthrowing the imperialist war-mongers—is so much wind. All talk of class war against imperialist war is so much more wind unless it is based upon a correct revolutionary policy of mobilizing the workers NOW, TODAY, in their every-day battles, in their unions, in their strikes, for a growing movement against the capitalist enemy.

The struggle against capitalist war is an extension and enhancement of the struggle against capitalism—not something apart from it. They will not fight capitalist wars who do not NOW fight capitalism and its labor lieutenants at every step in the road—and that means the Socialist Party. They will not be able to fight capitalist wars who are not NOW able to fight capitalism and its labor lieutenants, who by their stupid and opportunist policies actually aid the latter to consolidate themselves—and that means the Communist Party.

If the fight against war demands a fight in the class war today, then the latter demands a militant working class party capable of organizing, coordinating, planning and carrying out this class war. The fight against imperialist war, which now clouds the whole world horizon, boils down basically to the work of redoubling and multiplying tenfold all energies to build up the revolutionary party of the working class, the party of consistent Marxism, the Workers Party of the United States, and the Fourth International which it heralds.

ism, no unemployed councils, the Townsend Pension groups. They all realize that the policy of the Communist Party in California is now a labor party based on Sinclair's EPIC, on the Utopians, on

British Bourgeois Hypocrisy
"It is our difficult privilege to be the torch bearers of ordered freedom in Europe"—said Stanley Baldwin, actual leader of the British government. Why so modest? Why only Europe? How about India? And Africa? And why forget the war to bring "ordered freedom" for the peddlers of opium and religion in China? Uriah Heep should have entered politics. He'd have been a great statesman, almost the equal of McDonald or Baldwin.

Britain, Hitler and Peace
The London Times, commenting on the recent moves of Hitler, says: "Though Hitler's action in introducing conscription was most provocative, the deed has been accompanied by words strongly expressive of peace. Whatever happens the statesmen of Europe are now at work in a new spirit." That should be consoling to the cannon fodder! Again the Times says: "Germany is peace-minded in this sense, that she would rather get her way peacefully than by violence." In this sense a rattle snake is a veritable pacifist.

The "Great Engineer" Tries a Comeback

"Ex-President Hoover breaks self-imposed silence to defend fundamental American principles"—News items. This is the same guy who said in 1928 that if he was elected President "with the help of God we will be in sight of the day when poverty will be abolished in these United States". God must have sabotaged him. And lest we forget—in March 1930 this self-same American fundamentalist said "within 60 days everyone will be back to work." He continued to feed the starving American workers with similar statements until he found himself flat on his "American fundamental principle" at the foot of the White House steps. His recent statement was read before the California Republican Assembly and enthusiastically cheered. "Hoover never had a chance when he was president," sobbed the Republican chairman. Neither did the starving bonus marchers who were gassed and bayoneted at Washington. Today with the Roosevelt smile changing to a paralytic grimace, even Hoover hopes for a comeback.

Justice In Harlem
An 18 year old Negro girl screamed when she saw a boy being beaten in Kress 5 & 10c store. She was arrested and taken before Magistrate Rinaud. This "most learned and upright judge" said he "did not think she screamed with malicious intent" but fined her $10 or three days.

Harmless Substitutes All
"Yerba Mate is a harmless substitute for coffee and tea. . . . With each package of Mate we will send you a copy of Goldman's booklet 'From Communism to Socialism'."—Advertisement in the Socialist Call. The Socialist Call itself substitutes "turning the other cheek" where real blows are required. It is the organ of the Militants in the S.P. and is as pacifist in its attitude to the hard boiled Old Guard as the New Leader, organ of the Old Guard, is militant in its attack on the Militants. A "harmless substitute" sums up the entire policy of the Militants and the Socialist Call, to say nothing of Goldman's pamphlet.

membership in the party; called upon the New York State Committee to accept the Declaration of Principles; reiterated the clause of the constitution permitting Yipsels 18 years or over to join the party; called for the reinstatement of the suspended Yipsei organization on the basis of party discipline without obliging them to support any particular party paper; called upon the New Leader to pledge its allegiance to the Socialist Party of the U. S. and, if this is complied with, the N. C. will advise the suspension of the Socialist Call. The Old Guard was given six weeks in which to act on this decision.

Among other matters dealt with at the meeting was an endorsement of the reorganization of the Indiana state organization. The terrified radicals of the N.E.C. based this action on the precedent set by the Hillquit machine in expelling the Left in 1919! A decision was made to propagate for a Farmer Labor Party though not taking immediate steps in its organization. The five Buffalo party members who appealed to the N.E.C. against their expulsion were referred to the State Committee—that is, to the body which directed their expulsion in the first place.

THE CRIME OF SACRAMENTO

AN EDITORIAL

The conviction of eight leaders and active workers of the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Union, and consequent sentence to the penitentiary, is a crime of the first magnitude, not only against the individual victims but against the entire working class of America, against all forces in the country working for a better and happier future.

A blow has been struck at Sacramento against labor rights painfully acquired in generations of bitter struggle and sacrifice. Reaction, conspiring in the dark to thwart all the aspirations of the oppressed people for a better life, has scored a victory. Eight militants will pay for that reactionary victory with the loss of several years of liberty. The workers everywhere will pay for it in their struggles against exploiters emboldened by the precedent.

Those guilty of the Sacramento crime are, first of all, the industrialists and bankers of California, their cover organization, the Associated Farmers, and their agents, the prosecuting attorneys, the court, the vigilantes and deputies, the police and the hired stool pigeons—the whole state apparatus of repression and oppression.

Accomplices in the crime are the cynical and corrupt leaders of the Communist Party who shamefully subordinated the interests of the defendants to an internal party factional struggle against them, and sacrificed the class interests involved in the case to sectarian considerations in the struggle against another party.

They played down the historic case and robbed it of the national prominence which was its due; they kept the defendants—members of the Communist Party—in jail for six months before the trial, refusing to provide bail for them; they broke up the united front movement of defense and protest; while the trial was on they slandered one of the defendants, Norman Mini, who is distinguished only by his superior intelligence and integrity; they imposed courtroom tactics on their attorney which worked exclusively to antagonize the jury and jeopardize the chances of the defendants.

Despite all this the jury had to deliberate 66 hours before reaching a verdict. Four jurors held out for acquittal, finally consenting to a horse-trade which convicted eight out of fifteen defendants. A powerful united defense movement, an intelligent courtroom policy and a loyal attitude toward all defendants would undoubtedly have brought a different result at Sacramento. The American working class will do well to probe this tragic experience to the bottom. The day of reckoning will come for the capitalist perpetrators of this crime and also for their accomplices, the perfidious leaders of American Stalinism.

NY Left Wing Leaves YPSL And Joins WP

Resign as a Group in Protest against NC Decision at Buffalo

Twelve young socialists who have constituted the New York left wing group of the Young Peoples Socialist League have joined the Workers Party and Spartacus Youth League in a body. This is the first answer of the revolutionary socialists to the treacherous decision of the N.E.C. meeting at Buffalo declaring the advocacy of revolutionary views to be "incompatible with membership in the Socialist Party."

A public mass meeting to welcome the young socialists into the ranks of the Workers Party and the Spartacus Youth League will be held at Irving Plaza, Sunday, April 14 at 8 P.M. Dave Atkins, Julius Bertman, Manny Garrett, Joseph Carter and James P. Cannon will speak.

The statement of the young socialists clearly explains the reasons for their resignation and their adherence to the Workers Party and the S.Y.L. They record their repeated warnings against the Old Guard, the majority of the National Committee (Hoan-Thomas) and their criticisms of the vacillating, centrist "Militants."

Analyses Confirmed
"Our analyses"—says the statement—"were completely confirmed by the decisions of the Buffalo meeting of the National Committee of the S. P. and the 'Victory' reports spread by the leaders of the New York 'Militants'."

"At Buffalo the majority of the national committee retreated from their plan to take immediate decisive action against the Old Guard. They gave them six weeks in which to consider a compromise proposal. At the same time a heavy blow—this time a serious political one!—was directed against the true revolutionary elements, that is, against those who favor the revolutionary overthrow of capitalism. According to the N. C. majority revolutionary socialism has no place in the S. P. and the Y.P.S.L. Or as the suave 'Militants' would have it: revolutionary Socialists can remain in the Socialist movement only if they do not propagate a revolutionary program! For what is the essence of revolutionary socialism if not the revolutionary way to power?

"Politically the Hoan-Thomas majority are far closer to Oneal and Lee than to revolutionary Marxism. A split with the latter will not make Thomas and Hoan revolutionary Socialists or the Socialist Party a revolutionary organization."

The statement cites the entrance of the Belgian Labor Party into a capitalist coalition government as a warning sign as to the preparations of the Labor and Socialist International for a new war on the side of the national capitalist class. A repetition of the betrayal of 1914 can only be counteracted by the organization of revolutionary parties of the Fourth International. That is why they today, when war may soon be a reality, join the Workers Party and the Spartacus Youth League.

Struggle Against Reformism

"We call upon those who do not as yet agree with our views or the step we are taking to give serious consideration to what we have said. For we are convinced that only on the program of revolutionary Marxism, and through the medium of the revolutionary parties of the Fourth International can we defend the immediate interests of the working class and bring about triumphant world socialism. We are no less convinced that those of you who conduct a serious struggle against reformism in all its forms will come to the same conclusion and join the Workers Party and the Spartacus Youth League."

LACLEDGE COMPANY DISCONTINUES FREE SERVICE

According to the statement of the Laclede Gas Company, the free service of the Laclede Gas Company, which has been in effect since 1927, has been discontinued. The company states that it is no longer able to maintain this service because of the high cost of gas and the increasing number of calls for service.

When the Laclede Gas Company discontinued the free service, it was a blow to the workers of the company. The workers had been relying on this service for many years and it was a part of their life. The company's action was a clear attempt to increase its profits at the expense of the workers.

The workers of the Laclede Gas Company are determined to fight back. They have organized a strike and are ready to go out on the picket line. They will not allow the company to treat them this way.

STRIKE PAPER GOES OVER

The strike paper of the Laclede Gas Company, which has been in effect since 1927, has been discontinued. The company states that it is no longer able to maintain this service because of the high cost of gas and the increasing number of calls for service.

St. Louis Gas House Workers Answer Bosses with Strike

Police and Scabs Fail To Terrorize Strikers; Two Unions Offer Aid

ST. LOUIS, March 30.—Swiftly and secretly Federal Union of Gas House Workers, No. 18799 struck a well-prepared blow for the right to organize. In this battle against the profit-gorging Laclede Gas Co., the Gas House workers have taken up the cause of the entire laboring population of St. Louis.

As one man the gas workers followed the call of the union to blaze the trail for labor organization in the very heart of open shop territory. With the exception of a few incorrigible bootlickers the entire staff of Laclede is on strike. From the main office to the coke plant to the street department and the meter readers the picket line marches for its rights.

Daily Strike Bulletin

Even as the workers left their jobs the union headquarters was humming with activities, preparations having been completed before the plant was struck. So effective has their action been that directly with the declaration of the strike came the immediate issuance of a daily Strike Bulletin.

The "Gas House Worker", name of this bulletin, has been greeted with enthusiasm by the men on the picket lines. Already it has served as a solidifier of the ranks—a spur to new militancy and struggle. Here

Court Convicts 8 in Sacramento Amid Red Scare

Jury Acquits Six in Compromise After Sixty Six Hours

SACRAMENTO, April 3.—The Sacramento trial has come to an end. Eight of the defendants, including Norman Mini, were convicted, and stand to receive sentences of one to fourteen years. Six were acquitted.

The jury deliberated for sixty-six hours, taking one hundred and eighteen ballots before it reached a decision.

The defendants will be sentenced by Judge Lemmon on Thursday. At the same time an appeal for a new trial will be heard.

Those convicted were Norman Mini, Pat Chambers, Caroline Decker, Nora Conklin, Martin Wilson, Albert Houghard, Loren Norman, and Jack Crane.

Those acquitted were Jack Warnick, Fred Kirkwood, Harry Collett, Lee Hung, Mike Plesh, and W. H. Huffine.

The verdict bears out our statement that the trial was primarily directed toward smashing the Agricultural Workers Union. The eight convicted were the leaders of the union, the men the state was really out to get.

Of the eight convicted, two, Norman Mini and Loren Norman, received the jury's recommendation for probation.

The jury came to deadlock, the "plants" who were fired by the banks and farmer capitalists held out for conviction, while the bona fide jurymen held out for acquittal. The final verdict was a compromise.

The whole Sacramento police force was mobilized in and around the court house during the time the jury deliberated. The atmosphere was tense with the "red scare" stirred up by the presence of the police and by the flaming attacks in the capitalist papers.

Two of the jurors, interviewed after the trial, said they held out to the last for acquittals but compromised under pressure. They condemned Gallagher's provocative tactics, saying that there might have been more than four (there were two others) and they could have resisted the pressure. They admitted the convictions were a compromise forced by the anti-red sentiment in the city.

N.U.L. Helps Win Strike

CHARLESTON, W. Va.—After 16 days of battle representatives of the International Association of Machinists (A. F. of L.) called on the local Unemployed League to help them in strike activity. The local responded to a man. The picketing was intensified. Five days after the League was called in the strike was settled successfully and a complete victory for organized labor in the Kanawha Valley was realized.

Albert Lea Strikers Duped by False Lawyers - Serve 60 Days

MINNEAPOLIS, April 1.—The case of the eight Albert Lea strikers who are today serving 60-day jail sentences for "illegal entry" is of special interest to the Northwest labor movement because it poses sharply the duties of labor lawyers to their clients; and because, out of this case grew the dismissal of Julius F. Emme, progressive trade unionist, from his post as secretary to the Minnesota Industrial Commission—a situation which is causing most widespread reverberations within the Farmer-Labor party and the trade union movement in Minnesota.

On Monday afternoon, Feb. 4, a delegation from the Albert Lea local of the Independent Union of All Workers called on Mr. Potter of the Potter Foundry Company. The visit was due to a sudden campaign of discrimination against union members by Mr. Potter. Potter was most unsympathetic during the short discussion, and suddenly called for a group of scabs who were standing nearby armed with clubs to "throw the delegation out". A skirmish followed in which the union delegation came out on top. A strike was called on the spot.

Seized for "Bioting"
A few hours later three members of the delegation were arrested on charges of rioting. The next day two more were arrested. Attorney Baker of Mankato was asked by the Albert Lea local to take the case. The four other delegates were arrested during the next two weeks, the case finally coming to trial on Feb. 13.
In the meantime, Fosso, the right wing president of the Independent Union of All Workers, came to Albert Lea and eased Baker out of the picture, telling him (untruthfully) that the Albert Lea union had decided to engage Attorney Gallagher and Goldie instead. (Gallagher is a staunch Farmer-Laborite, Goldie is a lawyer from Minneapolis who has functioned for years in various labor cases.)

Scottsboro Boys Granted New Trial

Is Victory for Negro Rights; Struggle Must Be Continued

After four years of almost uninterrupted mass pressure from workers and working class organizations all over the world, the United States Supreme Court has granted a new trial to Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, Scottsboro defendants.

The verdict was based on the legal fact that in the court where the defendants were tried Negroes were barred from jury duty. The exact legal point upon which the decision is apparently motivated is the following:

"Whenever by any action of a State, whether through its legislature, through its courts, or through its executive or administrative officers, all persons of the African race are excluded, solely because of their race or color, from serving as grand jurors in the criminal prosecution of a person of the African race, the equal protection of the law is denied to him, contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States."

Victory for Negro Rights

Unquestionably this decision is of tremendous importance insofar as it is the most unequivocal statement yet made with regard to the right of Negroes to serve on juries where members of their race are on trial. As such the victory cannot be too much emphasized for it represents a milestone in the struggle for Negro rights in America.

The decision will also apply to the five other boys who are still in the cell.

CITY TENSE

Goodyear Vote Overwhelming For A Walkout

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, Ohio, April 11.—While Akron, seat of the rubber industry, became more of a war camp daily this week as Goodyear, Goodrich and Firestone tire companies prepared a huge force of deputies to smash any strike, the rubberworkers were gaining strength but were in danger of making fatal errors in their battle against the rubber barons.

A strike vote at the Goodyear local was overwhelmingly for a walkout, according to a survey, and labor was heartened by the large number of workers who voted. Although the local seldom had over 1,000 at the largest rallies, nearly three thousand cast ballots.

The Goodrich and Firestone locals, always considered much stronger than the Goodyear union, are expected to show greater strength in their strike vote this Sunday and should pull out more than half the plants, which have nearly 20,000 workers.

Danger in Strike Delay

The first danger that confronts the Akron workers is the possibility that they will be induced by William Green, president of the A. F. of L., to accept a compromise something like the auto-code agreement. The chiefs of the national A. F. of L. chiefs so far have been purely those of trying to club Congress into passing the unsatisfactory Wagner bill through strike threats.

Waiting too long before actually striking in order to fulfill all A. F. of L. constitutional requirements has already seen one important week pass by and more delay will tend to cause a downswing in the rising strike sentiment. Meanwhile the companies ship carloads of tires out and stock all their warehouses in event of a shutdown.

The company tactics continue to be that of provoking labor. Firestone, ordered by the National Labor Relations board to drop the company union, instead orders a strike vote to be taken by the company union.

Company Maneuvers

This follows on the heels of similar moves by the two other companies whose company unions voted "overwhelmingly" against a strike. This was done for propaganda purposes as full page newspaper advertisements claim that only a minority of workers want to strike, according to their ballots!

Two citizens committees have been publicly formed for the purpose of averting a strike. Of course, alleged liberal ministers, and prominent business men head the list of potential strike-breakers. Union leaders refuse to give any date for the actual walkout on the theory that it would harm labor's chances, although it could hardly be before April 8. There is danger, though, that this is but a camouflage and no official strike will be called.

Rank and File Restless

In that event, even the rubber companies think that a spontaneous rank and file movement will carry out the plans. In fact, the companies have taken every possible precaution to prevent a spontaneous walkout being effective this week, so restless is the mood of the rubber workers.

The most serious defect of the rubber workers is the lack of experienced strike leaders as time and again good strategy was not used to swing all labor behind the pending struggle. This seems to be overcome by the aggressiveness of the workers.

Issuance of a proclamation forbidding mass picketing, deputizing of hundreds of unemployed including National Guardsmen, erecting of barbed wire fences and other military precautions shows that the struggle will be a bloody one as workers refuse to allow any scabs to work while companies are determined to break the picket lines.

Fargo—A Labor Struggle That Rocked the Northwest

Since the following article was written, several new developments have taken place. The sixteen defendants have at last been released on bail after the most fantastic obstructionist tactics on the part of Judge Paulson. An investigation committee from the N. D. State Legislature surprised no one by bringing in a report unfavorable to the Union. The special strike bulletin has been succeeded by a new tabloid weekly, the Gate City Labor Review, official organ of Local 173. A Fargo Defense movement has been initiated in Minneapolis along non-partisan lines under the guidance of mighty Local 574, and has already succeeded in mobilizing public opinion for the Fargo strikers—and what is more important, has raised some cash to finance the appeal which the union defendants will make to the State supreme court.

To understand what is going on today in Fargo, it is necessary to paint in a sketchy background.

Since the I.W.W. days the labor movement in Fargo has been dormant. But the strikes of General Drivers Local 574, Minneapolis, had their repercussions in this city. In September 1934 Miles Dunne of the Minneapolis union was loaned to General Drivers Local 173, Fargo, to act as business agent at the latter's request.

Immediately things began to hum.

On November 3 a milk strike was called for Fargo and Moorhead. A day of hard picketing ensued, followed by a ten-day truce. Local 173 came out of the strike victorious, with a settlement setting forth a minimum wage of twenty dollars weekly plus commissions, an agreement for collective bargaining, seniority rights and no discrimination. The union switched its energies toward organizing the coal and transfer workers. Inside of a few months, the workers in these industries had signed up almost 100 percent. The union approached the employers and asked for a contract. This was coldly refused, and on January 22 the Fargo coal and transfer drivers went out on strike. The union laid down three principal demands: union recognition, no discrimination, and a uniform scale of wages.

Vigilante Trouble-Shooting

Following is a calendar of events since the strike was called. Early Sunday afternoon, January 27, a group of pickets went down to a nearby river to persuade an ice-cutting crew to come off the job. This was the signal for which the employers had been waiting. A siren was blowing, and three hundred deputized vigilantes, armed with clubs and ax handles, quickly assembled at the sheriff's office. Under the direction of States Attorney Bergeson, they were directed to the river. Approaching, they waved their clubs and yelled provokingly, "Why don't you start something?" to the pickets. The vigilantes closed in and arrested 18 of the strikers. On 4th Street South were 14 more pickets walking towards the river. These were also arrested and carted off to jail, charged with "riot", an ancient charge dealing with "an act in the direction of a riot", which was taken out and dusted off for the occasion.

Tear Gas for Children

The body of special police then marched on the union hall, located on the second floor of a building on First Avenue. It was learned later that the owner of the building, a local business man, had taken out riot insurance the previous Friday. Inside the hall were a score of women and children, plus about 75 men. An FEERA class in labor history was in progress, taught by a seventy-year old man, Mr. Aasgaard. Without warning, the hall was tear-bombed. This was accomplished by shooting aluminum bombs through the windows. A second bombardment was made and then "officers" formed a gauntlet from the hall entrance to the street. The prisoners were assembled as they came staggering from the stairs, eyes streaming from the effect of the gas. Several of the men from the hall were beaten by the vigilantes. Altogether, about 70 were arrested here, including three boys (one of them Towell Cruden, son of the Union's president), marshalled into line and marched to jail. This last batch was charged with "obstructing an officer". The books and records of the union together with the office furniture were seized by the vigilantes and turned over to Bergeson. The union hall was padlocked.

Thus 95 strikers were arrested that day. When General Drivers 574 in Minneapolis learned of the arrest, it offered to replenish the Fargo picket lines. Governor Moodie of North Dakota promptly stated he would "meet outsiders sent into the Fargo strike three to one".

The prisoners were held for bonds totaling $47,000. By the end of the week only 46 remained in custody of the court, and picketing was again proceeding. In the meantime, the State legislature which was in session in Bismarck, passed a resolution referring to the Fargo vigilantes as "dired things", demanding that the strikers be accorded their lawful rights, that all arrested be released from jail. A movement to circulate petitions demanding the recall of Bergeson got under way.

One of the arrested pickets, Ernest Falconer, shot and killed himself on his release from jail. Unable to comprehend the forces which held him in their grip, herded into jail like a common felon, he became despondent and took his life.

Packed Jury

On Wednesday, February 13, the strike trials began. By the following Tuesday the case went to the jury, hand-picked by the "law and order" machinery. A verdict of guilty was brought in, and on Feb. 23, William Cruden and Austin Swalde, president and secretary of the union, were sentenced to six months at hard labor, as was one other picket. The other thirteen were given two months. In the case of the leaders, bail bond was set at $1,000 each, as the union's attorneys prepared to appeal the case.

As these lines are written, those jailed have not yet been released. Bail bonds have been offered by numberless sympathizers, only to be cynically refused by States Attorney Bergeson. That the latter is beginning to feel a bit nervous, however, is shown by the fact that he has moved to dismiss the cases of the 65 charged with obstructing an officer and the 14 charged with riot. Despite five weeks of this legal terror plus the most vicious editorial barrage laid down by the local press at the beginning of the strike, one paper approvingly quoted a religious old woman as saying, "Miles Dunne should be taken out on the prairies, stripped to his underwear and made to walk bare-footed back to Minneapolis."

Just a word as to the Fargo employers. They have recently organized themselves as the "Associated Industries of Fargo and Moorhead" and documentary evidence is available proving that they have received no little help from the Minneapolis Citizens Alliance in carrying on their fight against the union.

One incident will show their temper. One of the unionists had the misfortune to lose a child a few weeks ago. The undertaker refused to bury the child without a cash payment. For ten days the dead child lay on a slab in the mortuary. Finally an emissary from the employers approached the man and told him credit would be advanced for the burial if he would quit the union and return to work. A friend then stepped in and paid for the burial. The man is still out on strike.

Local 173 is by no means beaten. A special daily strike bulletin (shades of 574) still appears. A troupe of union wrestlers and boxers is scheduled to perform nightly in nearby communities to raise money for the strike fund. All the roads leading into Fargo are picketed with immense signs, reading "16 Fargo Strikers Have Been Sentenced for 44 Months. Don't Trade in a Scab Town!" and "Industrial Pestilence Stalks the Streets of Fargo. Trade in Your Home Town!" The American Civil Liberties Union and the Non-Partisan Labor Defense have stepped into the case to assist in carrying the appeal to the State supreme court.

S. Y. L. Maps National Tour

The Spartacus Youth League is initiating a national tour. The representative of its National Committee, comrade Nathan Gould, will cover every city where we have S.Y.L. and W.P. branches in a coast-to-coast tour across the country. Branches are urged to make immediate preparations for meetings, affairs, etc. as outlined in the circular letters sent out by the national office.

1500 'Bootleg' Coal Miners Organize

MT. CARMEL, Pa., March 24.—About 1,500 "bootleg" coal miners jammed a hall in this city to lay the foundation for a permanent organization and in preparation for a mass demonstration of 15,000 independent miners at Harrisburg on April 1.

"Bootleg" coal mining has become an extensive industry in these parts, involving hundreds of thousands of unemployed coal diggers and doing an annual business that runs into millions of dollars. This form of individual appropriation, by which the jobless miners seek out a miserable existence picking coal on land owned by the companies, has become a dire threat to the profits of the coal barons.

The "Liberal" Governor George H. Earle gave these thousands of otherwise jobless miners the cold shoulder in arranging and extending invitations to various interests affected by this lusty "depression industry" for a conference to formulate a policy on coal "bootlegging".

The angered miners cheered to the echo a plan to swoop down on the State capital in hundreds of coal trucks. There the thousands of assembled miners will demonstrate that they are ready for a final fight should the state and coal company interests interfere with their only source of livelihood.

Thomas Kennedy, Secretary of the U.M.W. of A. and now Lieutenant Governor and Michael Heartneady, President of District 7 and now Secretary of Mines in Earle's cabinet were accused of "selling out the miners" and working in the interests of the coal companies.

The most significant feature of the meeting, however, was the number of hitherto unknown leaders who have sprung from the rank and file in the battle to preserve their means of existence.

Mike Demchak acted as chairman of the meeting and was elected temporary president of the organization.

Organizations of the Independent Coal Producers Association have 1,800 members in Shamokin, 600 in Kalmont and 600 in Atlas. Mr. Carmel is expected to have a branch of approximately 1,100 members.

Organizers are now in Shuylkill County preparing for April 1. A meeting is to be held on March 28 to give a permanent character to the organization.

This is to be followed by a convention when the majority of the coal mining communities are organized which will unify the branches and elect an executive committee.

IN THE UNIONS

By KARL LOBE

One of America's oldest industrial unions is fighting for its life. The threat comes not from the employers primarily but from the officialdom of large and powerful craft international unions who want to tear it to pieces.

The organized brewery workers have always been at odds with craft unionism. They always stood stubbornly for the right to organize all workers in and around breweries into their ranks. At the 1933 convention of the American Federation of Labor they were directed to turn over their teamsters, electricians, engineers, etc. to the respective craft unions. A referendum of the membership of the Brewery Workers turned down the proposal by an almost unanimous vote. Last year's A. F. of L. convention reaffirmed its previous decision but the brewers still refused to split their ranks.

Now the craft unionists, led by Dan Tobin of the International Teamsters Union, have begun a war to the death. In a number of cities jurisdiction strikes have been called. The Teamsters officials have joined hands with the employers to force craft workers out of the ranks of the industrial union. The boss signs an agreement with the Teamsters Union, fires any worker who stays loyal to the brewery workers' organization and hires men furnished by the craft organizations.

In Spokane, Washington, the union workers are all on strike or are locked out as a result. The district representative of the Teamsters has announced that a new stunt will be tried. An organization called the Brewery Inside Workers is to be formed. All Brewery workers in Spokane must belong to it if they want to work. It's a fight to the finish. And if all forms of unionism are wiped out in the struggle it can't be helped. Jurisdictional rights must be upheld.

Union Label

No one will disagree with the proposition that the marshalling of labor's purchasing power behind union made products is desirable. The worker's pay envelope can be a real weapon in the fight to entrench unionism. The "Union Buyers Clubs" which have been organized in a number of middle western cities are steps in that direction.

All too often, however, the union label is turned into a racket which actually works to the detriment of further organization. A union like the United Garment Workers, for example, will approach a boss with the proposition that he allow organization in his plant, in order to get the use of the label. The union in turn promises to push his product in the unions, advertise it in the labor press and do its best to sell it to the labor movement in general. That is a good business proposition for small companies who are unable to carry on any advertising campaign of their own. It is good business, however, only as long as the number of union label firms is rather small. The inside track on the labor market is lost when a great many firms recognize the union and use its label on their products. In order to sell the union and the label, therefore, and to make it attractive to manufacturers, the union must keep itself small, refrain from any militant activities or organizing campaigns.

Metal Trades

One of the most intelligent reactionaries in the A. F. of L. is undoubtedly John P. Frey, president of the Metal Trades Department of the Federation. Frey is especially concerned to find a way to stem the rising tide of industrial unionism which threatens the jobs of so many of his fellow-officials in the Metal Trades Department. He has developed the idea of joint agreements for all crafts in any particular industry as a substitute for industry organization on a genuine basis. The strike last year of the workers at the Butte Mines of the Anaconda Copper Company was settled on this basis. Now the department has signed an agreement with the Sinclair Refining Company which covers all of its affiliated unions which have workers in the industry. Local councils are being formed all through the oil districts to which all labor organizations in the field may affiliate. Grievances and negotiations with employers are to be settled in a matter similar to that used by the system federations of railroad shop crafts. At best it is a shoddy substitute for the real article. The oil field workers need genuine industrial organization.

The Cross of Silver

Between Speeches Coughlin Engages
In Practical Business of His Own

By DAN EASTMAN

We shall sketch the events of Father Coughlin's life through the days of Roosevelt's rise, election, and the launching of the NRA. The events are not important, but as revealing the character and tactics of the ambitious priest in his effort to become an American Hitler. Later we shall consider his program, and see not only its failings, which are numerous, but that Father Coughlin himself hardly takes his own program seriously.

In the spring of 1931 Father Coughlin found himself, as a result of his persistent attacks on socialism and the red serpent, broadcasting over a national hook-up to an audience running into millions. He had become a political figure of some importance, a figure which various capitalist cliques were not long in enlisting in their services.

Lubricating an Oil Plot

One week, out of a clear sky, Father Coughlin delivered a tirade against three companies, two American, and one the Royal Dutch Shell, who "were conspiring to restrict American oil production in favor of the Venezuelan fields". He revealed a suspiciously accurate knowledge of the transactions whereby this "conspiracy" was formed.

It is reasonable to suspect that Father Coughlin obtained his information from, and delivered his tirade at the request of, some American oil company which was getting rocked on the Venezuelan deal. How otherwise could he have had inside advance information, and why otherwise should he light on this specific deal, relatively obscure and unimportant in an imperialist world? Why a Venezuelan oil plot, when he might as well attack the oil and tin plot behind the Chaco war, or the American companies involved in the Brazilian cotton plot, or the nitrate plot in Chile, or the antimony plot in China, or the sugar plot in Cuba, or any other of thousands of "plots" to restrict American production in favor of foreign? Plots that are the recognized and regular procedure of finance capital which, having exhausted the home market, flees to foreign markets, where coolie wages offer hope of restoring profits.

That Father Coughlin should single out an obscure example of imperialist exploitation in a world where literally thousands are prominent in the news every day, inclines us to suspect that some motive other than high Catholic-patriotic indignation prompted his sudden attack on Royal Dutch Shell and its unnamed American co-plotters.

Perhaps it was that group of financiers centering around the Vanderlip-Rand Committee for the Nation, who moved the Father to indignation. Perhaps the Royal Dutch Shell neglected to invite this little group in on the deal. In any case we can be sure that Father Coughlin and the Vanderlip-Rand Committee have had some high old times together on other deals.

Father Coughlin supported Roosevelt in the 1932 elections, attacking Hoover for having favored the big investors over the little. The attack now appears a little ludicrous, since Roosevelt has carried the favoring of big investors over the little to a point far beyond Hoover's poor efforts. For charity's sake we may suppose that Father Coughlin in 1932 was not aware that the government if it is to support capitalism at all, must necessarily support big investors over little, that even he himself, Father Coughlin, prime minister of God, could do nothing more if capitalism was to continue than favor monopoly capital over small investors. For charity's sake we may suppose that he was too stupid to realize this, but even stupidity will not explain his continuing this stand to the present day.

Making Charity Pay

There is a question we would like to ask in this connection: Is an investment of $111,000 a big investment or a little investment? The question is not without pertinence. After the bank crash in Detroit, in the spring of 1933, the Detroit Free Press revealed that Father Coughlin, instead of putting the receipts from his Radio league in the bank, the usual procedure for receipts from a so-called charitable enterprise, had been speculating with them in motor stocks, to the tune of $111,000, losing $13,000 on one deal alone, $13,000 gathered, according to the Father's own story, from the hard earned nickels, dimes and quarters which his appreciative listeners contributed.

We might note for future reference that other moneys were invested in tax free government bonds. This investment, safe enough in itself, is interesting in the light of Father Coughlin's platform, of which one plank comes out unequivocally for the abolition of tax-free bonds. We must also note that the stock brokers who handled the Father's account were the firm of Harris and Vose of New York, who will turn up again in this history along with the Vanderlip-Rand Committee and several other notables, including none other than the Chairman of the Republican Party.

For God and Silver

"This book," reads the preface of The New Deal in Money, written by Charles Coughlin himself, "is dedicated to those persons who still persist in believing that man is more precious than gold". A fine sentiment from the Priest's own pen, and a fitting caption for the next chapter of his life.

Only once during his entire career has Father Coughlin been ennobled away from his modest home, his $750,000 Tower of the Little Flower. On the evening of December 9, 1933, he consented to give a lecture at Madison Square Garden in New York, a lecture on money. He spoke under the auspices of the Vanderlip-Rand Committee for the Nation.

His speech, as were and are all his speeches on the money problem, was for the abandonment of the gold standard and the monetization of silver; in short, silver inflation, the old greenback scheme, the root of ninety percent of past mid-western political insurgency. Father Coughlin, however, introduced a new note of righteous Christianity into the matter of inflation. Not only was it reprehensible to "believe man more precious than gold", and when Father Coughlin talks about gold he means gold specifically, he is not talking in biblical terms about wealth in general, but as he himself said, "I send a call for the mobilization of all Christianity against gold; the restoration of silver is a Christian concern."

But a storm was brewing. Congress authorized an investigation to determine just who held the largest amounts of silver in the United States. The gold lobby in Congress, judging from their own souls, had a keen suspicion that the silver lobby was not entirely disinterested, that there might perhaps be silver speculation lurking in the back of all this Christian inflationism. They were right.

All Roads Lead to Wall St.

The investigators reported in April, 1934. Guess who held silver in quantities of 25,000 ounces or more? Frank Vanderlip, founder of the Committee for the Nation, E. L. Cord, member of the Committee for the Nation and financial giant of the automobile, aviation and shipbuilding businesses, Everett Sanders, Chairman of the Republican National Committee, Harris & Vose, New York stockbrokers, and—the Radio League of the Little Flower, which topped them all with 500,000 ounces held on margin! Truly astonishing: all our old friends together again. Vanderlip, whose Committee sponsored Coughlin's Christian attacks on gold, Harris and Vose who helped Coughlin lose $13,000 in speculation in automobiles, and the Radio League, Father Coughlin's own corporate child!

Father Coughlin never succeeded in explaining away this incident. His defense we quote from the New York Times of April 29.

He pointed out that in a speech the previous December he had said, "When at times contributions to the Radio League of the Little Flower surpass current expenditures the surplus is temporarily invested where it will be safest." He neglected to show how a gamble on silver was a safe investment, and further neglected to show how marginal investment always considered a risky business under any circumstances, made his investment any safer. The fact is that he gambled, and gambled as wildly as possible, covering $300,000 with $20,000, as he reveals when he says, "This time I purchased 500,000 of silver with an investment of $20,000 through the firm of Harris and Vose."

He further neglected to clarify the connection between his marginal investment and his "mobilization of all Christianity for the restoration of silver". But that hardly needed explanation.

Five in California Quit C. P. And Join Workers Party

The following statement of five leading members of the Communist Party in Porterville, Cal., speaks for itself. The document is a classic; comment would be superfluous. Porterville is in the heart of the California orange belt. The now defunct Cannery and Agricultural Workers Union (wrecked by the C. P.) had one of its strongest centers here. The statement follows:

Porterville, California
March 27, 1935

District Committee,
District Thirteen,
Communist Party U.S.A.:

We are resigning from the Communist Party. Here are our membership books with the exception of comrade B. L.'s who burnt his up. There is no use talking, or for you to try explaining things any longer, because you bureaucrats make it impossible for us to work like Bolsheviks. Besides this, you're not just a bureaucracy but you're bankrupt to boot. The terrible mess you led the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union into, which resulted in its complete collapse, is positive proof of your bankruptcy.

And then the way you are now trying to get the A. F. of L. to give you a charter here in Porterville for the agricultural workers is about as crazy a thing as we can think of. You call a meeting, elect party members as officers, and then expect the A. F. of L. to give you a charter when your tactics are as plain as the nose on your face to everyone. Do you think the A. F. of L. is going to give the Communist Party a charter? We suppose you'll be getting out a leaflet in a couple of weeks "exposing" the A. F. of L. There's no hope, you're done for.

And to top all this off you want us to organize a Labor Party. What do you think we are anyway?

We quit. And we're going to apply for membership in the Workers Party. Its program is going to develop a real vanguard in America.

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

Fascist Symptoms in the Third Party Movement.

The present majority campaign in Chicago gives symptomatic indications of the coming struggle to win the middle classes and the unemployed for the purpose of reaction. In this campaign the third party movement put forward its candidate, Jenkins, formerly a "progressive" republican associated with LaFollette. In his speeches Jenkins proceeded to lay the foundations (as does Father Coughlin) for that appeal to anti-Semitism which is the inevitable accompaniment of the rise of fascism. He denounced as those responsible for the notorious corruption in Chicago "a pack of crooked Jews who have disgraced our city." It develops that Jenkins has Nazi ties and that Pelley of Silver Shirt fame visited the Chicago Friends of New Germany to secure their support for Jenkins. Thus we find already on a local scale how the Third Party movement under present historic conditions plays a reactionary role and tends to assume fascist forms.

Nor is this observation based on the leaning of the movement towards anti-Semitism. The entire program attempts to translate into American terms the early demagoguery of fascism in its first strivings for a political foothold. Thus the booklet issued by this party calls for an organization whose members will be subjected to "a stern program of physical education." This is unprecedented in American politics and is a clear hint of the ultimate goal of creating storm troops and fascist bands.

Furthermore "the new party must be intensely nationalistic." It takes no clairvoyant to read into this phrase the entire program of American imperialism and the irreconcilable struggle between such a party and the organizations of the militant and revolutionary workers. The program calls for a new party for American business, agriculture and labor. It makes the following demagogic bid for the unemployed worker's support: "Business and labor and government have all failed the jobless American." "He is entitled to work and the new party will give him work and do it at once." Plainly there is here the attempt to pit the unemployed against the employed workers.

The new party reaches out for the petty bourgeoisie, overburdened by taxation. It is proposed to make the United States a "taxless nation" by using the profits from transportation, light and power, telephones, telegraphs, radio and similar (monopolized) public services to defray the cost of government. Here is the usual demagogic appeal to the small man against the trusts. Inflation is promised to the farmer in order to liquidate the entire public debt by the systematic issuance of government currency over several years' time "without disturbing the financial structure of the country". Without exhausting the chimerical horn of plenty of the capitalist horn of plenty pictured by third party demagoguery, we may add that the soldiers have not been forgotten (they will be given the bonus), nor the youth who will be "given the opportunity or better be required to serve the country in some capacity for a short period of time." Naturally the fascists would be in favor of forced labor for the young or of universal conscription.

New Political Movements and the Class Struggle

To the Marxist it is quite clear that no new political movement arises without meeting urgent needs of one or the other of the two main classes in modern society. The working class is slowly coming to a realization through all its everyday experiences that strive with might and main as it may it cannot regain the former standards of living. Workers in one industry or the other may gain temporary success in bettering the conditions under which they gain their livelihood, but taking the class as a whole capitalism has exhausted its possibilities of granting to workers any real concessions in the way of wages or higher standards. The waves of strike struggles, each more militant than the last, end with the proletariat still suffering the same poverty, the same misery, the same intense exploitation as before. The lesson is being gradually driven home that the only way out is the revolutionary way, through the overthrow of capitalism. Hence the need for the Workers Party to give guidance to the class.

But in parallel fashion, the big bourgeoisie, in their greedy scramble to maintain profits against the desperate rivalry of the capitalists of other nations, find the apparent solution for their problems by withdrawing all the previous concessions forced from them by the workers, and by an intensive drive on the living standards of the proletariat and the toilers in general.

This gigantic struggle, assuming a myriad of forms, is reflected politically. To accomplish their purposes financiers subsidize new movements which rally the middle class under the banner of reaction for the purpose of eliminating democracy and preventing the workers from seizing the power. The third party movement must inevitably reflect this need of the big bourgeoisie under present conditions. The answer by the workers can be given not through a labor party but by means of the only force of defeating fascism, the revolutionary Marxist party, the Workers Party.

News from the Soviet Union

The Anti-Trotsky Crusade

The excerpts which we give below furnish a vivid picture of the latest crusade in the U. S. S. R. against Trotskyism, indeed against the slightest manifestation of sympathy for Trotsky. This picture, incomplete as it is, serves to show what little success, preceding Stalinist crusades have had in "burying" Trotskyism. We may add that this latest crusade will have no more success.

1. Under the heading "Purification of the Party" Pravda announces on December 14, that the Dnepropetrovsk City Committee came to an agreement against the expulsion of the Trotskyist, Tagetstskia, member of a Trotskyist cell in the university. This Trotskyist received the special protection of the Secretary of the Committee, a certain Levitine. From the 19th to the 22nd Pravda rehearses the story and censures the Party District Committee for its "rotten liberalism" toward the Dnepropetrovsk affair. On the 25th we learn that no less a body than the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Ukraine has been forced to take action. Severe measures are invoked. The Dnepropetrovsk Bureau—Levitine, Skrypnik, Hechtman—is discharged. The District Administration is strongly censured for having tolerated Trotskyist elements. The local newspapers are also censured for having supported the City Committee. The Director of Culture and Propaganda, Segalovich is discharged for not having taken action against the Trotskyist elements at the University.

2. On the 23rd of December Pravda announces under the heading "A Trotskyist Professor" that at Rostov Agricultural College the Trotskyist Vladimir Prokofiev is head of the Department of Political Economy. In his courses Vladimir Prokofiev defends the Trotskyist position on the October Revolution and on the peasant question. . . . He even affirms that Soviet economy, up until the first Five Year Plan, depended on world economy. On the 26th Pravda carries the resolution of the Rostov Party Administration, expelling Vladimir Prokofiev, censuring the Director of the College, and warning the directors of other colleges to redouble their vigilance. Pravda, it seems, is not satisfied with this resolution; it came too late.

3. From Kompro Svietsdente for the 28th and Za Industrialsazu for the 29th we learn that the Buchir Collegium expelled several party members at Ufa for Trotskyism. A certain Strachnoff was expelled last February. He hid himself in one of the villages and went about building up a "counter-revolutionary" organization. The party members were in communication with him.

4. A "Trotskyist Nest" Pravda on the 30th announces a "Trotskyist Nest" at the Medical College in White Russia. Two students, Levitan and Mekovetz, asserted during an examination that "Trotskyism is the spring of Bolshevism." Another student, Rasomovski, proved that the standard of living of the workers got worse every year. 5. At the Agricultural College, again in White Russia, the Trotskyist Polevich tried to provoke discussion on subjects forbidden by the party (Komsomol Pravda, Dec. 30).

6. January 4, 1935, Pravda begins the new year by informing us that several students at Dnepropetrovsk, by name Komarovsk, Glosman, Iorifoff, and Brochne, have been expelled from the party for Trotskyist opinions and activities. The expulsions are the wake of the campaign Pravda has been carrying on against Dnepropetrovsk.

"Ignored the Works of Stalin" 7. January 9 Izvestia announces sadly that the Agricultural College, founded by none other than J. Stalin, have all become regular nests of Trotskyism. Beside Vladimir Prokofiev at Rostoff, Trotskyist elements are discovered at Koursk. History Professor Serbent has been teaching Trotskyism in his courses. Professor of Political Economy Lodyshchenko, stated that while the Kulaks have been liquidated in so far as numbers are concerned, there still remained a qualitative base for their development. Professor of Economy Fokine stated that the demand for the liquidation of the kulaks was advanced by the Opposition in 1925-26, and only acted upon by the party four or five years later. Professor Uronitch showed a persistent tendency to ignore the works of Stalin in his courses. All these Trotskyists were expelled, but their influence remains, and a solid kernel of Trotskyism has been created among the students. 8. Pravda, Jan. 10, Professor Plakoff, Professor of the History of Class Struggle attached to the Medical Faculty at Tchelabinsk, has been defending Trotskyists. Instead of expelling him the local Party Committee and its Secretary, Morosoff, did everything possible to keep Plakoff on the faculty.

One Expelled, One Censured 9. From the same Pravda for the 10th we learn that the Trotskyist Konstantinov, sometime expelled from the party, was invited to the tractor station at Malolazov. The administration of the tractor station knew that Konstantinov was a Trotskyist; in spite of that he was made assistant to the Director in Charge of Construction. One member of the administration was expelled, the other was censured.

10. On January 11 Pravda is bursting with information on the activities of Trotskyists. The Party fraction of the Peoples Commissariat for Agriculture for the U.S.S.R., expels J. J. Reingold, head of the cotton department of the Commissariat, for his Trotskyist opinions.

11. The same issue of Pravda announces a fact of prime importance. Golende, President of Gosplan (State Planning Commission), and Assistant to the President of the Council of Peoples Commissars for White Russia, expressed Trotskyist ideas; he expounded the abolition of the bread card system as the result of the powerlessness of the party in its war with the kulaks. Golende was formerly a member of the Left Opposition.

"Always True Bolsheviks" 12. The same Pravda informs us that Aristoff, a student at Gorki University, stated that Trotskyists were always "true Bolsheviks" in the course of an argument on the Kirov assassination during a political examination at the university.

13. Pravda, Jan. 18: The Secretary of the Odessa District Committee is informed that the Cherson City Committee is under the direction of Secretary Korostine, a convinced Trotskyist. Following a resolution of the District Committee Korostine is expelled from the party. Pravda adds, "We must remark that the example of Odessa, where propaganda work among the youth is in charge of former Trotskyists, is not an isolated example."

14. At Astrakhan are discovered the activities of the Trotskyist, Safarov, Director of the local Museum of the Revolution. Safarov was handing out Trotskyist pamphlets to the youth. His accomplice was the Acting Secretary of the City Committee of Komsomol, Malugin. The regular secretary gives money to expelled Trotskyists (Pravda, Jan. 19).

Twenty Cases in Twenty Cities Let us stop this enumeration. We have already counted twenty different cases of Trotskyist activity in twenty different towns in the two months since the assassination of Kirov. The number speaks more eloquently than any comment.

We might remark in passing that at Rostov they showed an old film of the Civil War in which Trotsky appeared several times. This film was labeled "counter-revolutionary", "contributing to the popularity of the counter-revolutionary Trotsky". In connection with this affair several responsible officials were expelled from the party, and several other very high officials—the Director of Censorship, the Director of the Movie Trust, and the leaders of the Movie Picture Workers Union, for example—received severe censures, some even fired.

shaken to its depths. The working class has already engaged in several battles on its own account. At Cavalla the whole working class and petty bourgeois population armed themselves and drove out the authorities. They held out for five hours against the Venizelist troops, but they were finally vanquished.

In spite of the censorship we have been informed that over 100 communists and workers were brought before the firing squad.

The workers at Serres and Drama also fought heroically against the Venizelists.

The large masses of the people outside of the cities have not as yet arisen, as they feel that the Tsaldaris government is merely defending legal power against a coup d'etat by the Venizelists. But we can be sure that their passivity will not last long. The mobilization has already stirred them deeply. Famine is at our doors. Numerous sections of the petty bourgeoisie have been ruined. It is quite clear that we are entering a period of sharpening crisis in which the masses will begin to battle for their own interests.

In spite of all material obstacles our organization was the first at its post. By leaflets and by direct agitation we explained the course for the working class, to turn against its oppressors, to convert the war for the opposing interests of the two camps of the oppressors into a class war for the interests of the working class.

Several of our comrades have been arrested, and comrade Georgi Deligant, who was taken with leaflets addressed to the workers and soldiers, is to be brought before court martial. . . . We are marching with faith in the power of the working class, marching to our revolutionary duty.

We are sending you this letter without knowing whether it will ever reach you. In spite of the risk, we feel that the organizations in other countries should know what the Greek Bolshevik-Leninists are doing in these historic moments. (Give us every possible aid. Vol. 1 SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1935 No. 16

Fling Back the Challenge!

The impending gigantic struggle of the A. F. of L. rubber workers' unions at Akron, Ohio, center of the tire industry, for their right to organize and to bargain collectively which is leading them to call an industry-wide strike deserves the support of every class-conscious trade unionist in the country.

Although they are handicapped by certain weaknesses like the passing of the peak production season, the rubber-workers are determined to fight courageously and militantly to overcome these obstacles.

The rubber barons in the impending fight will be the spear-head of a nation-wide employers' drive to break the working class in the basic industries.

This challenge must be flung back to the employers and nation-wide support be given to the rubber workers. The workers must turn this first major battle of 1935 into the opening victory of the working class in forthcoming struggles.

Attempts to smash the strike through terror of national guards and hired thugs must be met by a thunderous country-wide protest which will serve to check the bosses.

The Workers Party in Akron and throughout the country pledges itself to help rally the working class and its allies behind the struggle of the rubber-workers.

New Recruits

From New York City on the Eastern coast and from California in the West, out of the Socialist Party and Y.P.S.L. in the first case and the so-called Communist Party in the second, new recruits for the Workers Party and the Spartacus Youth League are reported in this issue of the New Militant. In both instances the new recruits to the banner of revolutionary Marxism consist not of isolated individuals but of groups of militants who, by conscientious study and the test of diverse experience have convinced themselves of the necessity of such a decisive step.

The drift from the Socialist and Stalinist parties, as well as from the ranks of the disaffiliated radical workers, toward the Workers Party, which began immediately after its formation last December, has continued steadily and grows in scope. The movement thus far is of modest proportions and moderate pace, but it is steady and the general direction is clear. The advance guard is moving already—and that is what is important and significant, for the movement of the advance guard today heralds the mass movement of the militant workers tomorrow.

Utopian short cuts and magic prescriptions to create revolutionary mass movements overnight are no part of our philosophy. We proceed from scientific premises and chart our line of development on the basis of the accumulated experiences of the international labor movement. The movement that will challenge American capitalism—and finally overthrow it—must indeed be a mighty movement of the masses. By this conception we mark ourselves off from all sectarians who worship dogmas in a closed circle. But the road to the masses is through the vanguard. By this conviction we differ with all opportunists and utopians, with all political quacks and their alluring schemes to get rich quick.

Only a revolutionary theory, tested in struggle and assimilated into the blood of its adherents, can guide the masses to the revolutionary victory. The carriers of this theory are the class conscious militants, the workers' vanguard. The party which attracts them today by the tens and hundreds will make its way to the thousands and eventually to the millions. The steady recruitment of the most advanced and experienced revolutionary militants from all camps in the labor movement into the Workers Party is rapidly establishing the new party as the center of revolutionary unity. That is the augury of its future as the party of the revolutionary masses.

Tom Mooney Appeals

The desperate financial condition of the Mooney Molders Defense Committee, overburdened with expenses and debts by the drawn-out struggle, has prompted Tom Mooney himself to wire appeals to sympathetic labor organizations and publications for immediate aid. The New Militant has received this appeal and gladly transmits it to its readers herewith:

The New Militant,
2 West 15th Street, New York:
"Our defense is penniless. Absolutely necessary we raise immediately ten thousand minimum to present case to California courts for financial condition is desperate. Our distinguished counsel volunteering services without fee. Won't the New Militant contribute something now toward actual court expenses. Profound appreciation. Fraternal Greetings.
Tom Mooney.

The National Committee of the Workers Party considered this appeal at its meeting last week and decided to obligate itself to raise $100 as a first contribution to this fund. In addition, it was decided to urge members and sympathizers of the Party to raise the matter in their unions and fraternal organizations and try to secure donations to be sent direct to the Mooney Molders Defense Committee.

The recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, requiring Mooney to seek further recourse in the California state courts before appealing to the higher body, imposes another agonizing delay and heavy legal expenses on the defense committee, despite the voluntary services of the distinguished attorneys in the case. Mooney needs financial help, and the fact that he needs it is sufficient reason for every class conscious militant to make a little sacrifice and to bestir himself to an extra effort to see that he gets it. There is no extra deader to the heart of the rebel worker, and none with a stronger claim, than the cause of Tom Mooney.

Local 22 Elections

The smashing defeat of the "United Dressmakers Committee" in the elections in Local 22, International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, was a victory of the labor movement over twin evils which are alien to its historic purposes and hostile to its healthy development.

The so-called "United Committee" was just another name for as crooked a combination as ever set out to cheat and betray the workers under cover of radical slogans. The "United Committee", claiming to represent the "rank and file", was nothing more nor less than a united front of the old "club", a reactionary and racketeering group, and the past masters of the art of union wrecking, disruption and slander, who have made a "racket" of radicalism, the Stalinists. Behind these two unprincipled gangs not a few militant workers, befuddled and confused into thinking that Stalinism represents "Communism", were mobilized.

But, fortunately, not enough to affect the result. The dressmakers have learned something in the bitter experiences of the recent years. They applied that knowledge to their own interests and the interests of the union in the elections of Local 22. 70 percent of the total vote was cast for the administration slate headed by Zimmerman. That vote is the hand-writing on the wall for the Stalinist-racketeering combination in the needle trades. Incidentally, it sounds "taps" for Stalinist domination in their last stronghold, the Furriers.

In supporting the Zimmerman administration the members and sympathizers of the Workers Party in Local 22 only chose an alternative dictated to them by concern for the interests of the union. No one having the slightest regard for the needs of the dressmakers could do anything in the circumstances but register the most emphatic condemnation of the unscrupulous C.P.-"Club" combination. In doing so they did not give an unconditional endorsement to the Zimmerman administration nor withheld their criticisms of it. Still less should they do so now.

An ugly aspect of the situation is the fact that Local 22 has come to be regarded as a pawn in the Browder-Lovestone wrangling for place in the official Communist Party. All progressive and militant members of the union must oppose. unitedly any attempt to bring the Progressive Group under the domination of official Stalinism when the Lovestone-Browder deal goes through.

Scottsboro Boys
Get New Trial

awaiting their second trial, attorneys stated, because they cannot be tried again on the present indictments since all the boys were originally named in the bills handed down by the Grand Jury.

The unanimous decision of the court stated that the evidence overwhelmingly proved that it was a regularly established system in the Alabama courts to bar Negroes from jury duty and that there was sufficient evidence to establish the fact that there were many such Negroes barred who were eligible. It was just about four years ago that nine Negro boys were pulled off a freight train and charged with raping two white girls. Within a few days they were sentenced to death in as breathless a legal lynching spirit as ever the Jim-Crow south had yet witnessed.

Victory Not Yet Complete
The victory is not yet complete. The Scottsboro boys are still behind bars. Lieut. Governor Knight of Alabama says that he will seek new indictments to prosecute the cases "to their conclusion". This knight of reaction must be answered. And the way to answer him is by the renewed campaign of mass protest rising from the million-throated working class of the United States.

The Scottsboro Boys Must Be Freed.

Albert Lea
Strikers Duped

insistent that the arrested men should stand trial on the charge of "inciting to riot" and exonerate themselves from the ridiculous accusation. Fosso, Gallagher and Goldie, however, felt quite otherwise. These three prevailed upon the indicted men to agree to plead guilty to the lesser charge of "illegal entry" rather than to fight the "rioting" charge, Fosso stating that the I.U.A.W. had no money to fight the case. After much arguing, the arrested strikers reluctantly agreed to do this, mainly due to their inexperience.

Olson's Recommendation

The case was scheduled to come up before Judge Peterson, a man with a notorious anti-labor bias. Baker, with some other members of the I.U.A.W., drove up to St. Paul and interviewed Olson, telling him of Peterson's prejudices, and asking for another judge. Governor Olson recommended Judge Senn of Waseca, who then set on the case. After agreeing to hear the plea of guilty to the charge of illegal entry, Senn sentenced the men to 90 days in the county jail.

This, then, was what Attorney Gallagher and Attorney Goldie did for the Albert Lea strikers: secured for them 60-day jail sentences, on a charge of which none of them were guilty. And to this day, these two "labor" lawyers believe they did everything possible for the Albert Lea men. Their whole conception of protecting a labor client is to induce the judge and the prosecution to "trade off" for a guilty plea a lesser charge. Of the social and moral implications of a labor case they have not the slightest awareness. "Labor lawyers"—the term is a mockery when applied to such attorneys as these. Gallagher and Goldie do all the "lawyer-ing" while those whom they defend do all the "laboring"—for sixty days in the county jail. These two lawyers closed their whirlwind defense by presenting bills for $100 a day for their work.

The progressives in the I.U.A.W. were naturally angry at this gross miscarriage of justice to their brothers in Albert Lea. Together with the Northwest Trade Union Conference, they asked Baker to go back on the case. Attorney Baker, who, incidentally, is a man with a well-developed social outlook, gladly agreed to this. It didn't take him long to discover that the charge of "illegal entry" was not even contained in the indictment. Upon this basis he drew up a writ of habeas corpus. Judge Senn happened to be away at the time. Baker discovered an old law which permitted the court commissioner to issue such a writ. The commissioner then issued the writ and the jailed prisoners were about to be freed when Judge Senn got news of this. The judge immediately issued a restraining order, brought Baker into court and venomously attacked him for his efforts on behalf of the strikers.

Supreme Court Ruling

Undaunted, Baker, by an incredible amount of effort, managed to bring the Judge's action before the State Supreme Court, who ruled that the Judge was in error in issuing the restraining order. Baker rushed back to Albert Lea and sought another writ of habeas corpus, which Judge Senn then denied.

This, then, is the status of the case at present. Several of the prisoners will be released on April 6, having served their sixty days in jail on a charge of which they were innocent, and which was not even mentioned in the indictment. It is possible that action may be brought against the court authorities for false imprisonment.

Baker's sincere and capable activities on behalf of the strikers have attracted wide attention in the state, and have opened the minds of large sections of the working class to an entirely different conception of what a labor lawyer is really like in action. "From now on," said one member of the Austin Union a few days ago, "judges in Minnesota will ask a worker twice if he is guilty before they reel off a sentence."

Emme's Dismissal

It was for speaking on this case at a sectional conference of the Northwest Labor Unity Conference held in Austin on March 2 that Julius Emme was fired off the job he held as secretary of the Minnesota Industrial Commission. Emme criticized Judge Senn's decision and suggested that heat be put under any judge that would sentence innocent men in such a manner.

This remark of his was expanded and spread over the front pages of the St. Paul newspapers in a lurid manner, the account being written by a newspaperman, a labor spy, who had sneaked into the Austin conference. This was the excuse that Frank Starkey, a notorious labor faker and a member of the Industrial Commission (appointed by Governor Olson, incidentally) was looking for. Starkey wings hand in glove with the right wing fakers in the State Federation of Labor. Emme was summarily dismissed from his job without the semblance of a trial. But this is

Conferences Prepare May
Day in N. Y. and Chicago

Decision to hold a number of parades on May Day, all converging into a huge demonstration at some central point, likely Union Square, was the most important development of the conference of trades unions, political parties, fraternal bodies, etc., held at the Rand School, Thursday, March 28.

The conference was called by the New York Local of the Socialist Party, which is controlled by the right wing, Old Guard. The invitations were carefully restricted. The Workers Party, Communist Party (Opposition), and all other political organizations opposed to the S. P. were not invited. Apparently the Yipsels are now included in that category, as there was not a single Yipsel local represented. Militant Socialists were also conspicuously absent.

Delegates from the Workers Party, S.Y.L., C. P. (O.), etc., who attended without invitations, were seated by the vote of the conference. In addition, the credentials committee reported 350 delegates attending, 78 from the S. P., 139 from the Workers' Circle, 100 from local trade unions and central bodies, 28 from the Unemployed Union, several delegates from the I.W.W., etc.

August Claessens was elected chairman and ruled that motions whether carried or not would have no more force than suggestions to the arrangements committee. A motion for one united May Day demonstration of all political tendencies was made by a representative of the International Pocketbook Makers Union. Considerable discussion pro and con followed. An amendment by Nelson (Lovestonites), I.L.G.W.U., to invite the Communist Party but not the "dual unions" brought confusion to the issue. With many delegates demanding the floor, discussion was ended by Claessens, who made the usual S.P. speech, "the disgrace of Madison Square Garden," "splinter groups", etc. etc. Both amendment and motion were defeated, though the motion did get considerable support.

Representatives of political parties and groups other than the S.P. were excluded from the arrangements committee. A motion to change the name from "Socialist and Labor Committee" to "Labor Committee for May Day" was voted down by a small majority. This question will no doubt be raised and fought again at the arrangements committee.

The New York District of the Workers Party will cooperate wholeheartedly to make the parades and demonstration as militant, colorful and large as possible. Plans are being worked out to make the Workers Party and Spartacus Youth sections one of the most lively sections in the entire parade. Floats, banners, music, uniforms for the S.Y.L. etc. are being prepared.

A call for one united May Day demonstration was sent out by the Workers Party in letters to the S.P., C.P., trades unions and other organizations.

CHICAGO—On Sunday, March 31 at 10 A.M. the Provisional Committee of Chicago Labor May Day, called together a conference to plan for a May Day celebration. Over 100 delegates representing trade unions, fraternal organizations, political parties and youth organizations responded to this call, initiated by the Socialist Party, the I.L.G.W.U., the International Pocketbook Workers Union, the C. G. of the Workmen's Circle, the Jewish Federation of Trade Unions, and others.

The conference opened with an address on May Day by Lederman, the manager of the Pocketbook Workers Union. He was followed by a report of the credentials committee, which marked the first struggle in the conference and belied Lederman's plea for unity on May Day. The credentials committee proposed to unseat the delegates representing the Stalinist "A. F. of L. Committee for Unemployment Insurance", the Lovestonites and the Workers Party because these were communist organizations.

Unity Wins Out

Intervention on the part of the militant socialists led to a motion another story, and will be presented in next week's New Militant. Incidentally, the Austin Union has unanimously demanded that Fosso resign from the presidency for his cowardly and stupid advice to the Albert Lea strikers, as well as for his general reactionary policies which he is trying to impose on the heretofore militant Independent Union of All Workers.

It is possible that the Albert Lea case will be reopened, that the men will stand trial on the original charge and be fully vindicated. The Albert Lea and Fargo cases have driven home sharply the need in the Northwest for a broad labor defense movement which can command the services of experienced and intelligent labor lawyers—lawyers who will be backed up in their courtroom work by the power of a well-informed and fighting mass movement. There is a great field for the Non-Partisan Labor Defense in the Northwest.

to take up each organization separately. As a result of the fight made by the militant socialists and the Y.P.S.Lers, the Workers Party, represented by Albert Giotzer, was seated, through a vote of 49 to 29. The Lovestonites were also seated, while the "A. F. of L. Committee" was unseated by an overwhelming vote.

The conference then rejected by an almost unanimous vote, a united front with the Stalinists, who came before the conference with a plea of unity.

The greater part of the meeting was taken up with the character of the celebration. Four proposals were placed before the gathering by the provisional committee: 1) to hold an open air mass meeting; 2) to hold a march demonstration to close with an open air meeting; 3) to hold a mass indoor meeting; and lastly, 4) a Sunday, May 5, 30-hour week parade and mass meeting. The latter depending upon whether the Chicago Federation of Labor could be induced to participate.

W. P. Proposal Adopted

Upon the motion of Giotzer, the second proposal for a mass march demonstration and meeting was adopted by a majority vote, after considerable discussion. The conference also decided to make attempts to involve the I.L.G.W.U. and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union in this march, and to endeavor to get these organizations to call off their separate meetings in order thereby to hold one May Day celebration.

The chief slogan of the conference will be: The national 30-hour week. Other demands include: Union wages on relief projects; complete social insurance; support of the Lundeen Bill; against war and fascism, etc. A provision was made that additional slogans and demands could be incorporated by the executive committee.

Executive Committee Elected

The conference closed with the election of an executive committee to put the decisions into practice and to work out the details of the celebration. Among the members of this committee are: Arthur MacDowell, Cook County Secretary of the Socialist Party, Lederman of the Pocketbook Workers Union, Patterson of the Workers Committee on Unemployment, Mordecai Shulman of the S. P.; Giganti of the C. G. of the Workers Committee and Albert Giotzer for the Workers Party.

The prospects are bright for a rousing May Day celebration in Chicago. The Chicago organization of the Workers Party calls upon all its members, sympathizers and friends to watch for the details of the march and prepare to participate under the banners of our Party.

"The Collective Propagandist"

"A paper is not merely a collective propagandist and collective agitator." It is "a part of an enormous pair of bellows, blowing every spark of the class struggle and of popular discontent into a general conflagration."

Thus spoke Lenin himself, master of theory and master also in the field of practical achievement. If the symbol of the bellows applied to the organ of a revolutionary party was ever at any moment in the United States.

To take the popular discontent stirring everywhere in this country today, still manifest largely in the hearing given to utopians, false prophets and mountebanks and transform it into a revolutionary conflagration! To enable the fighting elements in the unions to take the leadership in steel, automobiles, textiles, rubber, away from the bureaucrats who want to put down the fire of discontent so that the discontent of the workers with rising prices and falling incomes, with sham company unions, with labor hating bosses, may be fanned into a conflagration sweeping the nation like a prairie fire during this spring and summer! That is the task of the Workers Party.

To achieve that task the New Militant must be distributed in increasing thousands. It must become the paper of the American workers. Our field workers, our comrades in the front line trenches in the strike areas, our comrades who have to meet the arguments or the slanders of other parties and groups, the party organizers and members who meet the militant workers in the unions and unemployed leagues and win them for the party,—all must be armed with the New Militant—their work must be supplemented by the New Militant going in thousands into the factories, mines, stores, offices and workers' homes.

Blow "every spark of the class struggle into a general conflagration!" That means, today, support the New Militant subscription campaign.

HUMAN AND DIVINE . . .

WASHINGTON.—Philip Murray, puppet vice-president of the United Mine Workers and plant tool in the hands of Lewis, gets a job with the NRA. Appointed to membership on the National Industrial Recovery Board, he will hereafter sit side by side with Sidney Hillman, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, as A. F. of L. spokesman in the New Deal's primary scheme for class-collaboration.

Murray gets his job (which involves control over a lot of patronage) and the A. F. of L. at once forgives and forgets.

It forgives and forgets Richberg, chief betrayer of the organized labor movement from the first day of Section 7a to date. Richberg, the A. F. of L. chiefs were saying only a few weeks ago, was a double-crosser, a traitor, a Judas. They were condemning him as the chief saboteur of collective bargaining. Today, once again, Richberg, Green and Lewis are pals, members of a happy little family.

The Executive Council forgives and forgets the President's renewal of the automobile code. Only a few weeks ago, the A. F. of L. leaders were crying to high heaven because the President acted without paying the least attention to the Henderson-Richberg report. They were clamoring for the suppression of the Wolman Automobile Labor Board. Today, once again, the A. F. of L. bureaucrats look toward the President as its firm friend.

They forgive and forget the scandal of the recently-approved tobacco code; the paralysis of the labor relations boards; the overwhelming torrent of non-compliance with wage and hour requirements; the enactment of the Work Relief bill permeated by the philosophy of low wages.

All, in short, is the best in the best of all possible bureaucratic worlds. Wage earners have nothing to complain about any more. The Administration, its heart in the right place, has finally recognized the co-equal status of labor with management. The problems of unemployment, starvation wages and stretch-out have been solved. The economic order of the United States has been revolutionized.

For where Hillman once sat alone as the A. F. of L.'s spokesman on the NLRB, he is now joined by Murray. Two jobs in the place of one. Twice as much opportunity to sell out the unorganized toiling masses.

Unfortunately, there is not as much cause for elation among the workers as there is among Green and Co. The whole Executive Council of the A. F. of L. might be named to the NLRB for all the difference that would make on the matters that really count. What has the NRA done so far to reduce unemployment, increase weekly earnings, and to the real income of workers? The answer—as all official statistics show—is nothing. What can the NRA do in view of its encouragement to production and price control, to cartels and monopoly? The answer—as a moment's reflection will indicate—is less than nothing.

THE PITFALLS OF LEWISDOM . . .

The wage conferences between the United Mine Workers and the operators are still dragging on. Outwardly at least the deadlock is complete. The operators propose to continue the wage and hour standards of the present bituminous coal code. The union proposes to raise wages and shorten hours.

Will this mean, if no agreement is reached, a truly militant strike? Not if John Lewis can help it. A safe and peaceful "suspension" until such time as coal inventories are reduced, is possible. But Lewis will work as hard to suppress any vigorous strike as he has worked to suppress all coal strikes from the very outset of Section 7a.

It should not be forgotten that the bituminous coal code is equipped with labor boards in which the U.M.W.A. and the operators have equal membership. The code very definitely limits the right to strike. The code very definitely provides for compulsory arbitration. These provisions were written into the code by Lewis and his cohorts for the specific purpose of preventing the rank and file workers from getting out of hand.

WAR!

The Enemy Is In Our Own Country

NO MATTER how highly developed the armed strength of a nation may be, the coming war, like the last one, will be fought by the masses who are compelled to employ the weapons of warfare.

But before the workers of all nations can be driven to the trenches, their minds must first be poisoned with chauvinist gases, the bayonet of lies and misrepresentation must first rip out the bowels of their class solidarity.

In the last war, the masses were led to fight for Pan-Slavic czarist expansion in the name of the struggle against Japanese autocracy and German Kaiserism; the enemy of the Russian workers was in . . . Tokyo and Berlin. The German worker was called on to defend the Junker's fatherland from Russian barbarism and French "revenge"; his enemy was in . . . Moscow and Paris.

In most countries, the official Socialist parties turned recruiting sergeant in behalf of the imperialists. It required the immortal Karl Liebknecht to exclaim: "The enemy is in our own country!" In 1917, the Russian masses learned the meaning of these words. They turned on their real enemy, they took power, they brought the war to an end in their way.

The working masses are now being mobilized for imperialist war in the same way. Only, today it is not the Kaiser who is "forcing a war upon us"; his place has been taken by Hitler.

Does Fascism mean war? Yes, but only because Fascism means the rule of capitalism organized in the nakedest, most dictatorial and murderous way. It is imperialist capitalism that produces war, be it organized as an autocracy, a constitutional monarchy, a Fascist state, or a "democratic republic."

The social democrats are merely repeating their old role when they shout about the need of the workers defending the "democratic" countries against the "Fascist aggressor."

The Stalinists are merely lending a helping hand by creating illusions about the League of Nations, about "disarmament" as a cure for war, about the "capitalist powers that do not want war" and the "capitalist powers that do want war."

Does this mean that it is a matter of indifference to the workers whether or not they are ruled by Fascism? Not at all! Just because we are ready to fight tooth and nail for the right to organize, to speak, to meet, to publish our press, to strike, to picket, to fight for improved conditions and for freedom from capitalism—we stand intransigently opposed to the imperialist war. These are precisely the rights that are curtailed or abolished by even the most "democratic" countries the minute war is declared.

Many battles were fought in the class war to win these rights; battles are fought every day to preserve them. We will not surrender them lightly. We will fight to retain them, in the only war the working class can support—the class war—because we need them to defend ourselves better against the daily attacks of capitalism, because we need them for the speediest and most effective overthrow of capitalism!

It is Hitler who crushes the German proletariat. It is and will be American capitalism that exploits the American working class and reduces it to gagged and fettered serfs.

The enemy is in our own country!

Ever greater numbers of workers will realize this profound truth.

It will immunize them against the poison of chauvinism.

Juror Hits Verdict in California

Goldman Appeals for New Trial as Deal Is Uncovered

SACRAMENTO, April 4.—Sentence was not passed today upon the eight workers convicted of criminal syndicalism Monday. Judge Dal M. Lemmon's schedule was upset when, on the motion for a new trial, Albert Goldman, attorney for the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, instead of limiting himself to dry technical arguments, exploded a bombshell which forever destroys the validity of the guilty verdict in the minds of all but the frame-up prosecution and the court.

Opening the defense argument for a new trial, Goldman denounced the verdict as an illegal horse-trade. The crowded court was electrified when he read an affidavit by a juror affirming this view. The judge immediately discounted Goldman's argument, but broke off proceedings to seek legal authority not to grant a new trial. Court will reassemble April 10 for further argument, Goldman having left Sacramento today for his home in Chicago. In the meantime, the judge has refused to set bail.

The affidavit impeaching the guilty verdict especially in the cases of Norman Mini of the Workers Party and Caroline Decker of the Communist Party, is signed by Howard S. McIntire. An accountant, he worked 27 years in the State Adjutant-General's office and is a Past Master of the local Masons, who last week presented him with a diamond-studded watch-chain. McIntire held out for 118 ballots before agreeing to a horse-trade on Mini and Decker in order to get a verdict.

Jurors Threatened

McIntire, who is indebted to one of the local banks back of the prosecution, finally gave in because of threats by other jurors. During the deliberations, Foreman Backliffe and Mrs. Mary A. Perry, instruments of the prosecution, denounced as Reds those jurors who opposed convicting everybody on two counts. They threatened not only McIntire, but Juror Mrs. Clara F. Keith, whose son is a traffic cop, and Juror W. W. Jackson, former railroad worker who lives off a Southern Pacific pension. Fully conscious of the State's failure to make a case, McIntire nevertheless surrendered after a fight lasting 66 hours, and a horse-trade was arranged.

McIntire's affidavit was given voluntarily to the defense in order, as he stated, to get a new trial for innocent people. Immediately after the verdict he sought out Attorney Goldman in the lobby of the latter's hotel to tell him about the horse-trade. He shed tears of shame and regret. Next day he encountered on the street Jack Warnick, acquitted defendant, Norman Mini's father, and Herbert Solow of the N. P.L.D. to whom he told the same story. On the second day after the verdict, he sought out Solow and Warnick in the former's hotel room, and there expressed a desire to try to undo his action. As a result he composed a statement, which he then swore to before a notary and (Continued on Page 2)

Continue Fight for the Scottsboro Boys

In handing down its unanimous decision to set aside the verdict in the Scottsboro trial, giving a new trial to Clarence Norris and Heywood Patterson, the United States Supreme Court performed a political act of the highest significance. The Supreme Court gave nothing from the goodness of its heart or from the mere formal excellence of its juridical brains. Seething unrest among the Negro masses, and, to a degree, its organized expression in the Scottsboro campaign has bumped square into the oppressive exploiters and discriminators against the Negro population. The decision of the Court is a political reverberation of that collision.

The victory is only a partial one. The scene shifts back to Alabama where, in a new trial, the ruling class will try another maneuver in their attempt to railroad the Scottsboro boys.

As a result of the Supreme Court decision Governor Bibb Graves has ordered a revision of jury boxes in Alabama. The prosecutor—now Lieutenant Governor Knight—has promised a new and ironclad case. It is obvious the state will now try to avoid all technicalities without giving the boys any better chance.

Some Negroes may be allowed on the jury. They will be drawn from the thin middleclass stratum of the Death and Destruction 'Peace' Record of 1934

During 1934 throughout the world 2,400,000 men and women died of starvation and 1,200,000 men and women committed suicide because they had no further means of existence. At the same time the social order which permitted and condoned this state of affairs evolved as a remedy to alleviate this misery the peculiar device of destroying 1,000,000 wagon loads of wheat 207,000 train loads of coffee 516,000,000 pounds of sugar 50,000,000 pounds of rice 50,000,000 pounds of meat.

Negro people, and, lest any of these go astray, intimidation—open and concealed lynch threats—will be used against them.

Now, if ever, real victory is not far off. The I.L.D. has always been the cat in the boot; yet so near and yet so far.

Only a mass movement can save the Scottsboro boys! The Supreme Court will not and can not save the boys!

The I.L.D. alone cannot save the boys! Only by building a mass defense, with all working class elements represented with rights of criticism, can the Scottsboro boys be finally freed.

The Scottsboro boys shall not die!

Men Flocking into Chevrolet Union

BULLETIN

(By Wire to the New Militant)
TOLEDO, O., April 9.—Despite instructions from the A. F. of L. to the workers not to participate in the election at the Chevrolet plant in Toledo arranged by the Auto Labor Board, 1,326 men voted for the A. F. of L. and only 508 voted for no affiliation. Only a handful failed to vote at all. Organization sentiment is running high, and the workers are flocking into the Federal union. Action talk is heard everywhere and a strike appears likely in the immediate future.

TOLEDO, O., April 9.—Organization of the production and skilled and office workers in the large Toledo plant of the Chevrolet Motor Corp. is proceeding rapidly following two jammed and enthusiastic mass meetings conducted by the Toledo local of the United Automobile Workers Federal Labor Union.

Over 900 workers have attended the meetings and it is expected that all will be signed up in the union by this Saturday. This is one of the most successful attempts which has been made to unionize a plant (Continued on Page 4)

LATEST STRIKE ASPECTS AT A GLANCE

The Cleveland Federation of Labor and the Metal Trades Council have formally pledged their support to the Akron rubber workers' union.

F. J. Dillon, A. F. of L. auto head in Detroit, announces that "in the event of a strike in the Akron rubber factories we are prepared to give support."

"Impartial observers," say press reports, "are practically unanimous that the walkout (in Akron) will be under way before the present week is ended."

Secretary of Labor Perkins has stepped into the Akron situation, conferring with company officials, in hope of averting the strike of rubber workers.

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, April 9.—Akron's 30,000 rubber workers stand poised and ready to strike against the provocative attacks of the Goodyear, Goodrich and Firestone companies and establish union recognition. Certain outstanding facts this week indicate that the rubber struggle is the most important political event for the working class since the New Deal.

Labor Supports St. Louis Gas Workers Strike

Trick Settlement Rejected - Ladies' Auxiliary Is Organized

ST. LOUIS, April 6.—The strike of gas house workers goes into its second week with ranks firmer than ever, with mounting enthusiasm, and with wider and wider support.

The strike received fresh impetus last Saturday with the endorsement of the St. Louis Central Trades Council, bringing the entire organized labor movement of St. Louis behind the strikers. The decision came after several prominent officials of the C.T.C. visited the offices of the Laclede Co. in an attempt to lay the ground for a settlement. Gosling, head of the company, refused even to interview them.

Labor Movement In Support

The support of the Central Council greatly strengthens the strike, bringing ever wider circles of the labor movement to the aid of the strike.

The Laclede company, frightened by the success of the daily strike bulletin, has begun a campaign of slander against the union in paid advertisements inserted daily in the capitalist press. The bulletin has answered the company lies as frequently as they appeared, making it embarrassing for the company to continue.

A women's auxiliary, organized last week, which includes the wives, daughters, sweethearts, and sisters of the strikers, is doing fine work in feeding the men, in assuring water distribution of the bulletin, and in raising money to support the strike.

"Settlement" Rejected

The union unanimously rejected a "settlement" proposed by the Mayor's Committee last week, a settlement which bore all the earmarks of a company lawyer's work. Under its provisions union men could have been fired wholesale for organizing. Not only that but there was no mention of seniority rights, and one of the union's main demands, that the service charge be revoked, was completely neglected. (Continued on Page 4)

Nation-wide Strike Against War Stirrs Students

On April 12, at 11 A.M., thousands of students throughout the country will go out on strike against war and fascism. The response on Friday will be an indication of the strong anti-war sentiment on the part of the student youth. As a militant anti-war manifestation the strike should receive the support of every student and worker and their organizations.

It will be an indication of the disillusionment with capitalism's fake peace promises and the determination not to be cannon fodder for the next imperialist war.

It is unfortunate that such a strong expression of student opinion should be misguided and diverted into channels which will mar the success and effectiveness of the demonstration. No small measure of the responsibility for this can be laid at the door of the Young Peoples Socialist League and the Young Communist League. Proper guidance and leadership can be given only by the working class through its organizations. The Spartacus Youth League, realizing this necessity, appealed to the Y.P.S.L. and the Y.C.L. for a national united front of political working class youth organizations to give leadership and support to the strike. To date no answer has been received. The strike committee is in the hands of the Socialist S.L.I.D., the Stalinist N.S.L. and the Methodist Youth Council.

In every school where it has any foothold the S.Y.L., while affirming its support of the strike, has attempted to correct false slogans advanced, has analyzed for the students the nature of imperialist war and has pointed out the only method of ending it—revolutionary struggle against capitalist war. In many instances the slogans raised are purely pacifist and entirely distort the role of the students in the anti-war fight, helping to spread the illusion that the students can conduct their struggle entirely independently of the working class. Where the slogan "Against War" was raised, S.Y.L.ers succeeded in some cases in making "Against Imperialist War" the central issue of the strike. In Franklin Lane High School, Brooklyn, where the administration attempted to avert a strike by persuading the students to call it after school hours, we were active in getting the students to agree to walk out at 11. In N.Y.U. members of the S.Y.L. in conjunction with the Student League for Industrial Democracy called an anti-war rally at which they demanded that Prof. Sidney Hook be allowed to speak at the strike mass meeting. This was in protest against the National Student League policy of allowing only people who agreed with their line to speak. In City College of New York members of the S.Y.L. fraction issued leaflets exposing the pacifist channels into which the local strike committee was leading the strike and calling on the students to avert the danger. In Penn State College the local S. Y. L. branch issued militant leaflets calling for support of the strike. Lincoln High School S.Y.L.ers have issued the first bulletin which analyzes the war question and calls for support of the strike. Throughout, though criticizing wrong policies and slogans and attacking all attempts by the organizations in the official united front mechanically to control and dominate the local united front committees, the S.Y.L. has asserted its support of the strike and assisted in the preparation for it.

While newspapers and preachers—in particular preachers—cry against the workers, the workers calmly continue to get ready for a stiff battle which can only be described as impending civil war. The workers' ranks continue to grow. The strike vote proves that. Scabbing will be done only by few misguided workers, if they can get in. It doesn't seem likely that they will. Of course, the A. F. of L. has promised nation-wide support. This promise must be made a reality. Otherwise the struggle of the Akron workers against the entire capitalist structure will be made more difficult.

Juror's Affidavit Flays Sacramento Verdict

Horse-Trade Uncovered; Goldman Calls for New Trial

The local population is still divided into those for and those against the verdict, but there are few people left who regard it as anything but a political horse-trade having nothing to do with law or evidence. Infuriated reactionaries, partly deprived of the benefit of judicial covering in the anti-union drive which culminated in the criminal syndicalism indictment, are renewing vigilante activities. They have threatened the lives of several acquitted defendants and have ordered all of them out of town.

Stalinist Prisoners Reconsider

McIntire is being subjected to sharp pressure from his bank and other forces to get him to say he gave his statement out of fear of Red terrorism! Prosecutor McAlister, who is filling the local press with stories that he and several jurors have been threatened with death since the verdict, has sent agents to all jurors demanding statements against McIntire.

The 8 convicted defendants are back in the County Jail, where 40 prisoners are sick from poisonous food. All eight express the hope that there will be a united appeal struggle. The Stalinists among them look sheepish at any mention of their endorsement of the C. P.'s attacks on Norman Mini who is once again in jail with them. All said a friendly good-bye to Goldman and to Solow, who has served as California representative of the N.P.L.D. since December, when they left today for the East. Caroline Decker has asked that if and when bail is set pending appeal, the N.P.L.D. use its bail funds for her again.

The latest Western Worker, however, denounces Mini, class war prisoner now facing sentence of 1-14 years in San Quentin. It states that the jury recommended probation for him because he "conciliated" the prosecution. Obligated to explain how come the jury also recommended probation for Lorine

Norman, 100 percent Stalinist, this rag says that the jury (which it has repeatedly called a "Fascist jury") had consideration for her health!

Parties Unite Against War

A border dispute between the Central American republics of Costa Rica and Panama, both completely dominated by American imperialism, is threatening to lead to an armed struggle in that region. The Talamanca zone is in dispute. With the exception of a strip one-mile wide bordering the coast, which according to Costa Rican law must remain national property, the disputed zone of Talamanca is totally in the hands of the United Fruit Company. The causes of the conflict therefore can be traced to imperialist interests which in Central America more than almost anywhere else will tolerate no restrictions on their domination. A patriotic hysteria is now being fanned by the professional scribblers and other "patriots" of both countries.

A united front manifesto has been issued by the working class organizations of the two countries, calling for a conference of all anti-imperialist organizations of Panama and Costa Rica. The appeal is signed by the Workers Party (Marxist-Leninist) of Panama (standing for the Fourth International), the Communist Party of Panama (Third International), the Marxist Socialist Party of Panama (Reformist), the U.G.T. of Costa Rica (trade union center), and the Tenants League of Panama. The appeal ends with the following "categorical declaration":

"Whatever may be the outcome of the proposed border settlement, we workers of Costa Rica and Panama will not follow our respective capitalist classes if the conflict should lead to a war. In such a case, the proletariat of each country will regard it, its inescapable duty to fire not a single shot at the class brothers on the other side, but to turn its arms against its own ruling class which stays at home.

"For a Workers and Peasants Government!"

"For the revolutionary way out of the present crisis!"

Boston Conference Prepares Joint May Day Celebration

By L. SCHLOSBERG

BOSTON, April 7.—A provisional First of May Committee was organized here composed of the Socialist Party, joint board of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, joint board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, joint board of the Cloak Makers Union, joint board of the Cap Makers Union, and the Workmen's Circle.

A conference was held Sunday, March 31, where the following organizations were represented: seven unions, seven S. P. branches, and six Workmen's Circle branches. The delegates of the Left Wing organizations who sent delegates to the conference, such as the Workers Party, the Spartacus Youth, Students of Harvard University and also a representative of the Communist Party, who came and acted as an angel for a united front of all labor organizations, were not seated. However, four members of the Workers Party were seated as delegates from the Workmen's Circle and the Ladies Garment Workers Union. Three of these comrades were in the leading committees of the conference.

At the beginning of the conference 27 delegates supported the extreme reactionary attitude of the Right wingers of the Socialist Party and 15 were with the progressive elements, but after a demonstration of the practical attitude of the comrades of the Workers Party, an amendment was made by our comrades that the conference should confer with all radical organizations and organize a bona fide united front for a May 1 demonstration.

(It should be mentioned that the leaders of the Right wing told us that if we did not fight to have the Communist Party recognized, our delegates would be seated. Our answer was: "We did not come to get prestige for the Workers Party, but we want to have a bona fide united front May 1st demonstration representing all political views.")

The amendment was carried by a 21 to 13 vote. A committee of eight was elected, including three members of the Workers Party, comrades William Konikow, L. Schlosberg, and Chlipovitz.

S. Blumfield, district organizer of the C. P. and Weber, secretary of the C. P. came to the first conference and displayed their typical attitude. After a three hours "conference" with them, the representatives of the Communist Party stated: "Speakers of the Workers Party and the Communist Party Opposition should be excluded."

S.Y.L. North-Eastern Regional Confab to Map Future Course

By SOL STEVENS

On April 13 and 14 the New York-New England section of the Spartacus Youth League will meet in its first regional conference. This conference is of great importance to the S.Y.L. and the W.P. A thorough analysis of the activity of the last four months, the gains and the mistakes, will characterize the conference. Delegates from about 15 branches, comrades from the field as well as those engaged in local work, will meet to deal with the problems facing the League.

The Workers Party, to which the S.Y.L. is politically subordinate, will send delegates to the conference, to assist the comrades in their discussions and plans. The recent American Youth Congress, the coming Student Strike, the anti-war struggle and the R.O.T.C., the question of a national union for the organization, are some of the problems to be taken up.

We are coming to this conference with the report that the S.Y.L. has doubled its membership nationally since its first national convention last December. Based upon the discussion of past achievements plans will be laid here for future work.

The Spartacus Youth League is on the march—on the road towards building a mass revolutionary youth organization. The Regional Conference will be the first step to record our gains and plan our work. Then we march on! All eyes now on the Regional Conference.

IN THE UNIONS

By KARL LORE

The old Wobblly spirit seems to be alive again in Cleveland these days. A string of strikes in small stove, metal barrel and machinery plants, of foundry workers and charwomen, has culminated in a really important walkout of 1,200 employees of the National Screw Company. The fight has been carried on with the usual aggressive I.W.W. tactics. There have been continuous arrests, a bomb scare was cooked up, more than a dozen of the organizers and active committeemen have been clapped in the jug, held for 48 hours or more and then released without any charge being made against them. The union charges that the company violated an agreement for a ten percent raise when the Associated Industries, an employers' organization, promised to help in breaking up the organization.

COME-BACK?

Does it mean that the Industrial Workers of the World are due for a comeback? Will the traditions of Lawrence, McKees Rocks and Mesaba Range come to life again in a revived Wobblly offensive? The evidence is against it.

Many of their best elements have gone elsewhere. The hard facts of the present day scene in the labor movement are against them. The fundamental confusion in regard to the function of political action which cracked up the old movement, works with even sharper emphasis today. Outside of the Cleveland situation, the I.W.W. has played a prominent part in only one other place. In the early stages of organization in the Detroit auto plants, they tied up the Murray Body Co. by an effective strike. But the I.W.W. is out of the Detroit picture today and its place has been taken by the Federal locals of the American Federation of Labor. In Cleveland itself, as a matter of fact, they form but a tiny part of the entire body of organized labor. It was estimated some six months ago that over 100,000 workers were organized into A. F. of L. unions in that city. The figure has no doubt fallen since, but not enough to affect the picture to any considerable extent.

RAT AGENCY

A. A. Ahner is coming up in the world. At one time he had a hard job keeping his head above water. Labor had exposed him in Milwaukee, in Dubuque, Iowa and in other cities where he had carried on his rotten trade as head of an industrial spy agency which furnished thugs and stool pigeons for union breaking purposes. The union organization campaign hit St. Louis and the Ahner Detective Engineering-Detective Engineering Agency began to lap up the gravy. When the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the International Ladies Garment Workers Union struck the clothing industry of the city he supplied strong-arm men to handle the girls who walked out. His agency has been in the thick of every important labor struggle since. His latest employer is the Laclede Gas Company which has hired him to smash the strike of gas workers.

Such scab-baiting agencies are common enough. There is an angle to the case of A. A. Ahner, however, which lifts it out of the ordinary run. Late in 1933 it was whispered in the inner circles of the trade union movement of St. Louis that a prominent union official, czar of one of the most powerful building trades organization in the city, owned a one-third interest in Ahner's little business venture. It is a line of inquiry which it might be well worth while to follow up.

NECKTIES MERGE

Since 1906 the organized neckwear makers have been organized into a Federal Local of the A. F. of L. At present there are about 3,000 organized, all of them in the New York market. Efforts to spread the union to Chicago, Philadelphia and other centers have not been successful. The Federal local form cramped their style. No sizeable war chest could be accumulated with which to do the job. In recent years the industry has shown an ever increasing tendency to leave New York and it is now estimated that about 7,000 more workers are unorganized, chiefly in these outside centers.

Last year the local applied to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers for affiliation. In February the executive council of the American Federation of Labor approved the transference of the charter to the A.C.W. and by the end of April it is expected that the local will be a functioning branch of the Amalgamated.

A strong progressive group has been functioning for some time in the local union. In the Amalgamated Clothing Workers the fight for union democracy and militancy must be kept up. The Progressive Unionists of America, to which the neckwear workers' progressive group is affiliated, has a real job to do.

BRIEFS

Okey O'dell, leader of last summer's militant union strike at McGuffey, Ohio has kept up the work. He now reports widespread organization of agricultural workers in Northwest Ohio, Southern Michigan and Eastern Indiana. Headquarters have been established at McGuffey.

PIONEER BOOK NOTES

We have just unearthed 100 copies of THE PERMANENT REVOLUTION (75c) and THE STRATEGY OF WORLD REVOLUTION (25c). Both have been out of print for quite some time. If your library doesn't contain a copy of these books—now is the time to get it.

Through special arrangement with the publishers of Trotsky's THE HISTORY OF THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION, we are able to offer, for a limited time only, the three volumes of this great work for $6.00.

We have recently imported a number of books from England that have not been available on this side of the Atlantic for many a year. Every student of Marxism and the movement should have a copy. They are:

THE STUDENTS MARX, by Edward Aveling $.75
KARL MARX, by Achille Loria75
THE BOLSHEVIK THEORY, by Raymond Postgate 2.00
SELECTED ESSAYS, by Karl Marx 2.00
CONDITION OF WORKING CLASS IN ENGLAND—1844
by Frederick Engels 1.75
Also the following Recent Books:
ASPECTS OF DIALECTICAL MATERIALISM—Symposium
by H. Levy, John Macmurray, etc. 1.75
THE OUTLOOK OF SCIENCE, by R. L. Worrall 3.00
ESSAYS IN THE HISTORY OF MATERIALISM, by George
Plekhanov 2.50
THE PHILOSOPHY OF COMMUNISM, by J. Macmurray 1.00
KARL MARX, by Raymond Postgate50

Two great novels that every worker should read—
MAN'S FATE, by Andre Malraux (Reg. $2.50) 2.00

The NEW MILITANT

3 Months for 25 Cents

Editor of New Militant:

At the present the chief task of the "leaders" of both unions in the fur trade is to pass the blame for the situation facing the fur workers on to someone else. It is particularly difficult for Ben Gold and the other leaders of the Fur Workers Industrial Union to "explain" their new and sudden passion for unity. Leaflets are issued which explain nothing. Speeches are made by past masters in the art of speaking but instead of dealing with their own past zigzag course they attack those who for years had a correct position on the question of unity.

I have been charged with advising the liquidation of the F.W.I.U. That this statement is untrue is known to all, including Gold and Winogradsky. That the sudden spin around which they were given by their party has made them dizzy, and they might be excused if it weren't for the fact that the very existence of a union in the fur market is endangered by their nonsense. Let us look over the record.

Is it necessary to quote material to show where Gold and the Communist Party stood? Every fur worker knows that for years they denounced not only the International Furriers Union but the whole A. F. of L. as "Fascist", "Social Fascist", "scab agencies", "company unions", etc. Anyone who spoke against this view was a target for the famous "splitting squad". From this position, from "bloody criminal battle", from denunciation, the leadership of our union turned overnight into advocates of unity with our brothers in the A. F. of L. Did they really expect that anyone would take their sudden change seriously? It will take months of work, months of friendly collaboration with the furriers in the International, to break down the impression which years of Stalinist misleadership has given in the fur market. The fur workers within and outside the F.W.I.U. must be reeducated.

An editorial in the Militant, March 24, 1934, put forward the position of the Communist League have sacrificed so much for the building of the Industrial Union, they must realize one thing—we must face the truth that maintaining the Industrial Union outside the American Federation of Labor can lead only to the elimination of the Left wing in the trade. There is only one way open to us therefore, to enter the A. F. of L. as an autonomous local, and thereby maintain our unity."

These two paragraphs represented my views then. They still do and they also point the correct course for the union to follow. The leadership of the F.W.I.U. has wasted years. They have put obstacles in the way of unity. Their methods of struggle have played into the hands of the reactionary leaders of the International. This must be clearly understood. The greatest obstacles to unity of the furriers today are, on the one hand, the bureaucratic clique in the International and, on the other, the zigzag Communist Party leaders of the F.W.I.U.

Who are the liquidators? The road I proposed was the road of unity, the road of merger. This road was denounced by the C. P. last year as "social fascist". Recently the Communist Party has announced to the world that they are for the merger of independent unions with the A. F. of L. unions wherever possible; failing that they are for joining the A. F. of L. as individuals. Their past policy made unity impossible. Their present policy leads to liquidation. I oppose both. I am for fraternal cooperation with the members of the International Union now and for continuing our campaign for unity. A little truth-telling and self-criticism by Gold would be his best contribution to that campaign. His failure makes it necessary for the rank and file to speak up all the louder. — J. RABINOWITZ.

"My doctors say I react favorably to the excitement of roulette," says Charles Schwab as he sails for the French Riviera. There he meets in secret session with representatives of Krupp, Vickers, Schneider-Crusot, Skoda and other munition makers. "We have renewed the agreement of the International Railmakers' Association," they tell curious reporters. . . . Two days later Hitler scraps the Versailles Treaty, increases the German Army, orders huge supplies of munitions and starts the nations of the world on an armament race. . . .

MERRY ENGLAND: One half the people jailed in England are incarcerated for non-payment of debts reports Home Secretary, Sir John Gilmour. . . . A restaurant exclusively for dogs has been opened in London by Lady Herbert Scott who already has a dog's beauty parlor nearby. Soup, fish, meat and cereals is served to dogs in the restaurant or food may be sent out to them. . . . "We want bread," is the cry of 70,000 unemployed as they tramp to Glasgow from from all parts of the British Isles. . . . All first class sleeping passengers on London-Glasgow trains receive hot-water bottles to keep their feet warm. . . .

ECONOMICS: Since 1932 the RYC has spent $3,000,000,000. Of this $7,300,000,000 went to the Bankers, Railroads and Industrialists; $1,300,000,000 for relief. . . . "I left my Pullman drawing room and spent three hours talking with the day coach passengers. People are fast losing faith in capitalism," sighs Robert Babson, big business prophet. . . . In a 68 page report the Research and Planning division of the NIRA reaches this conclusion: "Although payrolls in December 1934 were only 60% of the total of 1926, dividends and interest were 150% of the total for that year. In short, the income enjoyed by those who received dividends and interest was 50% higher than in 1926, even though the national income has declined nearly 40% since that date and the volume of production has declined by one third." . . . Trojanovsky Poses as Doctor for Capitalism

By A. J. MUSTE

It was pointed out in a recent issue of the New Militant that the Communist Party in following out its new "labor party" line was flirting with left liberal congressmen. In California Utopians and legislators who stand for Upton Sinclair's Epic plan for the abolition of poverty within the borders of one state (deduction from the "theory of Socialism in one country" and leading eventually to the abolition of poverty in the tenth ward perhaps?) seem to be regarded as "comrades to be" in the new labor party.

This is, however, mild stuff compared to the line which Ambassador Trojanovsky gave the Bond Club of New York in his speech on March 22.

The ambassador of the Workers' State was addressing the gentlemen of the Bond Club on the peace policy of the Soviet Union. He suggested that the United States might agree to refrain from helping an "aggressor" in the next war. This would exercise a restraining effect upon "hot-headed adventurers" (Marxian analysis of the war mongers). He went on to give the Soviet diplomat's definition of "aggression".

He expressed encouragement over the prospect of "general acceptance" of this definition "among countries interested in the observance of peace" (and which imperialist nations may they be?)

Physician for Capitalism

But "this would be merely a first step on the road to maintaining peace." At last we are to get the Bolshevik doctrine, one opines, especially as the ambassador goes on to assert: "We have to dig to the bottom of contemporary troubles." Breathless workers hang on his words. What is the true road to peace, according to the oracles of Moscow? Here it goes: "It is necessary to work out practical plans for the economic rehabilitation of the world and especially for Europe." Can it be that Trojanovsky actually means that not workers' revolution but the economic rehabilitation of capitalist countries is the road to peace? In order to dispel all doubt he went on to say: "Probably the advice of broad-minded business men would be available and useful in this connection."

When British or German Social Democrats collaborated with "broad-minded business men" for the economic rehabilitation of capitalism in one country instead of using the crisis for the overthrow of capitalism, what did the C. I. say that was? And when the ambassador of the Soviet Union offers collaboration with "broad-minded business men" for the rehabilitation of world capitalism as the road to world peace, what shall we call this policy?

Don't Rock the Boat!

Socialism can be built in one country, the Soviet Union, according to Stalinist theory, even though the rest of the world remains capitalist. From this nationalist standpoint it appears quite logical that the Soviet Union should help rehabilitate capitalist countries in order, let us say, that it may obtain credits from them. Since the Communist parties presumably cannot follow a line in contradiction to that of the present rulers of the Soviet Union but rather exist primarily or well nigh exclusively for "the defense of the Soviet Union," the Communist parties also must not "rock the boat" in capitalist countries, must maintain the status-quo of the Flaminio government in France, must actively or passively, openly or tacitly, help in the economic rehabilitation of these countries.

Thus the Soviet Union through the present leadership of the Communist (Stalinist) International is used not for the overthrow but for the rehabilitation of capitalism, not to build but to emasculate the revolutionary movements in capitalist countries. These nations get a chance to organize their forces for the eventual attack upon the Soviet Union. The one real defense of the Soviet Union, the revolutionary movements in capitalist countries, is destroyed. The destruction of the workers' state is prepared.

Pacifism with a Red Color

The policy of the Soviet Union is not a proletarian peace policy—the only true peace policy is that of working class revolution—but a

"One way out of the depression is for the American people to eat a lot," says Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture. . . . The average American family is compelled to spend $3.31 more a week for food than it spent two years ago. . . . "Fish and potatoes are cheap," comforts Secretary Wallace as he announces that meat prices are scheduled to rise 22% and dairy products 6% in the next six months. . . . Almost a million pounds of relief meat were allowed to spoil in warehouses in Toledo and Columbus. "No attempt was made to distribute the spoiled meat to the unemployed," declares the relief director.

pacifist policy. Pacifism has ever proved and will again prove the road to war, to the ruin of the masses. The Stalinist policy is not internationalist, but nationalist. It is not progressive, it is reactionary.

If the workers of the Soviet Union, those who made the revolution, knew what was happening they would overthrow this regime. But they do not know. They cannot know. The arguments Stalin uses against party opponents is exile or a bullet in the head. Those who do understand what is happening are well high powerless to do anything about it. Well may we reiterate, therefore, the statement of the Declaration of Principles of the Workers' Party: "The effective defense of the Soviet Union today and the support of those revolutionists in the S. U. who fight for the reform of the Soviet State and the revival of the Bolshevik Party of Lenin's time based on the principles of revolutionary internationalism and workers' democracy depend therefore upon the building of new revolutionary parties in the capitalist countries and a new revolutionary international."

Upon this depends also the liberation of the masses in capitalist countries from unemployment, poverty, Fascism and war. To this task the Workers Party dedicates itself.

It is no wonder to us that the C. P. daily subjects the Workers Party to bitter and slanderous attack. That does not disturb us. It furnishes daily confirmation of the fact that the C. P. has no real answer to the issues that we raise, that it is well aware that the W.P. and the other parties throughout the world, striving for the Fourth International, are its real and destined to be victorious, foes.

By that same token we are the heralds to the workers of the world of the new revolutionary movement. In place of the party and the international which have organized defeats we shall organize victories. For the Workers Party! For the Fourth International!

Confusion Reigns in Ranks As C.P. Veers to Lab Party

By AL DASCH

The Labor Party announcement of Earl Browder's at the Washington Congress for Unemployment Insurance, followed two weeks later by the resolution of the central committee which was merely a re-echoing of Browder's speech, caused some surprise. Particularly so, since for at least five years it had been regarded as the height of renegade and social-fascism to advocate such a policy. Nevertheless, from the topmost strata of the Stalinist regime down to the ordinary rank and file, the phenomenal monolithism of the Communist Party is manifesting itself by the unanimous acquiescence of the party membership in this new policy. This despite the fact that no discussion was held within the C.P. itself previous to Browder's proclamation before the non-party gathering at Washington. What was unprincipled, incorrect and class-collaborationist has become overnight the quintessence of "revolutionary" strategy.

Perversion of Theory

The theoretical backwardness of the members of the Communist Party is well known. Outside of some general knowledge of Marxian fundamentals and Leninist teachings (which for the greater part have been either diluted or perverted in accordance with the need of the Stalinist bureaucracy) their political knowledge is confined to parroting each and every official ukase and pronouncement that is issued. It is safe to say that for years the bulk of the membership of the C.P. hardly thought of any arguments in favor of a Labor Party. Yet, after Browder's speech appeared in the Daily Worker everybody was for it, even if no one could advance more than a few feeble arguments for it. This stultification of the membership has taken place under the aegis of the Stalinist bureaucracy which needs a servile and docile following in order to bolster up the myth of infallibility and omniscience. The membership, fed for years on the perversions of Leninism, has long since lost the faculty for independent thought. All that is left is to agree.

A Bewildered Membership

The truth of the matter is that as far as the majority of the party is concerned the latest turn, following upon the new line on social-fascism and the trade unions, has them bewildered. While not disagreeing with it (and how can they?) they are confused by it. Neither the lectures by Browder or Halthaway upon the subject, nor the resolution of the Central Committee of the Communist Party issued two weeks after Browder's Washington speech, has cleared up matters. Some regard it as a new tactic to be used in winning the masses to Communism. Others see in it merely the same C.P. with the name changed to that of the Labor Party and that the backward American masses, who are not receptive to the ideology of Communism, will be fooled into it. Still others think it will be a coalition of all working class groups plus the trade unions dedicated to a policy of class struggle with the members of the C. P. playing the driving force within it. In all seriousness, from what can be gleaned from the resolution of the Central Committee, the idea of the change of name to sneak one over on the masses seems to be the one in favor.

The Basis of Reformism

In some vague and ambiguous manner the impression has been spread that by combining the political forces of the working class with the economic organizations a labor party can be forced which will combat the dictates of the capitalist class. This is a profound error.

Under certain circumstances and at a given period in the development of capitalism, labor parties could wrest concessions from the ruling class who, at that stage, were able to grant them. During the period of the upward curve of capitalist development, the capitalist class, due to its unlimited opportunities and the enormous profits it was extracting from industry and from imperialist exploitation could afford to grant reforms: a reformist party was the medium through which this was obtained. The Social Democratic Party of Germany and the Labor Party in England are examples of such organizations.

Today, American finance capital is in the stifling embrace of the same chronic crisis that paralyzes the rest of the capitalist world. Capitalism is in its decay stage; the curve it is describing is downward, not upward. In order to continue making profits with the open market closed and the colonial world divided among the various imperialist powers it is necessary to unleash a campaign of wage cuts against the working class. Capitalism in this period will not grant reforms unless forced to do so by a militant proletariat. No reformist party can organize the proletariat for that struggle. In its decline capitalism turns towards fascism. For the struggle against fascism the proletariat needs a revolutionary party and not a reformist one.

Only a party with a revolutionary program can fulfill the historic and necessary tasks of the American proletariat. No reformist party can lead the struggle to overthrow American capitalism. To spread such a doctrine is to prepare the workers not for victory but for defeat. Against the agitation for a Labor Party the revolutionary-minded elements will counterpose the revolutionary Workers Party of the United States.

lems Club, S.L.I.D. have swung away from the Stalinist orbit and turned toward the Fourth International.

CHICAGO MEETING

April 19, Friday, 8 P.M.—"Do we need a Labor Party?" Speaker: Albert Glotzer. At National Socialist Institute, 3322 Douglas Blvd. Auspices: W. P., West Side Branch.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

A. W., BRONX—
Question: Define the following: Imperialism, chauvinism, opportunism.

Answer: "IMPERIALISM is capitalism at that phase of its development in which the domination of monopolies and finance-capital has established itself; in which the export of capital has acquired very great importance; in which the division of the world among the big international trusts has begun; in which the partition of all the territories of the earth amongst the great capitalist powers has been completed." (Lenin, "Imperialism")

CHAUVINISM is extreme nationalism or patriotism, and is usually spoken of by Marxists in contradistinction, implied at least, to the internationalism of the working class and its political movement. The word, itself, had its origin in a certain individual, Nicholas Chauvin, and ardent admirer of Napoleon Bonaparte, who acquired notoriety through his exaggerated and demonstrative devotion to the emperor and the imperial cause.

OPPORTUNISM, in a general sense, is the attempt to make immediate partial gains, of one form or another, at the expense of the historical interests of the class. The theory of "the partnership of capital and labor" is opportunistic since it tries to reconcile the workers to capitalism in the hope of securing temporary concessions.

Question: What have Marx or Engels to say on the theory of "permanent revolution" as against the theory of "socialism in one country"?

Answer: Marx and Engels did not have occasion to counterpose their INTERNATIONALIST position against any nationalist conceptions in quite this manner, since the theory of "socialism in one country" did not acquire the force in the labor movement it now has, since its introduction by Stalin in 1924. The founders of the revolutionary proletarian movement, however, literally color their writings with the red of internationalism, whenever they speak of the "permanent revolution".

As an example, in the "Address of the Central Authority to the Communist League," made as early as April, 1850, speaking of the relations of the party of the proletariat to that of the democratic petty bourgeois, they had this to say:

"The democratic petty bourgeois, far from desiring to overturn the whole of society for the revolutionary proletariat, strives for a change in social conditions which will make the existing society as endurable and comfortable as possible for him. . . . But these demands can in no way satisfy the party of the proletariat. While the democratic petty bourgeois wants to bring the revolution to an end as quickly as possible, and with the settlement at most of the above claims, it is our interest and our task TO MAKE THE REVOLUTION PERMANENT, until the proletariat has conquered the state power, and the association of proletarians, NOT ONLY IN ONE COUNTRY BUT IN ALL THE DOMINANT COUNTRIES OF THE WORLD, has advanced so far that the competition with the proletariat in these countries has ceased, and at least the decisive productive forces are concentrated in the hands of the proletarians." (Emphasis ours.)

Allentown Gains In Sub Drive

Allentown last week had a score of 5%. This week the score stands at 38% and they are still going strong. This shows what can be done in the drive. Salt Lake City has forged ahead to 30 percent during the week. Cranford has entered the field with 2 subs, a worthy showing for the efforts of one individual.

Minneapolis has piled up a still larger score and promises further increased efforts in the next weeks. Davenport has made another increase in bundle orders.

The big three—New York, Chicago and Philadelphia are still far behind. Chicago has promised a better showing in the near future. We are waiting to see it. But there is no excuse for such poor showing on the part of industrial centers of this type. They should be leading the way, since the opportunities for easy distribution are present in such places. We ask the comrades and friends in these sections to get busy at once. Get the subs and send them in—we will do the rest.

A donation was received this week from Comrade S. in Bangor, Pa. We need many more such to keep things going. Send subs and donations NOW to the Business Manager:

The "Gods" Clash in Harlem

By SIMON WILLIAMSON

For some time, Father Divine, who is believed by many to be "God," has been meeting up with stiff competition in Harlem. In fact, a three-cornered battle has been going on between him, Mother Horn and the well known Elder Michaux. Just as to which of these gods will be victorious, we are unable to predict at this stage of the game.

Mother Horn and the Elder

Divine has the advantage of his two competitors in that it is believed by many that he is "God" and is the creator of both Horn and Michaux. He can remove them from the carnal world whenever he sees fit. However, Father Divine is said to be a generous, or should I say, a "God," man, and resorts to revenge as little as possible.

Mother Horn, the goddess of Black Harlem and Melody Queen of Radio City, once offended Divine. Her popularity affected the growth of his Kingdoms. He thereupon swore vengeance. Hell Fire and the like against her. Mother Horn was to be struck dead and made an example of; but the magic curse had no effect upon the Goddess. She still lives and her followers still shout and dance at West 135th St. Occasionally they make their appearance in Radio City. She seems to have as much power as Father Divine.

The Elder is Popular

The second competitor of Divine is Elder Michaux. Michaux got his start in Canada, but ended up in New York City. His sermons and religious theatrical performances have attracted quite a following in Black Harlem. He is somewhat handsome and very popular among the women. Father Divine, who is void of personality, cannot stand for this. But what can he do about it? The Elder has Jesus on his side and Divine dare not put him out of commission. And what makes it worse, Michaux is not in the Kingdom, and cannot be cast out.

Father Divine in a Jam

Why should Father Divine worry about his competitors? He is "God" and can remove any obstacle that gets in his way by the "mere waving of his hand." He, no doubt, looks upon the whole affair as a farce, because he finds time to descend from his luxurious Kingdoms among the beautiful daughters of men. He looks them over—and is alleged to have had an affair. The earthly husband came in and inspected the scene, and laid four inches of steel between Father's "godly" ribs. He was bewildered at the behavior of the "God" and did not strike his wife.

Father Divine loves his children, and to avoid a celestial scandal, and to have a little personal comedy, he wandered into the Hospital to stop the flow of his "holy blood."

Father is somewhat a better business man than Michaux. Besides being in the Kingdom business, he owns grocery stores and meat markets. No wonder none of his faithful servants have ever known hunger or cold.

Divine, moreover, believes in social equality. This is his only progressive idea. He often states that the Communist Party is going his way—but cannot reach its objective without his assistance. The Communist Party is cognizant of this fact, and James W. Ford seems to follow Divine's dictates.

Divine's Kingdoms are composed of Black and White male and female angels, but they never indulge in sex life, since in Heaven they have no use for marriage or divorce. In the Kingdoms men and women may sleep together, because Father has taken away their earthly desires. And, perhaps, if they did have an affair Father Divine would make them unconscious of the act.

"God" in Contempt of Court

A short time ago Father Divine took the wrong man's wife into his Kingdoms. The husband was not afraid of divine power. He saw the police and the affair ended up in the court of Judge Panken. Judge Panken must have felt somewhat chagrined to have the "Creator of Heaven and Earth" standing before him for trial. But the Judge is a skeptic Socialist, and he asked Father if he was "God." Divine was hesitant about answering at first, but Panken pushed the matter and said he would fine "God" for contempt of court if he remained mute. Thereupon Father consulted his earthly attorney, and finally told the Judge that he was not "God," but that the people liked to call him that, and he liked for them to do so.

of Tours (at this convention, held in 1920, the majority of the Socialist workers went over to Communism). He condemned the resolution of the Seine District, warning the party against Trotskyist "insurrectionism." He said he could hardly recognize his own party any longer, so changed had its political face become.

Stalinists Furious

The Stalinists are in a regular frenzy. No longer able to crush Trotskyists by bureaucratic terror, they now devote scarce heads and long articles to "The Trotskyists Who Mean Nothing." Maurice Thorez himself, the chief of the Stalinist Party, stirs out of his office to deliver speeches in which he warns the socialists that "the Trotskyists who mean nothing" wish to destroy the Socialist Party.

Recently a young militant, a follower of Pivert, who for a long time had remained merely a sympathizer, applied for admission to the Trotskyist group. His motive: "Since the last National Council," he said, "I have known that nothing can be done with all that." "All that" being the apparatus of the S. P., Paul Faure and Co. It is significant that he came to the Trotskyists not when he wished to reform the S. P., but when he had lost all hope in the party and wished to go along toward the building of a new revolutionary party.

PHILADELPHIA.—More than three fourths of what was once a strong National Student League branch at Temple University has come out in support of the Workers Party and the Fourth International. Two have become members of Spartacus Youth League and two others are members of the Workers Party. Half a dozen more are heartily in sympathy with the program of the Workers Party. They have co-operated to a great extent with the Workers Party movement in Philadelphia by helping to sell literature, attending forums, widening the influence of the Workers Party in the city.

New Militants and New Internationals have triumphantly supplanted Daily Workers and New Masses. In the last two weeks over twenty-five New Militants have been sold to the student body. The entire radical and progressive student organizations such as Modern Prob-

Left Wing Group Scores Gains In French Socialist Ranks

From the New Leader, organ of the American Socialist Party we copy the following tribute to the activities of the French Trotskyists:

"The Communists having declined to conclude a united front with the Trotskyists (!), the latter have joined the Socialist Party (of France: S.F.I.O.) where they function as a separate group and are conducting energetic propaganda. It is interesting to note that they publish a paper, Verite, with the following trade mark: 'Organ of the Bolshevik Leninists Within the Socialist Party.'"

"At a meeting of the Central Committee of the S.F.I.O. Pivert (leader of the 'Left wing') demanded, quite in the spirit of Trotskyism, the creation of an armed workers militia. 'And a break with the social-pacifist conceptions of legality,' i. e. abandonment of political action and embracing of armed insurrection."

"In putting forward this demand the Left elements referred to the defeat of the 'Reformists' in Germany."

Influence Rapidly Growing

From other sources we have received further information on the activities of the Trotskyists. Their influence in the S.P. has grown rapidly, until almost every militant, in the Seine district at least, is a propagandist for their ideas.

Their platform is advanced in every internal discussion in the party. Their press, La Verite, and their pamphlets have a wide circulation not only inside the party but outside as well (at public meetings, on the streets, at demonstrations). At a demonstration on Nov. 10, 800 copies of a special number of La Verite were sold in a few hours. In the principal sections of the Seine District of the S. P. Trotskyist occupy responsible posts and are at the head of practical work. They are the prime movers in propaganda and membership campaigns. They have taken a leading part in the creation and development of physical defense corps and military committees, the embryos of workers militia.

Trotskyist orators advance their slogans (program of action, militia, armament, general strike, etc.) at numerous public meetings. On occasions they even speak in the name of the Trotskyist faction. (At Drancy recently at a meeting of about one thousand militant workers called by Doriot, a Trotskyist presented the platform of the faction by invitation of the local S.P. section, at the same time another orator spoke for the official S.P.) An indication of the influence of the Trotskyists is the attendance at their forums. The last meeting of the Friends of La Verite was attended by over 400 militants while the Friends of Bataille Socialiste (Left Socialist Pivert group) drew only 80.

Resolution Adopted in Paris

In addition to direct mass work the Trotskyists have directed their energies toward influencing the left elements in the S. P. At the last Federal Council of the Seine in February a resolution containing the principle Trotskyist slogans was adopted by a majority. The left Socialists voted separately, a part voting with the Trotskyists.

The resolution contained the Trotskyist analysis of the present situation in France, called for the "United Front Toward Power", condemned "Parliamentary Cretinism", called for armament, militia, propaganda for the general strike, etc.

Marceau Pivert, one of the left Socialist leaders, defended the above resolution of the Seine District before the National Council of the party in an extremely hostile atmosphere (the N. C. was elected on the base of 1932 and does not reflect the real sentiment of the Party today), and raised goose flesh on the old hobby horse S. P. politicians when he spoke of militia, arms, and insurrection.

Since that time Pivert has moved further to the left, until he now advances the Trotskyist slogans openly in public meetings and in the S. P. paper Populaire.

Naturally these Trotskyist activities have raised a furore in the old guard of the S. P. Paul Faure, the National Secretary, expressed fear of a repetition of the Congress

Spotlight on Akron

WILL the rubber workers strike? American labor everywhere awaits that decision. Feverish preparations are reported from Akron—the elements of a small-scale civil war are present. The situation is loaded with dynamite not only for Akron—but for the entire country.

If the 30,000 rubber mill slaves break the chains then the first major strike battle of the year will shatter the illusory peace of 1935. Next to the textile strike it will be the biggest single struggle under the New Deal. The first strike in a basic industry, Akron will give the signal and point the way to the workers in automobile and possibly steel. Courage and audacity in rubber and the million-headed labor movement will follow the lead in a movement which will spread like wild-fire—against the NRA.

The Akron workers are long suffering, patient until they can no longer endure it. Labor boards, regional and national decisions and counter-decisions—if the workers anywhere know that NRA means National Run Around, they are in Akron. An ominous sign for the strike is the activity of Mrs. Francis Perkins. The rubber trust means to smash unionism in the worst way. Arbitration under these circumstances, under the same set-up that has so long held the workers at bay, can yield nothing but more promises and a crushing blow to labor.

It becomes increasingly clear as the days go by that the danger to the rubber workers comes from an enemy within the ranks of labor itself. That enemy is the bureaucracy at the head of the A. F. of L. and of the rubber union itself. Against it the workers must be vigilant to the last. The treacherous silence of Pres. William Green in the face of a situation that cries out for the maximum support, is characteristic. If allowed his way this Baptist gentleman would be content to leave the Akron strike still-born. In the automobile and the coal situations labor was left high and dry by the course pursued by Green and Co. Strike and the struggle that goes with strike is as foreign to them as it is to capitalist government officials. They fear it even more.

Either the strike comes now or the new union will take the sad consequences, as it did in the automobile industry. There is no other road. For months on end the rubber workers have been promised and stalled, stalled and promised. Their faith in the union was fast diminishing until the recent strike talk filled the air. It has now leaped to a new high. The A. F. of L. bureaucrats cannot again postpone this strike without undermining this confidence for a long time to come.

The responsibility of the militants and progressives in all the unions for the Akron situation is indeed tremendous. The fate of their organizations and the future of unionism in the basic industries will be gravely affected by the struggle and its outcome in rubber. Victory for the bosses in the struggle, or by means of an indefinite postponement of it, will herald a more ruthless attack on unionism than the workers have to date experienced. Victory for the workers and a new day will unfold for organized labor.

The pledge of support by the Cleveland Federation of Labor is a step in the right direction. Let its example be taken up everywhere and transferred from paper to life. And let the support go side by side with the insistence that the strike take place. This is half the battle.

The Danzig Elections

THE press is almost unanimous in its evaluation of the election results in Danzig as a defeat for the Nazis. Soberly and realistically speaking, it is, however, only a temporary check on Hitler's drive to integrate the German-speaking territories into his Third Reich. As several of the foreign correspondents remark, the decline of the Nazi vote in the presidential elections of 1932 was also deemed a defeat for the Brown Shirt forces in its time. Looked at from the point of view of political perspective, the present incident is no more indicative of a trend than was that of 1932.

The Nazis fell short of their goal, which was the immediate "Gleichschaltung" of the Hanseatic city. But the figures show that they gained an increase of over 30,000 votes above the amount they piled up the last time. Yet, the Socialist and Stalinist newspapers join with the others in rating this achievement as a failure! In so doing they show that they are entirely under the sway of the enemy's spirit.

From the Fuehrer's standpoint it was a failure, because he had concentrated all his forces, his best organizers, his best orators for a complete victory. The social democrats and the so-called communists merely echo the dissatisfaction of the conquerors when they hail this incomplete victory as a defeat. This attitude betrays the miserable slavishness and helpless prostitution of their position. They exult in the fact that the victors haven't gobled them up altogether.

And how did they fare in the elections? The reports say: the social democrats held their own and the communists lost. That is far more indicative for the international working class than the camouflage of a Nazi defeat with which these two miserable bankrupts try to cover up the fact.

Coming after the show of abject impotence they displayed in the Saar, the revolutionary workers can only be strengthened in their determination to rid themselves of these two parties of illusion and betrayal. Without falling prey to despair they will unfailingly draw the only conclusion left for fighters: To prepare for real struggle against Fascism and the war that is brewing, by building anew, by straining every force toward the speedy creation of the Fourth International.

Reversion to Type

“COMING events cast their shadow before.”

Those who lived through the pre-war days and today watch the witches' cauldron of war being stirred again well know how true this aphorism is.

With equal force these words apply to the social democracy. The betrayal of 1914 is being prepared again and the official apology, now, unlike the pre-1914 days, is ready long in advance of the outbreak of war.

The latest issue of the New Leader carries a scare-headline saying: "No Peace with Hitler." This caption is a direct quotation from an appeal issued by the Executive Committee of the German Social Democratic Party from Prague. It is addressed not to the working class but to the "world", presumably on the occasion of the initiation of the international diplomatic parleys.

"The road to peace," continues this manifesto which the New Leader says "may well prove historic", "lies over the destruction of the existing despotism. There is no other." Superficially considered this is indeed a very radical declaration, especially as it comes from those whose capitulation made this "despotism" possible.

What is significant here is the fact that this plea is addressed to the world, a euphemistic way of saying the international capitalist class. The appeal is "No peace" or in simple English: "War". The motive: "despotism".

Thus when the imperialists of the entire world have drawn swords, the social democracy urges them, with France at their head, to hasten the day of the conflict. It does not call on the working class to war on its own capitalism but in the spirit for which it is so noted, it exhorts one capitalism to make war on another.

As if the capitalist class of any other country is interested fundamentally in "despotism" or freedom! Profits, the maintenance and extension of profits, is their one criterion. Germany today threatens to upset the division of spoils demanding a greater share for itself. Capitalist interests that dominate the French and Italian nations are ready to embroil the world in a bloody conflagration so that this shall not happen.

Should such a war break out it is as certain as tomorrow that they (Mussolini too!) will speak of "Hitlerite tyranny", "despotism", etc. The very same shibboleths employed once before, only now Der Fuehrer substitutes for Der Kaiser. The social democracy were loyal funkies then. They are preparing for the same role again, in their cabinets but for the same rulers.

"But," says the German social democracy—and this "but" is the necessary face-saver—"it is false and unjust to hold the whole German people responsible for a criminal regime under which the best portion of the people suffer most."

A significant parallel may be drawn here between the social democrats and their war idol—Woodrow Wilson. Did he not proclaim in his war message to Congress that the U. S. had no grievance with the German people, but rather with the irresponsible despotism that ruled over them?

The declarations are the same, the results are the same and even the actors are the same. Philip Scheidemann, traducer of the German proletariat and butcher of the Spartacists is the true inspiration of this manifesto. On July 9, 1933 he declared in the New York Times: "It must be the task of the entire world to paralyze these adventurers [Hitler, Goering and Co.]. That this may not exclude a bloody civil war is self-evident."

Learn from the past! These people have changed their fatherlands temporarily. They remain, however, staunch as before, in their support of capitalism—in war as in peace.

To be against Hitlerism inside Germany and outside of it is to be for class war and against imperialist war in every land, as well as in Germany itself.

Lamentations, and appeals to world capitalists to launch a "democratic" crusade against Hitler is not merely a pitiful confession of bankruptcy. It also reveals that the social democracy is helping whip the working class into shape for service in imperialist war. Seventeen years have passed since the end of the last world war, but the Second International is still playing its despicable role!

15 Points of Father Coughlin

Analysis of Program of Detroit Priest Reveals Fascist

Trend in Fundamental Aims and Method

By DAN EASTMAN

The platform of Father Coughlin's League For Social Justice:

1. Liberty of conscience and education.
2. A living annual wage.
3. Nationalization of banking, currency, and natural resources.
4. Private ownership of all other property.
5. Control of private property for public good.
6. Government banking.
7. Congressional control of coinage.
8. Cost of production plus a fair profit for agriculture.
9. Labor unions under government protection.
10. Recall of non-productive bonds.
11. Abolition of tax free bonds.
12. Social taxation.
13. Simplification of government.
14. Conscription of wealth in war.
15. Human rights preferred to property rights.

Consummate Hypocrisy

Point No. 1.—Liberty of conscience and education: A Catholic who stands for liberty of conscience is a hypocrite. The Catholic Church is unalterably and everlastingly opposed to liberty of conscience, as the Spanish Inquisition, which tore, racked and tortured men for their beliefs, bears witness.

As for liberty of education: this is indeed consummate hypocrisy from a Catholic and a close friend of William Randolph Hearst. Since the Year One the Catholic Church has moved heaven and earth to maintain a monopoly on education, so that Catholicism might be indelibly stamped on the impressionable mind of youth. Liberty of education is hypocrisy from a Catholic, but when that Catholic contemplates with friendship and approval the attacks of William Randolph Hearst on every sort of lukewarm liberal teacher, that Catholic is simply insulting his audience when he pretends to support liberty of education.

The Wages of Slavery

Point No. 2.—A living annual wage: What is a living annual wage? Many workers "live" on four hundred dollars a year.

On February 5, 1934, Father Coughlin "called for a change in the provisions of the NRA which would fix minimum wages at 80c and maximum hours at 30, 40c an hour," he said, "is slavery!"

At this time his Shrine of the Little Flower was being constructed by scab labor.

He announced that "he would increase the wages of men working on the church Shrine of the Little Flower, by 10% effective the next day, thus setting the minimum wage at 55c an hour." The Shrine was about half finished when he made this move. The workers continued on the forty and forty eight hour week.

A few questions: If 40c is slavery, what is 55c? If 80c is a fair minimum, is 55c a living wage? Does Father Coughlin think that by employing scab labor he is helping workers to get a 30 hour week?

Point No. 3.—Nationalization of banking currency and natural resources: Nationalization of banking is remedied proposed by money cranks. Instead of having bank presidents part of the time and senators the rest of the time, these cranks expect to save capitalism by having the bank presidents senators all of the time. A strange remedy indeed. As for nationalization of natural resources: what are natural resources? In an interview Father Coughlin admitted that he did not include mines in natural resources. By natural resources, it seems Father Coughlin means those natural resources which are already in public hands: water works, generating stations, etc.

No Offense Intended

Point No. 4.—Private ownership of all other property:

Father Coughlin hastens to reassure the capitalists that he has no intention of appropriating their factories, mines or forests under the head of nationalization.

Point No. 5.—Control of private property for public good: Father Coughlin runs back to reassure the workers that the private property he has just granted to the capitalists will be controlled for public good. (By a new NRA perhaps?)

Point No. 6.—Government banking: This is just repetition of point No. 3, for what reason we don't know, unless Father Coughlin ran out of harmless planks and had to pad out his platform with repetitions.

Point No. 7.—Congressional control of coinage: Repetition of point No. 3 again. When Father Coughlin gets hold of an idea he uses it for all its worth: Congressional control of coinage is not in itself a reform. All depends on what congress does in the matter of coinage. At best currency reform is only a minor matter that could not have the slightest permanent effect on the basic economic fallacies of capitalism.

"Fair" Slavery?

Point No. 8.—Cost of production plus a fair profit for agriculture: We are tempted to ask, so what? We remark that everybody, including J. P. Morgan, is for "Living annual wages", and "Fair profits for agriculture", etc. when it is merely a matter of talk. How 's Father Coughlin going to obtain this "cost of production plus a fair profit"? And how big a profit is "fair"? Profits are, we thought, unpaid labor, or the time the worker toils gratis for the boss. How can any profit be "fair"? By intensifying the AAA, which has succeeded along these lines to a certain extent in the case of the rich capitalist farmers?

"Coordinated Unions"

Point No. 9.—Labor unions under government protection: Now we are getting to the core of the matter. Labor unions are under government protection in Germany, Austria, Italy, in every Fascist state. In fact the very life of Fascism is the government "protection" of trade unions, protection against higher wages, shorter hours and strikes, "protection" that cuts wages in half, doubles working hours and slaughters strikers. Father Coughlin was active during the period when a strike in the Detroit automobile industry appeared imminent. He was active in "protecting" the workers from independent unionism, and from a strike. Just what his protection has brought them the workers can best answer.

We quote the Detroit Times at this period: "Make the Department of Labor a real power," says Father Coughlin. "Let it take over the functions of collective bargaining, the functions which the A. F. of L. is now trying to fill. Let it supplant the A. F. of L. entirely." Father Coughlin wants government them nor abide by their results.

This fake maneuvering on the part of the companies has served as a boomerang against the bosses, because it angered the workers and drove them voluntarily into the federal union. Terrific speedup, differentials in wages and unbearable working conditions have added to the workers' desire for genuine organization.

Jim Roland, Chevrolet employee, who is famous for his "one-man picket line" on the Chevrolet plant last June whereby he compelled the company to reinstate him after he had been fired for joining the union, is the acting chairman of the Chevrolet shop section of the union. Among the union members who have taken an active part in organizing these key plants have been several Workers Party members.

Organization of the Toledo Chevrolet plant is of major importance for the entire motor industry, as this plant produces all the transmission parts for the Chevrolet Corp. Demands for a 6 hour day, 30-hour week, union recognition and wage increases are being drawn up to be presented to the Chevrolet company. It is very probable that the intensive union drive is the prelude to a strike which will break in the immediate future.

boards to supplant unionism entirely. That is what he calls protection.

Point No. 10.—Recall of non-productive bonds; another higgling financial reform. He speaks of "the heresy that profits or interest should be gained from non-productive borrowings, such as war and relief bonds." Just how the government would raise money for relief if it did not issue bonds and pay interest on them Father Coughlin does not mention. Perhaps from silver speculation, or inflation.

Point No. 11.—Abolition of tax free bonds: Whatever might be the value of this measure, let it be recorded that Father Coughlin has not hesitated to invest in tax free bonds, as we have already mentioned in connection with the account of his speculations in 1933.

Point No. 12.—Social taxation: What is social taxation? If Father Coughlin means income taxes he might say so. Of course he doesn't mean any such thing, in fact he doesn't mean anything at all. By social taxation he hopes capitalists will know he means sales taxes and workers will think he means income taxes. A gag to fool the scissor-bill, and nothing more.

A "Simple" Government

Point No. 13.—Simplification of government. The simplest form of government, we remark, is dictatorship. Fascism itself is not very complicated.

Point No. 14.—Conscription of wealth in war. If Father Coughlin wants to conscript wealth in war, why not in peace as well? If ten million are starving on relief there is no conscription of wealth; but if ten million are being slaughtered in war, then there is reason to conscript wealth. The idea of conscripting wealth is nonsense unless it is the workers who do the conscripting or "expropriating." Otherwise, if "conscription of wealth" is not merely a campaign slogan it is a plan to cheapen the cost of war for bankers and profiteers.

Point No. 15.—Human rights preferred to property rights. There is one economy, the socialist economy, which really does prefer human welfare to property rights but Father Coughlin is no socialist. On the contrary, he wants to continue to prefer the human rights of the scab labor employed on his Shrine by raising their wages from slavery (40c) to 50c (semi-slavery or human rights?).

It is not by chance that Father Coughlin's platform is a closer copy of a true fascist program, as it appears in Europe, than the program of any other American demagogue. Father Coughlin has had the assistance of the Catholic Church in the preparation of his program, and the Catholic Church is already an old hand at Fascism. It is persecuted in Germany it is true, but in Italy it gives tacit support to Mussolini, in Spain it gives open support to the reaction, in Portugal it practically owns the fascist government, etc. etc.

It remains to be seen whether Father Coughlin has not appeared too early on the scene with his mature fascist program. It remains to be seen whether the masses still developing to the left will not choose their course and their leaders, will not carry through the American revolution, and cast down Father Coughlin and all his kind. The choice is plain: a workers' society or concentration camps decorated with holy holy crosses.

LEFT . . . JABS

This Changing World

The average Stalinist must stand in awe as he views the vast changes in his own world. The "social fascist" of yesterday is the "class brother" of today. The A. F. of L. "company and fascist unions" become "militant workers' organizations". "Red revolutionary unions" are buried under Browder's slogan "seize the warehouses". The "united front from below" is as dead as the dodo. The labor party which yesterday was denounced as a delusion and a snare, is now the road to revolution, etc., etc. In Soviet diplomatic affairs it is even worse. Sir Austin Chamberlain, who yesterday was the very symbol of imperialist hatred of the Soviet Union, is now quoted approvingly by Soviet leaders. "God save the King" is played in Moscow in honor of Captain Eden, arch-conservative leader of the British Tory "fascist" government. These rapid changes are reported to have affected a Bronx Stalinist to such an extent that he was found in front of the Prospect Workers Club raising his glass to the health of His Britannic Majesty, Earl Browder and our own beloved leader, King George.

Diplomatic Drees

Reports of the Berlin visits of Sir John Simon and Captain Eden and the visits of the latter to Moscow and Warsaw are covered in great detail in newspapers everywhere. Apparently not in the words of the diplomats but in their dress are we to seek the real import of these visits. Thus, arriving in Berlin, Sir John and the Captain wore civilian clothing, but were met by a guard of Death! Head Hussars dressed in somber black. The "pacifist" character of the Bloomfield Empire and the warlike aims of Hitler are apparent. In Moscow Captain Eden arrived wearing a soft black hat and a cloth top coat, but immediately changed into a long fur coat and a Cossack Astrakhan headpiece. The love of British imperialism for the Soviet Union was evidenced by that swift change. In Warsaw Captain Eden was welcomed by a party of officials wearing top hats with the exception of Foreign Secretary, Col. Beck, who wore a black derby. The absence of a top hat on Beck's cranium showed that his welcome was personal and that the Polish government was not according an official warm welcome to Eden and his policies. This nonsense is solemnly written by highly paid capitalist writers in Europe and cabled across to America. Its purpose is to cover up the cold blooded war preparations of all these cynical hat changing statesmen.

Words and Action

The New York "Mayor's Committee on Unemployment Relief" issued a report of thousands of words. The report stated that the relief allowance for food, clothing and shelter was too low, so low in fact that the unemployed were forced to live in condemned fire-traps, dress in rags, while thousands of their children suffered from malnutrition. The Mayor went into action at once. He set up a stool pigeon bureau with a policeman at the head to receive anonymous and other complaints against relief "chiselers". A "chiseller" being anyone who tries to eke out a starvation relief allowance by any other means. "This bureau is my own child," said the mayor; and indeed it must be admitted that whether it is his own or just another adoption from the city bankers, it certainly resembles the rest of his family. It has that "friend of labor" smell to it.

Anti-Fascist Meetings

March 1934: Socialist Party and trades unions hold anti-fascist meeting in Madison Square Garden. Speakers list includes Mayor La Guardia, Matthew Woll and S. P. and trade union leaders. The Stalinists broke up this meeting in wild disorder, charging that Fascists and "Social Fascists" were speaking and Communists barred.

April, 1935: C. P. controlled League Against War and Fascism and Civil Liberties Union hold anti-fascist meeting in Madison Square Garden. Speakers list includes a Methodist bishop, Republican Congressman, Farmer-Labor representative, Gorman of the I.T.W. ("betrayor of the textile strike"), professors, social workers, and other liberals, but no C. P. speakers. Why didn't Hathaway lead the embattled hosts to capture the platform for the C. P. at this meeting? Or does the Stalinist "change in line" leave to Methodist Bishops and Republican Congressmen such "little matters" as the struggle against war and fascism?

Labor Backs Gas Workers

The company has been importing a herd of scabs and strike-breakers, who are quartered on company property. Last week a "bomb plot" was discovered at the plant, and the Laclede company lost no time in advertising it in all the capitalist papers. The plot looked suspiciously like the work of one of the drunken gun-toters who swarm around the works, and proved a complete failure so far as its general effects were concerned. As the Gas House Worker remarked: "Who saw the bomber? A company gunman. Who reported finding the bomb? A bomber hired by the gas company to uncover bombers. Was the guilty one caught? Of course not, that would spoil the plot."

One Scab—Fifteen Cops

The gunman-scabs have been receiving the protection of the police. Every service call is now answered not by one repair man, but by one scab repair man and fifteen police, another little item the company can charge up to its fight against unionism. Like all scabs, the St. Louis brand has behaved badly, brandishing pistols and guns, and menacing the safety of all in their vicinity.

of the giant General Motors Corp. As an evidence of the growing progressiveness in the union, the colored sweepers in the Chevrolet plant were brought into the Federal Auto Union along with the fellow-white workers.

Over 400 of the new union men appeared today in the plant this morning wearing their red union buttons for April. Hundreds of workers from the Willys-Overland plant are likewise joining the Federal Auto Union. With the addition of these two major corporations, the entire auto parts and production industry of Toledo, excepting the Champion Spark Plug Corp., will be unionized.

The rush to the genuine union has followed the calling of an election, by the Detroit Auto Labor Board, in the Chevrolet and Willys-Overland plants on April 9, for the supposed purpose of determining which group the workers wish to represent in collective bargaining. This election was engineered by officials of the two plants, which up until a few weeks ago were non-union, and the Auto Labor Board, in an effort to foist company unionism upon the workers. The union has publicly repudiated these elections, which it did not call for, and has flatly stated that its members will not participate in

Raw Deal Put Over In Akron

Green & Co. Surpass All Records For Treachery

By ART PREIS

AKRON, O., April 14.—The great strike involving 35,000 Akron rubber workers, which was to set the spark to the 1935 wave of strike struggles in America, is over before it began—the latest and most sinister betrayal of organized labor by William Green and his lieutenants.

A group of militant progressives, which has been growing in the last few weeks, led the opposition battle and, only after hours of desperate fighting, was defeated by the better organized official machine, which finally shoved through the agreement by a series of deceptive maneuvers and outright railroadings. This progressive tendency, which has been greatly strengthened and clarified by the events of the last 4 hours, will find a clear public expression in a mass meeting to be held by the Akron branch of the W. P. April 17, at which James P. Cannon will analyze the betrayal and outline the next steps in the fight to build an effective union.

The Game of Delays
The imposing of the treacherous agreement upon the rubber workers and the breaking of the strike by the A. F. of L. officialdom followed a carefully designed course. The strike, which has been looming for eighteen months past, was delayed month after month on the urging of the A. F. of L. officials, even after the rubber companies brazenly defined the rulings of the National Labor Relations Board that an election be held on the matter of representation for collective bargaining. When the government further demonstrated its unwillingness or inability to enforce its own ruling, these officials continued to point to the government as the agency from which union recognition might be secured instead of to the mass strength and militant action of the workers.

Last Minute Promises
Following an overwhelming vote by the unions last week in favor of strike, a last-hour course of delay was pursued by the A. F. of L. leaders in order to give the forces of the national government and local press a chance to get into full play. Every effort to set a definite strike date was deliberately brushed aside. While still urging the workers to prepare for action, the officials implanted in the minds of the inexperienced union members the belief that a strike might still be averted and that the demands for union recognition might be secured through the intervention of Francis Perkins and the pressure of the government.

As late as twelve hours before the signing of the actual agreement, Claherty and other organizers holdily proclaimed through the press that they would agree to nothing less than an election conducted by the Department of Labor off the companies' properties, in which the companies would unconditionally recognize the group securing the majority vote. It cannot be doubted that the terms of the final settlement were well known to Green, Claherty and Co. even while these misleading statements were being made to disarm the workers and leave them unprepared for the last crushing blow.

C. P. Plays Claherty's Game
A new angle was the role of the Communist Party in the Akron betrayal. During the last and most critical days leading up to the debacle, the C.P. in effect collaborated with the A. F. of L. officials, and in return for an indirect endorsement from the A. F. of L. leaders withheld all criticism of the obvious step-by-step course of treachery. The "non-aggression pact" with a vengeance!

Claherty, Bill Green's personal agent and chief figure in the betrayal, was several times played up in the Daily Worker during the past week in militant role. His statement that "he was not going to fight the communists, etc." was

The Betrayal in Rubber—And the Road Ahead

By JAMES P. CANNON

AKRON, April 15.—After 18 months of organizing work and preparation the rubber workers went to Washington to get union recognition, the 30-hour week and the abolition of the company unions. They came back with the recognition of the company unions, no mention of the 30-hour week and a pledge, signed by their representatives, to surrender the strike weapon while the courts dispose of their "case" and the rubber production season slides down to its low point.

It was a deliberate, cold-blooded betrayal—the auto, steel and textile run-around all over again, with fancy trimmings. Scientific treachery reached its "peak" in the experience of the rubber workers, but in the furious reaction of the rank and file to this perfidy—if it is harnessing to a searching analysis of its technique—there is the making of a powerful movement for genuine unionism which can set the pace for the entire country.

An open struggle on the picket lines—the only place where any of the new unions can really be consolidated and "recognized"—is out of the question at present; the strike has been knocked in the head as effectively as slugs at the stockyards, armed with sledgehammers, knock over a steer. The rubber unions are dizzy from the cruel blows which have been dealt to them in the past week-end, but they are not dead by a long shot. The roar of militant protest and denunciation, which rose from the floor at Sunday's membership meetings, is the sign of unconquerable vitality, the promise of recovery from the cruel defeat. This will take time. What is possible right now, and what is needed, is a searching inquiry into the causes of the defeat; a probe of the complicated system of maneuvers and tricks which left the rubber workers bewildered and helpless at the decisive moment. This is the task of the hour. The rest will follow.

As in the case of nearly all of the new mass unions which have sprung up in the past two years, the mass of the members at Akron, including even the best elements of the local leadership, entertained the greatest illusions about the policy and role of the government in the situation. They thought the government was on their side and depended on it to help them. This was a fatal miscalculation which ought to be clear enough now.

The policy of the government all along has been to stall and delay action, involve the workers in a labyrinth of hearings, appeals and negotiations, and paralyze the preparations for a decisive battle until the peak of the production season had passed. Then, at the decisive moment, Madame Perkins misused the confidence of the workers to shift the scene away from the picket line to Washington. There the stage was all set and the infamous pact was stamped through. The bosses got what they wanted—with the government seal on it. No wonder they are "jubilant." T. G. Graham, Goodrich vice-president, said: "The agreement puts everything back in the same status it was before the Washington conference." He was right, and so was F. O. Harold, Goodrich union delegate to the Central Labor Union, when he said: "The agreement doesn't give us a thing."

But the most important feature of this agreement that "doesn't give us a thing" is the fact that the government put it over, just as the government put over similar deals on the auto, steel and textile workers. This is the

Resentment Is Bitter Over Trickery of "Settlement"

Inside Story of the Battle in Rubber Unions

By JACK WILSON

The railroad of the sell-out agreement arranged by Francis Perkins, Secretary of Labor and the A. F. of L. bureaucracy on Akron's big three rubber workers' unions this week put to shame the lousy auto-code agreement or any other previous capitulation of William Green to President Roosevelt and his other agents of capitalism.

Twenty workers at the Goodyear local walked out, half-sick, half crying, Saturday, April 13, when they received a report that Green, Coleman Claherty (his rubber organizer) and the Goodyear, Goodrich and Firestone local presidents had signed an agreement in Washington which gave away the right to strike, didn't abolish the company unions and left all jurisdiction in labor disputes to a government board, not yet selected and having no power to enforce its decisions.

Nothing Is Too Low
While company union men jubilantly said, "Why it gives them nothing," and the rubber barons smiled, an aroused rank and file prepared to fight the treacherous betrayal in the Sunday meetings. But they didn't know to what depths the bureaucrats would stoop in an effort to smash the strike. They found out.

Claherty, red-faced and shifting uneasily from foot to foot, had scarcely finished reading the so-called agreement when a rank and file at Goodrich, shouted, "Where'd you get the guts to bring back that god-damned sell-out to us?" to the thunderous applause of other workers. More criticism was hurled as Claherty retreated and finally sat down apparently defeated. His henchmen then began their work. Smooth tongues argued, "we must support our leaders," and similar blather. It seemed to do little good. A vote was called. About one third of the Goodrich workers raised their hands in approval. The chairman said: "It evidently has passed." No negative vote was taken after the meeting was over Goodrich workers walked out cursing, looking lost and humiliated. Claherty had "won over" the strongest local union.

The Rout at Firestone
Firestone was next. Shouts of betrayal, sell-out, down with the A. F. of L., bitter threats, more curses and eloquent speeches by progressives but to no avail. "Goodrich won't walk out and you boys can't do it alone. Why not be sensible. This is just a foothold, we'll get more later." Three hours of this and the Firestone workers gave up in disgust.

Goodyear workers were better prepared to meet the onslaught. Four days ago the progressives realized what would be done. They began organizing for a fight. Reports of the Goodrich meeting came in and inflamed the workers. The meeting began at the same time as Firestone's. Regular business took an hour and then John House, president read the "agreement."

A progressive from the rear immediately made a motion to repudiate the "agreement" signed. House ruled it out of order and said the approach would have to be a positive motion. He won.

A "Bold" Faker
Then a barrage by progressives placed throughout the hall sent House scurrying to cover. "I'll bust any guy in the face that says I want this agreement or that I sold out. You boys decide this," he temporized.

"We've had 18 months of boards. This is full of loop holes, Claherty has betrayed us. This means proportional representation. We don't want to depend on the government or Francis Perkins!", progressives argued while the Goodyear workers cheered them on.

A recognized progressive leader got up. He took the agreement from House's hands. He could barely speak he was so indignant. He threw the agreement on the floor. "It's not worth a damn. This is what I think of it." Shouts of approval encouraged him... then the telephone rang. "Firestone boys are giving in, looks like they'll approve the agreement." The speaker almost bawled; other progressives became sick in the pits of their

Eight Are Sentenced On Coast

Two Refuse Mercy; Scorn Court in Speeches

SACRAMENTO, Cal.—The eight militant workers who were convicted on April 1 of criminal syndicalism were sentenced for indeterminate terms of one to fourteen years by Judge Dal Lemmon last Saturday, after he had denied a motion for a new trial.

The Judge refused to consider the affidavit of juror Howard McIntire, obtained by the N.P.L.D., in which he swore that the verdict was not the expression of the jury's actual opinion, but was the result of a compromise, a horse-trade. "As I view the affidavit," said the Judge, "it means absolutely nothing in this court. It is foreign matter, and the juror is precluded from questioning his own verdict." The opinion of the jury "foreign matter" in a courtroom!

Those sentenced were Pat Chambers, Caroline Decker, Norman Mini, Lorene Norman, Jack Crane, Albert Houghardy, Martin Wilson and Nora Conklin.

Refuse Probation
Lorene Norman and Norman Mini who both received a recommendation from the jury refused to ask for probation before the Judge.

"I feel," said Lorene Norman, "that an application for probation would be an admission of guilt, therefore I will make none in this or any other court."

Norman Mini, after summarily refusing to apply for probation was asked the usual question whether he could advance any reason why he should not be sentenced.

"Yes," he said, "Our standing here is no accident. Our conviction is the logic of the class struggle. But the same class struggle that results in our conviction will some day generate an irresistible wave that will sweep everything this court and this State represents away forever. With this knowledge we can face our sentences confidently, because we know that the future belongs to us."

Union Turnout to Be Biggest in Years

First May Day Finds Workers Party in Forefront of Important Labor Battles

By A. J. MUSTE

All reports about May Day preparations indicate that more American workers and more trade unions will participate in demonstrations this year than ever before. These workers are more militant, more free from illusions, more in the mood for new adventures than at any previous period. For the Workers Party of the U. S. observing its first May Day this is the most significant feature of this year's celebration. Its meaning must be clearly understood. It must be utilized to the fullest extent in all speeches and discussions on May Day, as well as in all our work in the ensuing months.

Workers Party To March With Unions in N.Y.

May Day United Fronts Concluded in Other Cities

The Workers Party and the Spartacus Youth League, their friends and supporters, will assemble in front of their headquarters, 2 West 15th Street, for the huge May First parade and demonstration. This section of the parade will be headed by eight large red flags and the banners of the Workers Party and the Spartacus Youth League.

Besides the general slogans of the united front, numerous other floats and slogans are being prepared. The Spartacus Youth League in uniform will march along with the Workers Party. Workers Party May Day buttons are already being sold. A special May Day manifesto is being issued by the National Committee.

Ten thousand copies of the special May Day issue of the New Militant will be sold and distributed along the line of march.

A band has been secured, which will live up to this section of the parade, and along with the other features will make the Workers Party-Spartacus Youth section one of the liveliest in the whole united demonstration. Friends and supporters of the party are asked to assemble at the headquarters early on May 1st.

Organizations Represented
The Workers Party is represented on the executive committee of the United May Day Labor Conference, made up of representatives of the leading trades unions, Socialist Party, I. W. W., Workmen's Circle, Communist Party (Opposition), etc., which meets regularly every Saturday at 1 P.M. in the Council Room of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union at 3 West 16th St. Plans for making this year's May Day parade and demonstration the largest ever held in New York, were pushed forward at the last meeting of this committee, held Saturday, April 13. Reports of committees on publicly manifestos, slogans, organization, etc., etc. were given.

The plan calls for two huge parades, one starting from 15th St. and taking in all unions, political parties, and fraternal organizations meeting in that territory. The other will form up in the dress market near 40th St., and will comprise the bulk of the workers in the dress trade. Both parades will end in a monster mass meeting at the Mall in Central Park.

N.R.C. Strikers to Participate
Plots by the score, dozens of bands, thousands of placards, and one hundred thousand marchers are expected to make this the largest and most colorful May Day parade in the history of New York. The International Ladies Garment Workers locals are providing bands, pennants, arm bands, and banners for their marchers. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers are out to surpass them. Unions in the food, building and other industries promise a splendid turnout. Five thousand striking National Biscuit workers and their families will form one of the most important sections of the march. One hundred thousand copies of a May Day man-

Half a century ago American workers, engaged in desperate and dramatic struggles for the eight-hour day, made the First of May a labor holiday. The idea was taken up a few years later by workers in other countries and presumably May Day became the International Labor Day. Of the associations which gather round May Day—anti-militarism, class solidarity, labor internationalism, revolutionary aims of the working class—we need not speak here.

Before the Crisis

May Day ceased, however, to be observed generally by the American workers. For a time, in certain of the larger cities, foreign-speaking groups demonstrated in considerable numbers; but even they became in large measure apathetic during the hectic boom period from 1924 on. In the main during this period American workers shunned May Day. They believed the propaganda of the boss press and of their own reactionary trade union leaders that May Day was for "foreigners," "ungrateful reds," etc. who did not appreciate the fact that the American working class was something unique and led a charmed life of perpetual prosperity under a special brand of capitalism, U.S.A. model.

The crisis has put a period to all that. It is clear that there is nothing unique about American capitalism, clear certainly that it leads no charmed life. As a part of world capitalism it is in decline, and in its decline brings untold suffering on the masses who in this land of boundless resources and an unsurpassed productive machinery have in five brief years seen their standard of living cut in half.

Rising magnificently at the first opportunity, the American workers have since the spring of 1933 made great advances in organization and fought a series of important battles. In the course of these struggles one illusion after another has been ruthlessly dispelled.

The New Deal has not brought back prosperity. The doubt as to whether capitalism can be reformed is eating deep into the minds of the workers.

Short Cut Proves a Trap
The NRA proved not to be a magic gate to union organization. The conviction that it is useless to look to the Roosevelt administration or to any capitalist government, to give genuine support to fighting unions gains ground.

Trade union leaders, committed to "cooperation" with the bosses and the bosses' government, sell out strikes, are seen to be "cooperating" indeed—to keep the boss on top and the workers under—and that lesson sticks in.

In the presence of such harsh realities rank loses its hold. The bunk of the militarists and super-patriots. The bunk of the red-baiters. The Hearst campaign has fallen flat among the workers. The A. F. of L. bureaucracy got nowhere with its latest attempt to oust radicals from the unions. In fact they themselves have to try now to put on a "radical" cover. They collaborate with Socialists, hoping that that will convince the workers that they are "as progressive as anybody." On occasion A. F. of L. demagogues collaborate, at least in effect, with Communists, as did Coleman Claherty in Akron recently when he was selling out the strike!

Radical Thought Gaining

The workers in ever increasing numbers are becoming interested in radical solutions for their problem. They will march this May Day proudly side by side with the Workers Party, with other parties policy and the role of the government in labor disputes. The failure to understand this is what caught the rubber workers off guard and made them easy victims of the run-around.

The rubber workers, including many of the best local leaders who are heart and soul for the union, saw the issue too simply: the workers versus the rubber companies. But experience showed that it was much more complicated. The government run-around was also a factor in the situation; at the critical moment, thanks to the mistaken faith of the rubber workers, it turned out to be the decisive factor. The rubber companies could never have put over such an agreement directly. So the government, through Madame Perkins, did the job for them. The fact that the workers didn't expect a dirty trick like this and were taken by surprise prevented them from mobilizing their forces to reject the sell-out agreement and go through with the strike. In the general demoralization the strike was broken before it started and the fight for union recognition lost for the time being. The government had a big hand in this result.

Lesson No. 1.—The new unions must rely on their own strength and expect nothing from the government but the run-around.

"It becomes increasingly clear as the days go by that the danger to the rubber workers comes from an enemy within the ranks of labor itself. That enemy is the bureaucracy at the head of the A. F. of L. and of the rubber union itself." These words appeared in an editorial in last week's issue of the New Militant. Similar warnings were sounded in previous articles in the New Militant and in the March issue of the New Internationalist. These were the only papers in the country to try to put the rubber workers on guard against the betrayal which finally overwhelmed them. Yet, it is perfectly clear now that Green, Claherty & Co. worked from the first, and with especial effectiveness at the last, in the complicated frame-up machine which ground out a humiliating defeat for the workers.

The rubber workers didn't see this, at least not with sufficient clarity, and this led to their undoing. These faithless leaders have demonstrated time and time again that their ideas and ways of life are alien to those of the struggling and exploited workers. They dread the thought of struggle. Above all they fear the growth and development of real mass organizations of the most exploited workers which would bring the fresh breeze of militancy and class struggle into the labor movement. Their field of action is the conference table and their deliberate strategy is to trade away the rights of the newly organized workers for political crumbs and concessions, legislative favors, appointments and even outright bribes for themselves. They never lift a finger to help a strike, but work like demons to prevent them or to sabotage and disrupt them.

No, the line-up in the struggle of capital and labor is not simply, as too many of the rubber workers thought, the unions versus the companies. It is far more complicated and deceptive. The government, exploiting the illusion of impartiality and even of "friendship" for the workers, in reality serves the bosses and demoralizes the trusting workers with flank attacks; the treacherous officials of the A. F. of L., masquerading as "labor leaders," stab them in the back. Madame Perkins put the government seal on the company union "agreement"; Green and Claherty put the union label on it. It took all these deceptive machinations to wreck the strike movement of the rubber workers for the time being. The struggle to regain the lost ground has to begin with an understanding of this shell game and the cappers and come-ons who participate in its operations.

A part of the technique of the labor traitors, employed with exceptional success in the rubber situation, consists in talking militantly at moments when the workers clamor for action and even in putting forward individual members of the machine to play the radical. As the rubber strike movement reached the boiling point they even declared a truce with the Communist Party. In return for this favor the Communist Party refrained from criticism of Green and Claherty at the moment when their treacherous machinations were obviously coming to a head and when a timely warning against them was most urgently needed. When the calculated blow was finally delivered the workers were taken unawares. In the general confusion, disappointment and demoralization the shameful "settlement" was railroaded through the local unions at Akron.

Lesson No. 2.—Expect nothing from the officialdom of the A. F. of L. and its appointed agents but the most cynical betrayals every time. Those who fail to point this out to the workers, and above all those who know it and keep quiet about it, play the part of accomplices in this treachery.

When it comes down to a test of strength the workers, thanks to their numbers and their strategic position in industry, are much stronger than the bosses and can easily defeat them on a local, national and world scale. The defeat of the rubber workers is not fundamental. They have not been vanquished in a test of strength; they have been tricked, betrayed, out-manuevered. And, above all, they have paid the price of their own lack of organization.

The bosses, plus the government, plus the labor traitors, could not have put over the sell-out agreement if the progressive forces in the local unions had been prepared and organized to meet it. The forces of the enemy worked like a well-oiled machine. The bosses, Madame Perkins, and the labor leaders all knew their parts and played them at the right moment—and then they all worked in unison to railroad the settlement through. The local progressives were not ready. They were not well organized. And before they had time to catch their breath the job was done.

Had the progressive and militant elements in the local unions thought the thing out more fundamentally; had they seen through the complicated game of the three-team combination—bosses, Perkins and Green—and put the rank and file on guard against the frame-up; had they organized their own forces to take the offensive and smash the betrayal the moment it was sprung—if they had done this while there was yet time there would be a different picture in Akron today. The traitors would have been swept aside by a human avalanche. The rubber unions would be enforcing "recognition" on the picket lines and the whole national movement of insurgent labor would be rallying around them. The Akron rubber strike would most likely be setting the pace for a great national strike wave of far greater proportions and potentialities than that of 1934.

Let the bosses and their hirelings worry about the possible consequences of such a struggle. The workers have nothing to lose. Every experience proves over again that there is no way to gain anything or to advance the cause of labor a single inch except by determined struggle. This struggle didn't begin in Akron this morning, although the conditions were ripe for it. In the last analysis only one thing was lacking: a serious organization of the progressive forces in the local unions.

Lesson No. 3.—The militant and progressive forces in the rubber unions must organize around a program of militant action to cleanse the unions of the influence of traitors and convert them into fighting instruments of the workers. That is the way, and the only way, to scrap the company union settlement and get a real union settlement.

The "Lesser Evil" Again

WHAT stands out in the ranks of the Socialist movement of the world today is the desire to draw the right lessons from the terrific defeats suffered by the labor movement in the past two years. The present leadership of the American Socialist Party came into power on the wave of working class dissatisfaction with the old-line reformist policies which brought the proletariat to such catastrophes. But whereas thousands of workers have showed an intense desire to find the revolutionary Marxian path, the new Thomas-Hoan leadership has allowed recent events to pass over its head without making any decisive impression. Their "radicalism" goes only so far as they find it necessary to keep the membership satisfied with what is a fundamentally reformist course.

This view is reinforced by one episode at the Buffalo meeting of the socialist N.E.C. which has not been given sufficient attention. From the Bulletin issued on the Buffalo meeting by the Revolutionary Policy Publishing Association (R.P.C.) we learn that:

"On a motion by Hapgood to picket the Spanish embassy in Washington, D.C., the N.E.C., working under the advice of Devere Allen (who is regarded by the N.E.C. as the authority on the Spanish question), voted down the proposal because such action might endanger the then present Lerroux government which, it was maintained, acted as a buffer to the coming of Fascism—the Gil Robles forces. Here, we have, aside from the question of the necessity of the demonstration or not, the theory of the lesser evil all over again, and the condemnation that was hurled against the old guard for a defense of such action in the case of Germany now becomes the accredited policy of the N.E.C. When the N.E.C. can undertake to espouse such ideas, it is high time for those comrades who really and sincerely want to make our party a revolutionary one to begin to re-evaluate the present National leadership. In regard to the Right wing, there have long ceased to exist any illusions about their social democratic policies. But in reference to the N.E.C. and their supporters, illusions still continue to exist and some of us have been proudly boasting about our newly found revolutionary principles."

What the Bulletin says about illusions of the "Militants" can easily be subscribed to. It need only be added that the illusions of the authors of the Bulletin concerning the "revolutionary" nature of the Communist party and its apologists in the Lovestone camp, are no less pernicious than the illusions which they themselves condemn.

"But this same class struggle that results in our conviction will someday generate an irresistible wave that will sweep every thing this court and this state represent away forever."

May First to Be Banner Day

and groups, with which they used to think it disgraceful and "un-American" to associate! Brushing away from their eyes the webs spun by the bosses' propaganda, they are making May Day their own again! Thus May Day emphasizes once more the correctness and the critical importance of the decisions of the founding convention of the Party on the mass organizations and mass work. We must get into the unions and the unemployed organizations. We must become intimately bound up with them and with their struggles. Never has there been such an opportunity to draw close to the masses, masses that are in motion, masses bent upon struggle. To neglect this opportunity is treason of the blackest sort.

The Wrong Way

For revolutionists to draw near to the masses does not mean, however, to come down to their level of political development, to cater to their prejudices, to take a place at the tail-end of the procession. The Communist Party having treated the workers like robots for years may now treat them like children to be humored and given a stick of candy. Neither attitude grows out of true respect for the worker, and the second will no more win the American worker in the end than did the first, which has had to be ignominiously abandoned. The C. P. having for years branded A. F. of L. bureaucrats as social-fascists may now embrace them as "comrades in arms." Neither attitude was based on a realistic analysis and neither is a service to the working class.

The confidence won by responsible revolutionists because they fight side by side with the masses in their struggles, because they labor harder than any others to build the unions and the unemployed leagues, that confidence so hardly won is precious. It must not be prostituted by giving any countenance to the Utopian notions of a Long, a Coughlin, an Upton Sinclair, or whoever it may be, with the idea that there is something "American" about this tactic, that having thus "gone along" with the workers, with big masses, we have a "movement," we are no longer "isolated from the masses," and presently we shall slip over a revolutionary program on this "movement." Having a yearning for being lost in a crowd is a very human failing. So is the desire to win a following quickly. But it is not a distinguishing mark of a revolutionist. Such "movements" as we have mentioned do not overthrow capitalism. If they do not turn Fascist, they end in a swamp or in a blind alley. Even a very superficial reading of American history makes that clear.

Against False Shibboleths

The responsible Marxian party will use the confidence that it wins from the masses to expose illusions, fallacies and falsehoods. On this May Day in the United States it will agitate against every form

The American workers have certain peculiar conditions to face and only at our peril do we ignore that fact. But the American worker is not now, any more than he was in the Coolidge-Hoover era, some peculiar species of animal. He is a worker under capitalism. His interest is one with that of the workers of all lands. This May Day 1935 gives us an unprecedented and priceless opportunity to tie in his struggles with the world-wide struggles of the working class, to teach the lesson of Revolutionary Internationalism. It is well that the Workers Party of the U. S. is in existence to seize that opportunity.

For a Workers' World

Marching side by side with our brothers, sisters, comrades, in the unions and the unemployed organizations, we raise the banner of the Workers Party and the Fourth International. We sound forth again the historic battle-cry of the international revolutionary movement. Workers of the world, unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains! You have a world to gain! Given such a program and such a spirit the workers can be confident that—

"The earth shall rise on new foundations;
We have been taught, we shall be all!"

ifesto will be issued. Buttons, posters, leaflets in large quantities are being prepared.

At the Mall in Central Park, speakers from all organizations participating will address the crowd. In addition it is proposed to bring veterans of labor's battles, ex-class war prisoners, and others, to take part in the demonstration. Goldman's band will play appropriate music for the gathering crowd and also at intervals during the mass meeting.

Following the demonstration a mass meeting of the Workers Party and Spartacus Youth League will be held at 8 P.M., May First, in Germania Hall, 16th St. and Third Avenue. A good program of music, singing, etc., is being arranged. Speakers from the Workers Party and S.Y.L. will address the meeting.

KANSAS CITY.—A united front has been formed around the May Day demonstration including, in addition to the Workers Party, the following groups: The Left Wing Socialists, the American Workers Union (unemployed organization), the Communist Party, the Continental Technocrats. No outdoor meeting has as yet been planned, as the reactionary city officials consistently refuse a permit for any sort of open air demonstration or parade.

An indoor mass meeting is planned with speakers on "The 30-Hour Week," "Social Insurance," and "Fascism."

Raw Deal Put Over in Akron

Day by day, as progressives looked to the one-time denouncers of the A. F. of L. as a "company union" and its bureaucratic officials as "fascists" to point out in uncompromising words the openly apparent moves toward the betrayal, the C. P., instead of uttering any warning or denunciation of the betrayers, imparted an air of radicalism to these leaders in return for the right to trail in their company and gain "respectability" in the eyes of the workers.

Browder Swallows His Tongue

Earl Browder, national secretary of the C. P., spoke Friday night to over nine hundred workers in Akron and deliberately refrained from even mentioning Green, Claherty and Co. In last Saturday's Daily Worker, at the very moment when the entire scheme to break the strike should have been clear to anyone with even a pretense of class-conscious judgment, Browder issued a statement on the Akron situation in which he warns the workers against the government but not against their own treacherous leaders with whom he was in alliance. These he addresses in the Daily Worker with "comradely words"! So capitulating to the bureaucrats was Browder, that Wilbur Tate, an official A. F. of L. organizer, who spoke from the same platform, was reported in the Akron daily press as being more militant than Browder!

Akron press reports on the morning following the signing of the agreement fully indicated the extent of the rubber bosses' victory. Officials of the Big Three plants and heads of the company unions were described as "jubilant." One rubber official declared, "We don't see what all the fuss was about. We have always given our employees precisely what the terms of this agreement call for."

Dragging Through the Courts

The terms of the agreement place company unions on an equal status with real unions, contains no guarantee of recognition to the genuine union, prevents the calling of a strike while the injunction cases against the companies are tried in the Appeals Courts and through the U. S. Supreme Court, which may drag on for endless months, and forbids the holding even of an election until the court decisions are handed down.

The unions must now prepare to fight an attempt to discharge and black-list the outstanding militants and progressive local leaders and to withstand a reign of intimidation and terror which may be launched against union men in the plants as the companies continue their counter-drives to smash the union.

Workers Party members in Akron will continue to assist in organizing the progressive unionists to fight the reactionary A. F. of L. officialdom, and help renew the courage of the union men to combat when he spoke on his own behalf to fight for their union and build it to greater strength by more correct and militant leadership and policies.

"WAR IS HUMAN"
"War is simply human, and Marx on this point, as on plenty of others, talked nonsense."—New York Daily News editorial. "Plenty of wars," says the News—"have been fought for the love of Christ" or "for pure cussedness." Some examples might have been given by the editorial, such as the Opium War on China, the Mexican War, the Spanish American War, the Japanese War in Manchuria, or again we might mention the human motives, far removed from capitalist greed, that brought each and every country into the World War. J. P. Morgan's "human" and "love of Christ" part in America's entry into that general slaughter as another touching example that proves how wrong Marx was. American marines out of "pure cussedness" I suppose, travelled around the world, and finally got a chance to die for the "love of Christ" and Rockefeller at Socony Hill, China, in 1928. The Duponts also show a human touch in providing playthings for those wishing to exercise their "pure cussedness" in slaughtering men, women and children.

WHO ARE THE SOCIAL FASCISTS?

"Does the Trade Union Unity League support proposals for a labor party? No, it rejects social fascist proposals for launching a labor party, which would be only another capitalist party."—Labor Unity, December 1933.

PRESERVATION OF CIVILIZATION

Twenty-one South and North American countries signed a treaty last week guaranteeing the protection of works of art in time of war. President Roosevelt hailed the treaty as "vital for the preservation of modern civilization." "This treaty possesses a spiritual significance," said the big-Navy President. When bayonets rip rip guts, shells shatter bodies to bits, and poison gas rained from the air destroy the men, women and children of these American countries, let us remember with affection the statesmen who took time off from preparation for mass slaughter to sign the Roerich Pact for the preservation of museums of art, etc.

AGAIN DIVINE AND FORD

An attack on the "spiritual racketeer," Father Divine, by Oakley Johnson in the Daily Worker has been "decisively rejected" by the Communist Party of Harlem, according to an answer in the Daily Worker, written by James W. Ford. Ford, according to Oglio, editor of The Freiheit, has a division of labor with Father Divine. One handles the "spiritual" needs, the other the political needs of Harlem's Negro population. In addition it now appears that they have also signed one of those defensive and non-aggression pacts, so popular with Stalinists. And by the way, has "self-determination" reached the point where we have a "Communist Party of Harlem?"

stomachs. But they didn't give up for a while.

However, after nearly two hours of denunciation, and when the progressives had exhausted their ammunition, a Claherty-ite took the floor. More promises, more "stick-by-the-leaders" and the government . . . slowly the game became clear. Workers began to walk out, their faces dead set, the pain of betrayal was clearly evident.

When opposition began to die down, Claherty appeared—very nicely-timed entrance, of course. He pleaded eloquently as workers turned their faces in disgust. He winced when someone shouted "Betray!" but only momentarily. "The two locals used reason and you can't go out alone," he carefully began. Soon the demoralization crept in. Even progressives looked discouraged, lost in a dark labyrinth. The vote of approval passed by a small majority.

The Specter of Black-Listing

Workers left quickly after the meeting, shamed, disappointed, tears gleamed dimly in some eyes. A few brave workers openly charged, "dictatorship from the top," although expulsion was imminent. Progressives went home as one goes to a funeral. The dark specter of company blacklists, the black shadows of betrayal, the laughs of company union men haunted them.

The A. F. of L. bureaucracy had negotiated an "agreement."

Tobin Lifts Charter of Drivers Union, 574

JOINS WITH CITIZENS ALLIANCE

But Thousands of Truckers Swear Fealty To Local Leaders in Reinstatement Fight

By F. X. FERRY

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., April 25.—Local 574 of the General Drivers, Helpers and Inside Workers, which during 1934 began to write a new militant labor history in Minneapolis, was again thrust into the forefront of the labor struggle. This time, however, the fight which is to be waged by "574" is against a united front extending from the "Citizens Alliance," a new reactionary bosses' "Committee of One-Hundred," D. J. Tobin, President of the Truck Drivers International Union, reactionary labor leaders in Minneapolis, to—the C. P.

The fight was brought into the open on Monday, April 14, when in an undated letter "574" was informed by Tobin that its charter had been revoked; the reason given for the revocation was "non-payment of per capita tax." Tobin's communication was read, on Monday evening, to a meeting of between 900 and 1,000 members of the union. The workers, who successfully battled the forces of police and specials: who drove 1,500 armed vigilantes from the Market Place during the strike in May, 1934; who fought on the picket line until their demands were met, and the Citizens Alliance was forced to its knees—these valiant workers now heard Tobin's statement outlawing them as union men. Some truckers heard the letter with a bitter curse against the reactionary leaders of the International, others (and they appeared to be in the majority) felt that the new attempt to disrupt their ranks will be repulsed and that the union will come out of the fight stronger than ever.

Fight for Reinstatement

Officials of "574" in speaking to the membership pointed out the need of fighting for reinstatement in the International, if necessary to appeal to the convention. One by one the workers who, tested in strikes of 1934, became the leaders of 574, showed that the interest of the workers in general and of those of Minneapolis in particular, will be best protected by retaining the charter, and continuing the fight against the bosses and against the reactionary gang of the International, as part of the A. F. of L. The workers were not easily convinced, but at last accepted the words of Vincent and Grant Dunne, of Wm. Brown, of F. Dobbs and others of the executive, that no effort be spared to gain the favorable vote of the delegates to the Central Labor Union and thus to prevent the expulsion of 574 from the local A. F. of L. central body.

There was no denial that the per capita tax is not paid up to the minute. But it was paid to the full financial ability of 574, which after the victorious strikes of last summer, was left with no money, but with the crushing burden of large debts, increased in the conduct of the strike. The fact, known to all members of the local, was pointed out to the meeting that two workers, Henry Ness and John Belor, were murdered by the strike-breaking crew of Police Chief Johannes and that about 50 pickets were shot. The local considered it as its duty to care for the families of the murdered workers and to pay for the hospitalization of the wounded ones. These emergency factors had been submitted to Tobin himself in a letter sent last October, asking for time to pay up the per capita tax, which request was never denied since the letter remained unanswered up to now.

Tobin's Real Reasons

Of course everyone knows that the charter of 574 was revoked, not because of the non-payment of a few hundred dollars (just a drop in the bucket for an International with a treasury of between three and four millions), but because local 574 is becoming too militant, and its leaders too dangerous to all the members of the latest "united front." During the strike, the employers more than once declared that "574" is O.K. but its leaders are "radicals" and "Bolsheviks." Tobin, in the magazine of the International (July 1934) pointed out that the "Communists and radicals who are bobbing up, here and there, in our newly organized local unions . . . were very prominent in the strike of Local No. 574" and called upon " . . . our people to beware of

March with the W.P. On May Day in N.Y.

All friends and sympathizers of the Workers Party in New York are urged to fall in with the W. P. contingent of the New York May Day parade. The party's section of the march will form in front of 2 West 15th Street—15th Street and Fifth Avenue—at 12 noon sharp.

Take your place with the revolutionary party of the workers in the march of New York's unions and labor organizations on May 1st.

Broad Unity For May Day In Allentown

Monster Parade to Voice Important Labor Demands

ALLENTOWN, Pa.—Sixty-nine organizations representing more than 6,000 workers have joined in a solid united front for the biggest May Day demonstration that Allentown has ever witnessed. Among the organizations participating are: the Workers Party, the Communist Party, the Socialist Party, the Lehigh County Unemployed League, the American Federation of Silk Workers, the United Ribbon Workers, and many other union groups.

A monster parade will be formed which will march past the principal factories and end at Center Square where a huge mass meeting will be held, culminating in the singing of the International. A request has been made for the dismissal of all schools for the day. Many workers plan to call a one day strike.

A May Day Manifesto has been drawn up to be distributed to every worker in Allentown. Among the demands are:

1. For the complete unionization of all workers. IN UNITY IS STRENGTH.
2. For the right of collective bargaining and the right to strike and picket effectively.
3. Against Mayor Lewis' proclamation limiting picketing.
4. For CASH RELIEF and a 50 percent increase in relief allowances.
5. For a 5c car fare and free transportation of the children of the unemployed.
6. For the abolition of toll on the 8th St. bridge.
7. Against all sales taxes and for a steeply graduated income tax.
8. Against the destructive policies of the Roosevelt administration which have as their main purpose the raising of prices.
9. For the repeal of the Flynn Sedition Act and all criminal syndicalism laws. For the freedom of speech and press.
10. For the unconditional release of all political prisoners: Tom Mooney, the Scottsboro Boys, the Sacramento prisoners, the Fargo workers, etc.
11. For equal right for Negroes and the foreign born.
12. For the 30 hour 30 dollar week; with union rates where they are higher.
13. For the Lundeen Unemployment Insurance Bill.
14. Against imperialist war and the division of relief funds for war preparations.

CARRY ON!

First of May Manifesto of the Workers Party of U.S.

Fifty years ago American workers struggling for the eight-hour day made the First of May a labor holiday. Later the workers of other lands made May Day the International Labor Day—a day to commemorate the struggles of the toilers and to do homage to the martyrs who had fallen in those struggles; a day of protest against nationalism, militarism and war; a day symbolizing the solidarity of labor the world over regardless of nationality, color, race; a day of defiance of labor's foes and oppressors; a day to march and to sing of brotherhood, of hope, of the ultimate victory, of a workers' world in which plenty, justice and truth shall reign!

The boss press and other capitalist agencies, and reactionary labor leaders as well, taught American workers for many years to shun the observance of May Day as something "foreign" and to regard themselves as set apart from the workers of other lands, leading a charmed life of perpetual prosperity under a "new capitalism." Today in 1935, after six years of economic crisis, which has inflicted unspeakable suffering on the masses in the United States and all other capitalist nations and which has clearly revealed that this capitalist system is everywhere in decline, greater numbers of American workers than ever before, thousands upon thousands of trade unionists who have never in the past participated in a May Day demonstration, are pouring into the streets. Brushing away from their eyes the webs spun by the bosses' propaganda, they are making May Day their own again. We of the Workers Party hail with joy this evidence that the feeling of solidarity with the workers of all the world, against the capitalists of all the world, is growing in the hearts of our fellow-workers.

In the year that has passed since May Day, 1934, the workers of the United States have fought on many a field—Toledo, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Kohler, San Francisco, Portland, the textile towns of North and South! In the face of opposition from the czars of American industry refusing to recognize the elementary right of workers to organize; of the deceit of the Roosevelt administration which had led the masses to believe that it would protect this right; of betrayal at times by their own union leaders; yes, faced by police, militia, machine guns, the workers have marched on!

We pause on this May Day to salute the heroic workers who were killed by ruthless capitalist violence in the strikes of this past year. These dead shall not have died in vain!

The thousands in other lands who have died this year at the hands of reactionary and Fascist butchers, we salute on this May Day. Their blood shall fertilize the soil out of which new forces shall arise to crush reaction and Fascism!

To the workers in capitalist jails and Fascist concentration camps, to Tom Mooney in San Quentin, to the latest capitalist frame-up in Sacramento, to the victims of race discrimination such as the Scottsboro boys, and to all class-war prisoners everywhere, we shout our greetings. Surely they will hear even in the innermost cells of the vilest jails the marching feet, the singing voices of the May Day demonstrators. Fellow-workers, comrades, we shall not cease to storm these prison walls that hold you now until we have battered them down and set you free!

But the hour of release and victory has not yet struck. For fresh struggles, for mightier struggles than ever before, must we gird ourselves on this May Day.

Serving the interests of the capitalists, the Roosevelt administration has launched through its Public Works program, a vicious assault upon the standard of living of the American masses. Wage rates are being completely undermined. As many as possible are to be struck from the relief rolls so that they may be forced to take work from private employers at any wage. Hundreds of thousands of young men are to be forced into the Civilian Conservation Camps to prevent them from organizing to demand a decent standard of living, to train them to break strikes and shoot workers, to prepare them for service in the next war. Employed and unemployed must united without delay for a nation-wide struggle for the six-hour day, the thirty-hour week, against wage cutting, against the share-the-misery program.

The sharpest struggle is being waged by the employing class against every attempt of the workers to organize. At the least hint of a strike, machine guns are mounted in American factories. The answer to this must be a nation-wide campaign of organization. Every worker into a union or unemployed organiza-

TOLEDO, Ohio, April 23.—The first militant thrust of the nation's auto workers against the ramparts of the giant General Motors Corporation began today with the walk-out of all of the 2,500 employees of the Chevrolet Motors Co. Workers Vote for AF of L Despite Extensive Fink System

OAKLAND, Cal., April 20.—Balloting under the supervision of the Wolman Board, two thousand workers in the Chevrolet and Fisher

Body plants here voted their emphatic opposition to the company unions. In the Fisher Body plant the company union received only eighteen percent of the total vote and at Chevrolet this minority was a still smaller thirteen percent.

At Chevrolet the A. F. of L. candidates received a majority of 462 out of 958 votes cast, over the unaffiliated and company union candidates. The vote indicates the determination of the workers to have bona-fide representation and further indicates a growing ability to see the necessity for a genuine union. This becomes clearer in light of the following facts; first, the existence locally, of the A. F. of L. union was unknown to most of the workers until two days before the election (and then they were reached only by handbills); second, the bulk of the workers have had no organizational experience; third, the bosses used all available methods of intimidation, aided by their notorious and extensive spy system. The stool pigeon organization is so extensive that most of the company union voters can safely be placed in that category.

If the correct tactics are used the union will have strength enough to demand recognition before the seasonal decline begins. A direct counter campaign by organizers, reaching every worker in the two plants must be embarked on immediately. The stool pigeon system and intimidation makes it impossible for the workers to join the union at open mass meetings. In many instances the mere presence of a worker at a meeting has resulted in threats of discharge or actual discharge.

Any tendency to rely on Federal Board arbitration, in the cases of discharged workers must be firmly opposed. The season will soon be drawing to a close. The workers want a union and correct strategy will build it. The time element will be one of the determining factors in the success or failure of the union, hence a correct organizational campaign must be started without delay.

On Monday evening, April 29, the workers of Brownsville will hold a united front rally in preparation for the city-wide May Day demonstration. The rally will start at 7:30 P.M. at Pennsylvania and Sutter Avenues and the demonstrators will march to Hopkinson and Pitkin Avenues. Speakers from all the affiliated organizations will address the workers.

Labor Board elections, the Chevrolet workers marched out of the plant in a body and formed mass picket lines which quickly succeeded in shutting the plant down cold.

Toledo's auto workers, who set the tone and tempo for the great strike wave of 1934 in the Auto-Lite strike of last May, may again have the distinction of touching off the strike bomb-shell which will have national repercussions. Top-notch company officials, including William S. Knudsen, executive vice-president of General Motors, and M. E. Coyle, president of Chevrolet, flooded into Toledo yesterday in a desperate effort to delay or divert strike action which threatens to spread throughout the automotive and other major industries.

Progressives in Leadership Leadership in the strike rests at present in the hands of young, militant and progressive elements, led by Jim Roland, chairman of the Chevrolet union group and head of the strike committee. Other militants who stood in the forefront of last year's historic battle are playing an outstanding role in the strike, leading and organizing the pickets, arranging publicity, instilling militancy and discipline into the ranks and developing effective lines of mass strike strategy.

The strike came swiftly, as predicted in the New Militant of April 13, following the presentation of the union's proposed contract to the Chevrolet management last week which was turned down on every major clause in a completely arbitrary fashion. Following rejection of the contract, a huge meeting of the Chevrolet workers was held and a strike vote taken. The vote was unanimous in favor of strike, although the actual moment for the calling of the strike was left up to the decision of the plant executive committee.

The militancy and solidarity of the Chevrolet workers so worried the employers that they voluntarily requested another conference with the union representatives early Monday morning in a last desperate effort to head off the strike. This is the first recorded instance of the untouchable General Motors deigning to stoop to confer with representatives of a genuine union.

Company "Conditions" Counter-proposals of the company for a 5 percent wage increase for workers in the lower wage brackets, diluted by a deceptively worded provision which would lower the wages in higher brackets 10 percent, were promptly rejected by the union committee. The company flatly refused to sign any contract, grant genuine union recognition or seniority rights without a merit clause, or to consider the union's demands for a minimum wage of 70 cents per hour.

Already the daily press is beginning to poison the air with misleading stories, misquoting strike leaders and confusing the issues. It is time that the papers are prepared to launch a "red scare" shortly in an effort to discredit the strike as revealed in headlines and news items today. The Toledo Chamber of Commerce has swung automatically into line behind the auto barons with large scare-head ads denouncing the strike. Full-page company ads appeared today which played up the "outstanding

August Upswing is Strategic Time for Silk Union Victory

Thorough Preparation is Vital—Organize Nationally, Raise $500,000 Strike Fund, Publish Strike Paper Now

By FELIX GIORDANO

At the last meeting of the Plain Goods Department of the American Federation of Silk Workers in Paterson, the membership was confronted with a burning issue: the approving of a national strike in the silk industry to enforce the union demands, should the manufacturers refuse to accept them. These demands as well as the proposed strike have been submitted for approval to all other locals of the A.F.S.W.

Needless to say, these demands will not be granted by the manufacturers of their own accord. The strike which today is as yet a threat, will have to be fought tomorrow.

Every silk worker must of necessity look to the impending strike. In the light of these circumstances a number of questions arise.

What are the possibilities for a really effective strike? What are our chances of victory? What must we do to best assure victory?

The correct answers to these questions bear vitally upon the outcome of the strike itself. We shall therefore analyze the situation and answer them one by one.

Need of Organization

From the national standpoint a really imposing and effective response to the strike call demands the expansion of unionization of the silk industry to every field. This applies particularly to Pennsylvania, where even the last general textile strike either did not penetrate at all in a good many towns, or lasted only for a day or two. In this territory there is no union as strong as in Paterson, for instance, and in several centers there is no union at all despite the most miserable and unheard-of conditions prevalent. No town in Pennsylvania is more than fifty percent organized, and, worse yet, the largest mills are the ones least unionized. Allentown, one of the key towns in the industry, has approximately 1,000 union men out of some 7,000 workers. Northampton, only seven miles away, with three big mills, has no union at all. In Hazleton only a few mills are controlled by the union, with almost no organization at all in the most important mill in the industry, the Duplan. The throwsters in and around Scranton are hardly unionized as yet. Such is the situation that prevails in the most important district of the industry, Pennsylvania, where we must not forget, over fifty percent of the industry is located. What happens in eastern Pennsylvania will to a large extent make or break the pending strike, both as regards its effectiveness and striking power. The first thing that must be done, therefore, is an intensive drive for union organization, preparing for and leading up to the strike. Only if this is done can the strike be really effective.

Perspectives

Unionization alone is no guarantee of victory. Militancy and correct tactics are of vital importance. And correct tactics can flow only from a correct appraisal of the immediate situation and of the perspectives ahead, otherwise no amount of militancy will avail. Above all it is essential to choose the proper time to initiate the struggle, that is to say, to strike when the bosses are weakest and the blows of the union are most effective. The best possible organized strike initiated during the slack season gives the bosses the best chances of playing their chief weapon—wearing out the workers through a drawn-out struggle. In silk, the most seasonal industry in textiles, it is of primary importance to strike at the very beginning of the busy season. That is why it would be only adventurism to initiate the struggle in the weeks immediately ahead, the period when the industry is at its lowest ebb. All indications point today to the latter part of August as the beginning of the next busy season, as the best time to enforce the union demands and to strike.

Only last Wednesday, our General Manager, A. Williams, speaking before a chairman's meeting, reported that in his trip through Pennsylvania he found most of the mills shut down, and the rest curtailing production and in the process of shutting down. And yet Williams approved of a stoppage following the presentation of the union demands to the bosses! Empty threats not only can have no effect upon the bosses, but may easily force the union into a position where it may have to resort to action under most unfavorable circumstances. For example, what action are we forced to resort to should the bosses openly flout the union by ignoring our demands? Can we back up our demands with a general strike in Paterson at the present time? Then, under no condition should the union put itself in a position where it might be forced to strike when the bosses wish.

What Must Be Done?

We must PREPARE now. This means in the first place that we must obtain the sanction of the parent organizations and secure their full support for the strike.

This means that in the meantime we must raise the necessary funds for the struggle, a war chest of at least $500,000. These funds can be raised through assessing the membership, sponsoring affairs for that purpose, setting up committees throughout the country to solicit funds from labor organizations and liberals. In this way we shall have the necessary funds for the fight.

An equally important preparatory step is the initiation of a series of preliminary regional conferences in the various territories, for the purpose of unifying the organizational steps for the strike. At these conferences committees should be elected to carry out the work relating to the strike preparations in collaboration with the union leadership. These regional conferences should culminate in a special National Convention of the A.F.S.W., devoted only to the question of the general strike.

Strike Organ Needed Now

An immediate and necessary instrument throughout the period of preparation and especially during the strike is a national union organ, which shall in every issue popularize the union demands and build up support for the strike. Such an organ must be established at once. The struggle of the employed silk workers must not be separated from the daily problem of the unemployed. All A.F.S.W. locals must take the initiative and directly aid in the organization of the unemployed. In this way the unemployed will be assisted in securing relief, a close bond will be established between them and the union, and the strike will be assured of their support.

Throughout the preparatory period as well as the strike itself, all elements must be drawn into active participation, in this way presenting a solid front. There can be no question of discrimination. At the same time, there must be no changes from the present policy of carrying on a guerrilla warfare of individual shop strikes to obtain and to maintain union conditions. Only if we realize these concrete proposals will we be able to lead our struggle to a successful conclusion. These steps must be realized. It is the duty of all the silk workers who recognize the urgency of this program to get together in each local as an organized body for the purpose of translating this program into action.

Once again the most important point on the agenda is the formation of a genuine left wing nationally in the silk union. Only the left wing, organized on the basis of this program can lead the general strike to victory.

Mpls Council For one Union In Railroads

By a Railroad Worker

MINNEAPOLIS, April 20. — On October 23, 1932, the Minneapolis Railroad Council was organized by eleven volunteer members from six of the 21 railroad unions. The Council is composed of volunteer and elected delegates from the various local unions in the City. The aim and purpose of the Railroad Council idea is to provide a medium at each terminal for getting the railroad workers together during their present divided condition.

The railroad workers of this country are today maintaining the most antiquated trade union structure in the world. In no other industry on this globe do we find the workers organized into 21 separate and autonomous unions. This useless and extremely expensive arrangement is driving thousands of workers out of the railroad unions and is keeping other thousands from joining. And although there has been a union on the railroads since 1864, the industry is now only about 50% organized.

This backward condition of the railroad unions naturally reflects the condition of its leadership. The unions are literally infested by swarms of overpaid officials who act as a dead weight or that many stuck brakes on the movement. This top heavy official bureaucracy has gradually entrenched itself in power behind all kinds of gaglaws, "obligations," secret work, and a strictly censored labor press. A bankrupt leadership must have this artificial protection for its own preservation. Otherwise it would be unable to maintain itself at the expense of, and against the interest and welfare of its membership.

The Minneapolis Railroad Council has been organized to meet this situation in the railroad unions. It has adopted a definite program of needed changes in our union structure, policy and leadership. We are building the Council movement around this program, which is in brief as follows:

Set up Railroad Councils at terminals to permit members of the present 21 R. U. unions to get together to discuss and take action on their problems.

We pose the question sharply for ONE union in the railroad industry instead of 21.

We propose that the leadership of the 21 crafts join in a movement to organize that 50 percent of the railroad workers who are now in the company unions or in no unions at all.

The Council program provides for joint strike action instead of voting one single craft. We want and propose one joint strike ballot for all railroad crafts when necessary to take a strike vote. We stand for lower salaries for the officials and lower dues for the members. Abolition of gaglaws, obligations and secret work, and for joint trade union action for the six-hour day without reduction in earnings. Watch these columns for further reports on the Railroad Council movement.

IN THE UNIONS

By KARL LORE

The workers at the Toledo plant of Chevrolet have walked out in the first major revolt in the industry since a general auto strike was knocked on the head by the Honorable F.D.R. over a year ago. It is hard to imagine a better place for the show-down to come. The auto workers showed their militancy last year. The working class of Toledo knows what it means to rally to the picket lines. The unemployed are organized in one of the best Unemployed Leagues in the United States. And the leadership of the local automobile workers which ousted the reactionary Ramsey some months ago is a militant one and has been putting the Toledo organization into fighting trim ever since.

Go to it boys. The workers of the nation are looking to you to raise the banner of unionism high over the feudal barony of General Motors. You have rescued it from the dirt in which a cowardly labor leadership dragged it.

BANKS

Do we throw our hats in the air when we hear that a large New York bank has recognized the Bookkeepers, Stenographers and Accountants Union and has signed an agreement with it providing for a classified minimum pay scale, closed union shop, overtime and vacations? We do not.

Not at any rate, when that pioneer bank is the Amalgamated Bank, owned by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. Its employees should, of course, be organized on this basis too long and too exclusively. It has become a sort of genteel racket, a union which organizes almost exclusively among the office workers who are themselves employees of unions. When we hear that the B.S. & A.U. has taken steps to organize the Chase National or the National City Bank we promise to get excited and to get excited plenty.

All of which does not mean that the union is in the best possible position to do a real organizing job. Ever since its formation many years ago it has functioned as a local (Federal Labor) Union of the A. F. of L. There has been no national organization of office workers to undertake a real drive among the white collar men and women. At the last convention of the A. F. of L. in San Francisco the delegate of the B. S. & A. U. introduced a resolution requesting the Federation to grant the office workers of the nation a regular international charter. The question was referred to the Executive Council.

Certainly the time is ripe for such a step. Office workers have been organized into Federal Unions in a good many places. There is an awakening recognition among them of the need of solidarity with organized labor. The unions can use them far better than the legions of fascism. . . .

NATIONAL GUARD

A. C. Jindra, member of Mt. Morris (Ill.) local of the Typographical Union was an anti-militarist. Kable Bros Co., printers, are deeply interested in the national guard band and their employees are threatened with discharge if they do not enlist and play in the band Jindra, although a good musician, did not join. He was fired in July 1928 but the union had him reinstated two days later.

In 1923 he was again fired on a trumped up charge, was ordered reinstated by the local but denied employment. He is still out of work. Now he is suing for reinstatement and $10,000 back wages because he charges: "... a conspiracy wrongfully to bring about the discharge of the plaintiff because of his continued refusal to participate in or become a member of Kable Brothers 129 Infantry Band."

YELLOW DOG UNIONS

Warm weather seems to be bad for company unionism. Right after the news that the company outfit at the East Pittsburgh plant of Westinghouse has boomeranged, comes word that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Clerks Association has been forced to give up the ghost to the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks. At Pittsburgh the company union modestly asked for a 33 1/3% wage increase all around, with double time for Sundays and holidays and equal pay for equal work for women. The biggest piece of company gall in a long time comes from Kankakee, Illinois, where employees of the Bear Brand Company are being forced to shell out their hard earned cash to pay for gasoline and extra wages to a gang of spotters and thugs who have been hired to "protect" the workers from union organizers. . . .

BRIEFS

There is collusion among manufacturers to defeat collective bargaining according to the Hartford, Conn. Central Labor Union, and a general strike may be the answer.

The International Ladies Garment Workers Union has asked Baseball Commissioner Landis to take action against Leo Durocher, shortstop of the St. Louis Cardinals. His wife is scabbing at the Forest City Mfg. Co. and Durocher himself is doing his damndest to get union members to go back to work. Organized labor goes to baseball games, the union reminds the sport czar. . . . The International Union of Mill, Mine and Smelter Workers is getting ready to put the axe to the union bating Phelps-Dodge Corp. at Bisbee, Arizona. Peaceful preparations for the last eighteen months have convinced the miners that real action is necessary. . . .

Capitol News Letter

By JACK ELDER

WASHINGTON, D. C.—To the despair of the Brain Trust "economic planners," the cotton textile mess grows worse from day to day. Caught between the crossfires of the NRA production curtailment code and of the AAA plowing-under agreements, the industry is much sicker than it was when the New Deal first set forth to relieve it from the surfeit of "competition" and "overproduction." The whole story of cotton textiles under the New Deal is a perfect object lesson in the futility of planning experiments in an economic order based on profit-seeking.

True, the AAA program has succeeded in raising raw cotton prices, which was its primary objective. But this success has been achieved at the expense of physical volume with the following consequences among others: Untold thousands of share-croppers, driven from the soil by the direct impact of reduced plantings, have been utterly expropriated. Because landlords have no further use for their services, these share-croppers are deprived of their one and only resource: labor power. The New Deal has nothing better to offer them than the Bankhead bill, which aims at banding them to the soil, in peasant communities, on a subsistence basis.

Plantation owners, for the time being, enjoy larger incomes. Section 77 of the law notwithstanding, the plantation owners have not seen fit to share more than a microscopic portion of the benefit payments with their tenants. But the plantation owners themselves face a dark and uncertain future. The share of world trade in cotton which the United States has relinquished, has been taken up by other countries: Brazil, India, China, Russia. Such as it was, the prosperity of the cotton belt was historically based on the export trade. This export trade the curtailment program has taken heroic steps to slaughter.

Higher prices for raw cotton have raised the cost of living for workers and farmers in general. It is not the manufacturers, in the last analysis, who pay the processing taxes. These taxes are passed on with abatement to the final consumers. There results a redistribution of income for the benefit of plantation owners and at the expense of the working class.

Equally fatal to the public welfare have been the consequences of the NRA. Minimum wage rates have gone up under the cotton textile code—in theory, on paper. But weekly earnings have declined. Real wages have gone down. Speed-up and stretch-out have been pushed to the last extreme. Job opportunities have vanished, thanks to the periodic renewal of machine-hour restrictions. The usual flood of discriminatory discharges and layoffs has followed in the wake of Section 7a.

Cotton textile employers, during the early days of the code at least, made money hand over fist. They were able to do so because prices soared abruptly, while labor costs remained virtually stagnant. In their pursuit of profits, however, the cotton textile employers cut their own throats. Under the stimulus of soaring prices, inventories piled up. Instead of clearing out the inventories by allowing prices to drop, the cotton textile industry cut down production. Consumer resistance to high prices did not abate: inventories piled up some more. More curtailment—to maintain high price levels—ensued. Continued consumer resistance. Continued failure to clear out inventories. Still more curtailment. And so on ad nauseam.

The latest development is vigorous lobbying by the cotton textile manufacturers to get rid of the processing tax. They threaten to call a strike of capital, to close down their mills, unless the government dips into the Work Relief funds to pay the plantation owners their benefits. No matter which way the controversy turns out, the worker loses. If the present system continues, workers are taxed directly for the benefit of Cotton Belt landlords. If the textile manufacturers prevail, relief money will be diverted from the support of the same landlords.

While share-croppers are kicked off the land; while textile mill operatives go jobless; while America's share of the world cotton trade dwindles; while spindles and looms shut down; while high clothing prices impose a heavy burden on the wage earner's purse, the New Deal plunges ahead blindly as before. Wallace bleats forth a defense of the AAA; Richberg proclaims his faith in the NRA. The troubles of the cotton textile industry are shunted off to an investigating committee whose recommendations, nine chances out of ten, will be utterly ignored.

In Every City and in Every Nation

History of May Day

Strikes, Demonstrations, Revolution

May Day, as a day of revolution—any labor demonstration, was born in America during the struggle for the eight-hour day.

On October 7, 1884, the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor, meeting in Chicago, drew up an audacious resolution:

Resolved, that eight hours shall constitute a legal day's labor from May 1st, 1886. . . . We recommend to all labor organizations that they so direct their laws as to conform with this decision by the time named.

Chicago Center of Struggle

The center of the eight-hour day movement was Chicago. From that city radiated the eight hour leagues, formed for the sole purpose of pushing the eight hour day. It was natural that Chicago should see the largest and most militant demonstrations as the appointed May 1st approached. On the Sunday before May Day 1886, 20,000 workers were mobilized, merely for a practice demonstration, a sort of preliminary rally. On May Day itself over 80,000 workers threw down their tools and came out on the streets.

In 1889 the first congress of the Second International adopted May Day, and instructed all its sections, "in all cities and all countries on the appointed day to demand of the state authorities the legal recognition of the working day to eight hours."

May Day Comes to France

France, the home of revolution, first took up the banner. In 1889 there were monster strikes throughout the industrial section of the north. The government, fearful of the workers, called out the army, and only succeeded in suppressing the workers after eight days. Again in 1892 the French workers poured out of the factories and mines. Again the government called out the army. Fourteen workers were killed and many wounded.

In Italy

In 1898 in Italy the whole working class came out to protest the rise in the cost of bread. There were continuous battles with the army from April 27 until the 8th of May. In Florence, Leghorn, Pisa and Pavia eighty were killed in fighting the troops. At Milan on May 7 where the barricades were erected in the streets, over 100 were killed. In Naples a state of siege was proclaimed. The workers won their demand, the price of bread was reduced, on May 8.

In Russia

In Russia during the years 1902, 03, 04, 05, the years of rising revolution, May Day was the occasion for fierce battles, omens of the revolution of 1917. In 1902 great unrest in Russia, martial law declared in Pottava, revolutionary outbreaks in Saratoff. In 1903 34 were killed and 400 wounded in demonstrations at Slatoust, encounters with troops in factory demonstrations in Nizhni Novgorod. In 1904 the arsenal at Kronstadt was burned in protest against war. In 1905 the revolution was in full bloom. In Warsaw alone there were seventy-five thousand workers on strike, of whom 72 were slain in battles with the police and army.

May Day During the War

The Great War intervened. The Second International betrayed its trust to the working class. During the war the official parties counseled the workers to pass over May Day, to observe it in peace.

But May Day cannot be downed. In every country a few true revolutionists worked to celebrate May Day as it should be celebrated.

In Germany

In Germany Karl Liebknecht, almost alone against the Prussian government, against opposition of his own party, organized the masses in Berlin, the workers protested the senseless war; the going on the German revolutions of 1918 and 1920 were born in the war time May Day celebrations.

May Day in 1917

And in Russia in 1917, May Day came of age. May Day 1917 was a milestone on the road from February to November, on the road from capitalism to the workers' state. The workers demonstrated at the American embassy, they threatened to tear it down piece by piece if Tom Mooney were executed. And the demonstration carried out. President Wilson's Mooney's sentence.

After the War

In 1918 and 1919 May Day was celebrated in every country of the world by innumerable masses of workers. The post-war revolutionary upsurge was in full swing—the streets of Berlin, Paris, Rome, Moscow, Vienna, were overflowing with workers, parading, armed with hope.

Back to the U. S.

Even in America, which for years disregarded the Day, woke up. In many cities there were parades and demonstrations. In Cleveland 20,000 turned out. One was killed and several hurt in clashes with the police.

But the promise of the May Days of 1918, 1920 was not fulfilled. The revolution entrenched itself in Russia, but failed in Germany, in Austria, in Italy. The workers suffered a defeat. The lean years came upon them. Fascism triumphed in Italy. In Germany, in Spain, in America the prosperity lulled the workers with false promises.

On May Day 1935 the American workers are celebrating in larger numbers than ever before, even though during the driving days of 1886. The eyes of the workers throughout the world are turned with hope toward America. We have been backward in celebrating our own anniversary; we shall make up for that backwardness in the mass and spirit of the celebration. This year and the years to come will see May Days that will make the greatest pale, until finally will come that day when the prophecy of Spies, Haymarket martyr, shall be fulfilled: "Our silence shall speak louder than the voices you strangle today."

A Sacramento Juror Weeps

CP's "Vigilante" Is Only Human After All

(Herbert Solow, newspaper correspondent and editor, is one of the founders of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, and was its special representative in California during the Sacramento trial.—Ed.)

By HERBERT SOLOW

Eight young men and women have been sentenced to San Quentin for one to fourteen years . . . because they dared to organize fellow-workers in the rich agricultural valleys of California and to strike for higher wages and better working conditions. The jury required 66 hours to reach a verdict. Little more than 66 hours later, Juror Howard S. McIntire deplored before a notary that the verdict in the criminal syndicalism case was not based on law or evidence but was the outcome of a horse-trade in the jury room.

Attorney Albert Goldman, Chicago Socialist retained by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense on behalf of Norman Mini, a member of the Workers Party, moved for a new trial for all defendants on the basis of McIntire's affidavit. Judge Lemon denied the motion as well as the new trial motion of Grover Johnson and Leon Gallagher, attorneys for the International Labor Defense. The judge said that the verdict is legal even though a compromise. It seems that about the only illegal way to reach a verdict of guilty in a labor case is to shoot crap for it. Whatever the higher courts may have to say about this, the story of the McIntire affidavit is interesting and illuminating.

McIntire Talks

Half an hour after the verdict was recorded the writer, accompanied by Goldman, walked past a Sacramento hotel. From a lobby

Machine Guns In Ohio Strike

COLUMBUS, Ohio.—The county authorities have evolved a novel method of "preserving peace." When strikers of the Columbus packing Co. who are out four hundred strong, displayed some home-spun militancy in treating scabs, the authorities retaliated by ordering 10,000 rounds of machine gun ammunition. Sheriff Anderson announced that he was arming his deputies so that peace might be preserved, with machine guns!

Neither Sheriff Anderson nor the chief of police are any too popular with the strikers. When the police chief, Kundt, came around to investigate he was greeted with boos and cat calls from the pickets.

Of four hundred and fifty men in the plant four hundred are out. The company has succeeded in hiring a few scabs, but has been unable to make any deliveries. The strike is for a closed shop.

Battles in Chicago and in Milwaukee

The First May Day

Let us Remember the Martyrs of 1886

The first of May, the workers' international holiday, is still regarded by many workers in the United States as something foreign, imported to these United States by a "lot of foreign radicals." This is not so at all. The ideas of May Day are as native to the American workers as the Boston Tea Party.

May Day is a militant working class product that the workers of the United States have exported to other countries where together with their class brothers all over the world they have taken up and pronounced it their international day of solidarity.

The response of the workers to the first May Day in history was truly magnificent. All sections of the labor movement responded. Parades and torchlight processions were held in dozens of cities. In many sections of the country the workers won the eight hour day—a tremendous victory considering the fact that a 10 or 12 hour day was normal and in many instances the biblical sun-up to sun-down rule prevailed.

We Remember the Dead

On the first day of May of each year the workers also commemorate the death of those who struggled and died for a better and more decent life here on earth. Particularly do we keep in memory those martyrs of our class who were murdered as an outcome of the events which took place in the old Haymarket in Chicago on May 4, 1886. Elsewhere in this issue of the New Militant you will read about their struggle.

Here let us devote a bit of space to the martyrs of Milwaukee, too little remembered even by working class organizations. These Milwaukee workmen, seven of them, were shot down in cold blood by the militia for backing up their May Day demonstration by a strike declared a few days after. Thousands of Milwaukee workmen, rollers the vast majority of them, were out on the streets shouting their demands for a shorter working day when the militia opened up on them. The New York Tribune of May 6, 1886, in its report stated the following: "There was every evidence on surrounding objects to show that the militia had fired low and 'with intent to kill as one of them expressed it.'"

But their death was not in vain. The eight-hour day for which they died and died finally became a reality—or at least as much of a reality as possible under capitalism. Not all the episodes of the initial first of May turned out in tragedy. It was by and large a day of inspiration. Such a day as has year after year given greater enthusiasm to workers all over the world. Following is a brief review of the turnout in various cities of the country culled from the May 2, 1886, issue of the New York Tribune.

Chicago: There is no exaggeration in the statement that scarcely an industry in the city has escaped being enormously affected. More than two-thirds of all manufacturing establishments closed. Thousands carried in parades.

St. Louis:—All plumbers out on strike. 7,000 turn out (for May Day). Jay Gould haughtily in enemy.

Philadelphia:—Street car companies threaten use of colored workers as scabs if men go out. Men go out.

Cincinnati:—About 1,000 workers today to demonstrate for the 8 hour day.

Concord, N. H.:—Woolen mills close. Men out on strike. Special policemen hired.

St. Paul and Minneapolis:—All plumbers in twin cities quit work. Demand shorter workday and increase in pay.

Louisville:—6,000 working men paraded the streets here on May 1.

Pittsburg:—3,000 coal miners threaten strike unless company grants ten percent increase in pay.

Milwaukee:—Over 3,000 men out on strike this first of May.

Baltimore:—2,000 carpenters strike for eight hour day with increase in pay.

Akron:—The new eight-hour law which went into effect has caused great excitement. Business men depressed. Workers are demanding ever greater and greater increases in pay. . . . Where will it all lead to? The Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

1st May Day in Union Sq.

New York:—20,000 in Union Square. Working men march into square with torches blazing. Striking sugar house workers from Brooklyn receive tremendous ovation as they enter the Square.

Workingmen's leaders address throng in German, Bohemian and English. Said Jim Swinton addressing the workers in Union Square:

"From St. Louis to New York, from the Missouri Pacific to the Third Avenue Railway, from Sioux to Hart the labor organizations of America are united, and exchange with each other their material as well as moral support. It is not reform in the twentieth century you want nor stretching of your arms up to the sun—but in tangible and just settlement and that you shall have very soon. There was the red terror in '73, we are having the black terror now—hundreds of men arrested at the beck of rotten representatives of the judiciary and thrown into prisons. 'Terrible is the right' said Mirabeau to Louis XVI. Terrible is the right say we to those who are now striking to crush freedom of action and free speech. We will no longer be disregarded by scoundrels in uniform and mercenaries in ermine. . . . Tonight the cause of labor may look dark—but tomorrow it will be bright and triumphant."

Historically the above is one of the first May Day speeches made in America or anywhere in the world. Swinton's speech in 1886 can be repeated today, May Day, 1935, 50 years later, with much greater hope of its fulfillment.

The Negro Workers' Role in Past May Day Struggles

By SIMON WILLIAMSON

All class-conscious workers, black and white, will parade on May 1 in commemoration of the heroic martyrs of labor, who in 1886 were framed by the capitalist class because of their activities in the struggle for the eight-hour day.

According to the records of John W. Haynes, then general secretary of the Knights of Labor, there were over 60,000 Negroes who were members of his organization and were actively engaged in the struggle for this eight-hour day. Their militancy and solidarity in all the conflicts of their fellow workers during the short-lived period of the Knights, is one of the outstanding events of the labor movement.

In the Knights of Labor's Convention of 1886, a year before the Chicago revolt, Negroes responded so willingly to the stirring appeal of labor that it was proposed that a Negro organizer be appointed for each of the old slave states. However, this request was referred to the executive board. At the following Convention, in 1886, the general secretary reported that "rapid strides have been made in the South, especially in Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia and Alabama. The colored people of the South are looking to us, being eager for organization and education, and when thoroughly imbued with our principles are answering in their fidelity."

However, since 1886, the labor movement has met many setbacks in the organization of Negro workers. This has been partly due to the bad tactics of the American Federation of Labor, which propagated craft unionism and racial superiority of the white workers over the blacks, and in turn brought about a line of demarcation between skilled and unskilled labor and divided the blacks from the whites. These methods of the A. F. of L. only played into the hands of the capitalist class. This further led to the encouragement of the racial prejudice that the white workers have inherited from the semi-feudalistic system of the old Bourbon South and intensified great mistrust for the whites among the blacks. And in further consequence of these policies of the A. F. of L., it is much more difficult to rally Negro labor around the banner of the class struggle today than during the Reconstruction Period that followed the Civil War, when the American Federation of Labor had not yet gained prominence.

Nevertheless, despite the setbacks the American labor movement has met in organizing the black proletariat, it is cutting some inroads into this unexplored reservoir of untouched militancy. And as a result of these gains a few thousand Negroes are going to participate in the coming May Day events.

There is no doubt about it: the Negro worker is the hardest hit in the present capitalist crisis; and his precarious lot is rapidly crystallizing his racial consciousness into a class-consciousness. He is, moreover, beginning to see in the white worker, whom he regarded in the past as a foe, a comrade and class brother suffering under the same oppression that can be eradicated only by the unity of the two.

More and more May Day is reviving the old tradition of the American labor movement of 1886. Then we struggled for the eight-hour day—today we are struggling for the six-hour day and the five day week. Negro labor is also struggling for this, as well as for an additional demand. Its extra demand is for full social, economic and political equality. Under this special demand hangs such subordinate demands as equal pay for equal work, no discrimination because of race, color or previous conditions of servitude, better educational facilities and complete abolition of lynching, etc.

Since the victory of the eight-hour day the labor movement in America has passed through a period of reaction and defeat.

On the shoulders of the Haymarket martyrs and their continuators through the years a new revolutionary structure is being created, tested and grounded in the experiences of the great revolutionary thinkers of the world, especially the experiences of Marx and Engels. This edifice is the newly organized Workers Party of the United States—the harbinger of the Fourth International.

Negro and white workers! Unite under the leadership of this new revolutionary party of America. You have nothing to lose but your oppression—your chains!

Huey Long--Workers' Enemy

Share - the - Wealth Can Only Mean Share - the - Poverty
As Long as the Capitalist System Endures

By ARNE SWABECK

From the state of Louisiana, where he boldly boasts of holding in the hollow of his hands "the finest collection of saw-makers money can buy," Huey P. Long has now definitely entered the scene of national politics. He has the old time capitalist politician's worried. They stand against, watching with anticipation and fear the prospects of traditional party lines again being broken down and this time by a high pressure demagogue.

But—and this is important—Long's grandiose promises to "Share our Wealth" and his demagogic appeals addressed to the common people have made deep inroads also in the politically unconscious working class layers.

Out for Bigger Things

Undoubtedly Huey Long's hat will be in the ring for next year's presidential elections. He is a candidate for leadership in the formation of a new third party. It is reported that he has already, together with Father Coughlin and Governor Olson of Minnesota, accepted an invitation issued by Milo Rabo, for the Farm Holiday Association, to attend a conference, to be held in Des Moines, Iowa May 1, to consider the formation of such a party.

Huey Long is the most spectacular and probably also the strongest of the candidates for leadership of such a party. Fortified already by his undisputed control of the state of Louisiana, he is reaching out for immediate political control of other southern states and apparently enjoying the undivided support of such a staunch defender of the "rights of the people" as Governor Lammie of Georgia, who declared martial law in his state during the national textile strike and put the strikers wholesale into concentration camps.

This example is typical of the make-up and political coloring of the Huey Long forces. They are taking on the form of a movement, 27,431 Share Our Wealth Clubs with a membership of 4,884,000 have been organized, he claims.

Long as Roosevelt Supporter

Huey Long began his national political career as a Roosevelt supporter. To the Chicago convention that nominated him for President in 1932, Roosevelt spoke, declaring: "Throughout the nation men and women . . . look to us for guidance and for more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of national wealth." To the delegates these words were just empty rhetoric, noble sounding sentiments that did not at all have to be taken seriously, least of all literally. But Huey Long noted the power of the phrase, snapped it up as his own and is now making this the central point of his program while campaigning against the government of "alphabet wreckers and spoilers."

He proposes to cut down all large fortunes by a capital levy tax to a point where no one person may own more than from three to four million dollars and have a yearly income of not more than one million dollars. The surplus of all these big fortunes is to go into the United States Treasury. This is to be done by the simple process of issuing a questionnaire for all the plutocrats to list their fortunes at their own appraisal and to state in what sort of holdings they wish to retain their three to four millions.

By his calculation he has arrived at a surplus already available on paper of $165,000,000,000 to $175,000,000,000. This surplus he will distribute to all families owning less than $5,000, free of debt, so that each family may have at least that amount. This he says will take no more than $100,000,000,000, leaving a handsome balance to spare. By means of the balance he proposes to provide for the reduction of the hours of labor so that all may be employed and have a yearly income for each family of not less than $2,500. In addition he will also provide for a college education for all youth, for old age pensions and he proposes to care for agricultural production in the manner specified in the bible.

Huey Long himself claims that his proposals originate from the unfinished Roosevelt program. Similar to the Roosevelt New Deal program, the Long proposals have as their base the maintenance and strengthening of the system of capitalism but with a supposed increase of the purchasing power of the masses of the people. However, the Huey Long edition appears in a much more radical dress. "I believe in capitalism," exclaims Long, "but you cannot stimulate it unless there is buying power. You've got to have a foundation under the house, and that is a more even distribution of wealth."

Huey's Discovery

On yes, capitalism is again to have its "abuses" corrected. To substantiate his claims, the Kingfish refers very pretentiously to what he sees as the present social injustices and economic maladjustments. And surely, there is in the present situation of mass misery, deprivation and despair on the one hand together with the enormous concentration of wealth on the other hand, sufficient material for the unscrupulous demagogue to appear as the savior Angel. But it did not require a Huey Long to make this discovery. Nor is he the first demagogue that has appeared on the political scene.

The Roosevelt program for increasing the purchasing power of the masses has so far brought us to the promised magnificent social security for some of the unemployed at $50.00 a month maximum which in turn allows all present wage standards to be torn down to that level. Where would the Huey Long program lead to? Needless to say, in this proposed redistribution of wealth we have a repetition of petty bourgeois utopias advanced elsewhere and at other times.

That wealth exists in this country in abundance is well known and was known before Huey Long said so. But the distribution of this wealth proceeds according to the social relations of society. These are capitalist relations, resting upon the capitalist ownership and control of the means of production. In the Kingfish's plan these relations would remain, only the wealth would be redistributed by cutting down on the big fortunes and adding to the small ones or giving to those that have none. But this is impossible under capitalism since the ownership and control of the means of production determines the form of distribution of all wealth. So far this has meant and can only mean ever greater riches for the parasites and ever greater impoverishment for those who toil, who have nothing but their labor power to sell—and to sell only when the bosses see fit to buy.

What is the cause of this condition; what is the cause of this unequal distribution of wealth? The cause is to be found in the ownership and control of the means of production. This system secures the right to exploit labor by leaving in the hands of the capitalist class also the ownership of the surplus value produced by the laborer over and above what he receives as wages. This is how profits are acquired. Moreover, under the conditions of mass production, and in order to continue the process of production. In other words, sufficient only for their bare upkeep when they have jobs. Of course, the abundance of wealth available could easily guarantee to each family, as Huey Long proposes, a yearly income of $2,500. But this is equally impossible under the profit system and it can be obtained only when the profit system is abolished.

For Maintenance of System

Huey Long proclaims in grandiose style for the redistribution of wealth, but he is equally vociferous in his proclamations for the maintenance of the present social relationship. His program assumes the continuation of the right to exploitation, however, with an increase of the purchasing power of the masses so that returns to bondholders in the form of unearned incomes may continue; so that dividends on watered stocks may be paid and the flow of profits taken out of the exploitation of labor may proceed uninterrupted. There are no other sources for profits to come from.

What is this but the stabilization of the system of exploitation? To stabilize the system of exploitation means to stabilize the economic power of the class that owns and controls the means of production. Furthermore, it is well to remember that political relations are governed by this economic power which is another way of saying that those who own are also those who rule. They use their economic power to build up their political state, to build up their government and to reinforce it by courts, by police and by military forces, always ready to be used against the workers when on strike or in other forms of struggle and on a whole serving for the purpose of keeping the masses in subjection. This government, Huey Long proposes to entrust with the redistribution of wealth.

They will not consent to any redistribution of their wealth acquired by exploitation without a fierce struggle. They will not even permit the workers to organize into unions so as to obtain a living wage without the most stubborn resistance. They will not yield their economic power, as represented by their accumulated wealth, or give up their privilege to exploit labor without a life and death struggle. Nay more, they use this economic power to determine who can be elected to the public offices and to dictate the program of those so elected and its execution as well.

A real redistribution of wealth and a real program of social security can be carried out in no other way than by the overthrow of the system of capitalism. That is not at all the purpose of the Huey Long third party movement. Only the working class revolution can accomplish that.

For the American Workers --Labor Day or First?

Two days a year, on May first and on the first Monday in September workers may be seen marching to the sound of bands, listening to speeches. But what a contrast! Their outward similarity serves only to emphasize the profound historical and political difference of the celebrations. Both holidays are American in origin, both started in about the same period of the labor movement. Yet it would be difficult to find two days celebrated for more opposed purposes.

On Labor Day the bosses can smile at the parades, smiling with pride, because they know that the holiday is a gift they gave to the workers out of the kindness of their hearts. Though originally sponsored by the Knights of Labor in 1884, the idea of a holiday for the workers gained approval. On March 15, 1887, one year after the first great May Day strike in Chicago, Labor Day was made legal in Colorado. Other states quickly followed suit and it is now a national holiday. But it is also a day in which workers are herded by corrupt union officials to places where they will hear politicians make promises that are never kept after election day, two months later. Therefore the bosses want the parades to be a success. They want great numbers to attend. Police bands play patriotic hymns.

Clubs and Bands But cops don't play piccolo on May Day. They wield clubs. The bosses are afraid. They hope the parades will be a flop. They know that the workers are celebrating their class independence and reviewing their fighting strength. May Day is not a gift. It is a holiday for which workers have to strike, as they did for the first time half a century ago in America.

The A. F. of L. was a young fighting organization then, known as the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions. The fight for the eight-hour day was the most important question facing the working class as a whole. The organization of the Knights of Labor was soon to explode like a balloon with too thin a shell. So the Federation took up the struggle. At its fourth convention in October, 1884, it resolved that on May 1, 1886 there should be a strike in favor of the eight-hour day. During the following twenty months the movement gained the active support of workers and unions throughout the country despite the sabotage of Powderly, head of the Knights of Labor.

That first May Day was most successful in Chicago where 80,000 workers attended. In Chicago too the bosses hit back most cruelly. Four days later at a demonstration in Haymarket square a bomb exploded, killing a policeman. Four of the workers' leaders, Parsons, Spies, Fischer, and Engel were arrested and hanged. But the movement revived. In 1888 the Federation, now known as the A. F. of L., called for a strike on May 1, 1890. In the meantime, in Paris, the Second International was founded and the founding convention hearing of the fight for the 8-hour day in America resolved to support it. May Day, 1890, was the first international celebration of the working class. After that, the purpose of May Day was broadened. The International resolved that the demonstration should demand improved conditions for the workers in general, and that the workers should demand peace among nations. In 1917 Russia it became symbolic of the liberation of the people and, as everywhere, of the independent action of the proletarian masses, against war. May Day has become a political demonstration of working class solidarity throughout the world.

A. F. of L. Condemns May Day

The international character May Day has acquired is one of the things the bosses fear most. They know they cannot stand before a united working class. The A. F. of L. bureaucracy, forgetting the militant tradition which its organization founded, and having acquired a fat vested interest as strike breakers and disrupters, fear May Day as much as the bosses. The Executive Council submitted to the 1928 Convention of the A. F. of L. a report which read: "Hereafter May 1 will be known as Child Health Day, as the President (Hoover) is directed by the resolution passed by Congress . . . The object is to create sentiment for year-round protection of children. A most worthy purpose. At the same time May 1 no longer will be known as strike day. . . . They are now the main celebrants of Labor Day, because they know that it is a harmless holiday, like St. Patrick's day, and very useful to them. Labor Day hypocritically glorifies the 'dignity of labor.' It is a celebration of the workers as part of the American capitalist community, of which the reactionary magazine 'World's Work' could say: 'It is like circus day.'"

But May Day is not a religious holiday like Christmas or Easter. Nor a national holiday like the 4th of July or Labor Day. It is something new: a workers' celebration of defiance for which the main slogan is "Down tools."

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

THE CLASS STRUGGLE IN FRANCE

The hull in the storm that occurred in France with the advent of the Flandin government, gives every indication of coming to a close. Flandin himself stated, on taking office as premier, that his government would be the last "experiment" in bourgeois democracy. That experiment, as could have been predicted in view of the general crisis that struck France only a little more than a year ago, and in view of the international political situation with its threat of world war at any moment, has proved a recognized failure. More and more clearly the question is posed in France: the salvation of bankrupt capitalism through the setting up of a violent and brutal fascist dictatorship, or the seizure of power by the proletariat for the establishing of the communist society.

With the aid of big finance capital, the fascist forces have been closing their ranks in preparation for the coming coup d'état directed towards the overthrow of the Third French Republic and with the aim of savage repression of the organizations of the working class. Colonel la Rocque, head of the War Veterans organized in the Croix de Feu, has become the recognized leader of the reaction. Already he has a large private armed force—said to number three hundred thousand—ready to do his bidding. As in the other countries where fascism has arisen and achieved power, la Rocque is aided by the upper bureaucratic strata of the army, pistols, rifles and ammunition "disappear" from the armories—for the use of the fascist armed bands. Thus the French press stated recently that the annual inventory of the Versailles armory had shown the disappearance of 336,400 rifle cartridges and 155,000 revolver bullets. If French tradition is any criterion, then the fascists are preparing for a military dictatorship to be set up by a sudden blow.

THE RANKS OF THE WORKERS

The danger to the working class is rendered all the more acute, as the Marxist knows, by the lack of a revolutionary party in France at this critical juncture. In place of such a Marxist party, serving as the vanguard and the rallying force for the inevitable struggle, there exist two centrist parties led by reactionary bureaucracies. The pressure from their rank and file membership and from the masses forced these bureaucracies to enter into a united front against fascism. But the Stalinists and the Socialists have both hamstrung this united front by their policies of turning it to the service of bourgeois democracy at the very time when this democracy is about to crumble. Only the Bolshevik-Leninist fraction of the S.F.I.O. (the S. P. of France) has advocated a clear-cut revolutionary program to lead the workers along the road to power. This fraction has gradually become a force in the left wing of the S.F.I.O. and has won over to its views a large section of the revolutionary workers in the Federation of the Seine, both youth and adult. The progressive nature of the entry of this fraction into the ranks of the S.F.I.O. is about to be tested in the forthcoming national convention of the Socialist Party.

ROLE OF THE BOLSHEVIK-LENINISTS

At this Congress the Bolshevik-Leninists will present their program in the form of resolutions. They will review and sum up the history of betrayal of the Second and Third Internationals that brought about the victory of fascism in Germany, Austria, etc. instead of the ushering in of Communism, and they will therefore call for the formation of the Fourth International to lead the workers to victory. They will demand a complete break with the bourgeoisie, with the "truce government of sacred union" and instead of this policy of the lesser evil of supporting bourgeois democracy against fascism, a policy that can only lead as in Germany to the defeat of the proletariat, the Bolshevik-Leninists will propose the taking of power by the united front in the form of the Workers and Peasants' Government. Coming at this critical period in France, the Congress of the S.F.I.O. may prove momentous, not because of any possibility of reform of the S. P., but rather because of the struggle that will develop between the rights and the lefts at this congress and the support given to the advocates of the Fourth International. If the question of organic unity between the S.P. and the C.F. is raised at this Congress, the Bolshevik-Leninists will expose completely the reactionary basis proposed for such unity by the Stalinist bureaucracy as well as by the leaders of the S. P. Such organic unity can only prove progressive if it is based on the complete Marxist program of the Bolshevik-Leninists. This program calls for the armed defense of the organizations of the working class against the attacks of the fascist bands, for the building of the workers' militia, for a militant struggle of the armed workers to break up the fascist bands, for a united front policy to defend proletarian democracy, the broadest type of democracy, and not the fraudulent bourgeois democracy represented in bourgeois parliaments. To confine working class activity now in France to parliamentarism, is to doom the workers in advance to defeat by la Rocque and his bloody hordes. All power to the "Trotskyists" and their revolutionary program which offers the French workers the key to their situation!

A Sacramento Juror Weeps

recommended for probation, which he has refused.

Juror Wants Sympathy
When McIntire finished, he looked at us. "I tell you, gentlemen," he said, "I will never forget what I have done. It will always haunt me. I never faced a harder problem . . . and I don't know that I solved it rightly." Mrs. Keith echoed McIntire's words. Suddenly the irony of our situation became apparent.

Here sat Warnick whose wife, and I whose friend, and Goldman whose client had just been condemned to incarceration in San Quentin, being asked for sympathy . . . by one of those who had voted to send them there!

Couldn't Sleep Nights

On the following day Jack Warnick and I, along with Bert Hannan of the Workers Party, were in my hotel room when McIntire came in. For an hour or so we heard the same complaints over again . . . no sleep, the pangs of remorse, confusion. I could see that Jack—whose wife, after all, had been convicted and who might be expecting a little sympathy himself—was growing tense.

"Mr. McIntire," said Warnick, "what are you going to do?"
"What can I do? I want to undo the damage. I want to set things right. Especially regarding Decker and Mini."

"Do you want to help these innocent people get a new trial?" I asked.

"Oh, if only I could, I would do anything in the world," McIntire answered.

Jurors Condemn Statement

He left to attend a Masonic meeting and came back to my room late that night. Goldman, Warnick and Hannan were there again. McIntire dictated a statement. In the morning he signed it before a notary. Goldman read it to the court.

The afternoon paper carried statements by eight jurors condemning McIntire's action. "His terrible conscience was always getting in the way of a verdict," said Carter, the youngest and one of the most reactionary of the jurors. F. M. Martel, one of the hold-out quartet, refused comment except to say that he was through with the case. Keith and Shannon, the other holdouts, apparently refused to make any statement. Unwilling to come out in support of McIntire, they were too remorseful to attack him.

Who is McIntire? He was in the National Guard seven years. For 27 years he was in the office of the State Adjutant General. He is a Past Master of the Masons, who recently gave him a diamond-studded watch chain which is his proudest possession. A widower, and accountant by profession, he is indebted to a big Sacramento bank. He loves the American flag, he goes to church, he is utterly ignorant of the meaning of radicalism, he is (or was) a Respected Member of the Community—that middle-class community which, poisoned by the Hearst and McClatchy press, wanted a conviction.

The Jury

Martel is a salesman for a large musical instrument house. Shannon, the smartest dresser in Sacramento, is a businessman. Mrs. Keith is the mother of a policeman. It was these three who stood back of McIntire until McIntire himself, pounded for 66 hours by "the community," whose influence reached into the jury room in a thousand ways, gave in.

This quartet helped sentence innocent people in violation of its own convictions. They gave in to "the community." But it was they who held out for 66 hours, who forced 118 ballots, who produced such acquittals as came about, and it was one of them who later, by the affidavit proving the compromise, drove a great breach into the prosecution's case and took the bloom off reaction's victory.

Was this a vigilante jury? If there were on it men lacking in learning, lacking in subtlety, lacking even in courage, but not lacking in a desire to find a way out for the defendants, what about the Western Worker, official organ of the Communist Party, which having put the jury down as hopeless vigilantes, proceeded to publish insulting cartoons and wisecracks about them?

Tremendous Strikes For 8 Hour Day Shook Nation

The May Day demonstration of 1886 the climax of a mighty mass movement for the eight-hour day which reverberated throughout the length and breadth of the nation. It was followed shortly after by the Haymarket bomb explosions and the legal crucifixion of the Chicago Anarchists. It had been preceded by a series of strike struggles unmatched in their extent and militancy.

The American worker of 1885 would have found himself in a bitterly familiar atmosphere in the days of 1886. The industrial and financial crisis of 1884 had been followed by all the catastrophic consequences of a capitalist crisis. Idle industries, bankrupt railroads, suspended banks and brokerage houses, falling prices for farm commodities had brought two years of hard times, intolerable misery, and a steady lowering of living conditions to the toiling masses. According to the head of the Bureau of Labor, over a million men had been thrown out of work by the summer of 1885. Wages were being mercilessly slashed. The average wage for a ten hour day in the textile mills for men fell as low as $1.25 and rarely went above two dollars a day in any line of work. Women and children were getting only sixty to eighty cents a day.

Workers Roused to Action
As soon as the workers recovered from the first paralyzing blows of the depression, they began to rebel against the unendurable deprivations laid upon them by the owners of industry. Spontaneously, almost overnight, they felt the need of organization. At first thousands, and then hundreds of thousands streamed into the ranks of the Knights of Labor, as the unorganized workers flocked into the A. F. of L. in the early months of the Roosevelt administration. By 1886 the Knights numbered over 700,000 members and was growing so rapidly and conducting such aggressive struggles that its general officers with Terence V. Powderley at their head were refusing to charter new locals, fearing that the new members would get out of hand.

The Knights of Labor, which dominated the American labor movement from 1877 to 1887, was in most respects the superior of its successor, the American Federation of Labor. Although exhibiting symptoms of immaturity, inconsistency and confusion in its aims, it was an all-inclusive trade union organization, admitting all workers and even farmers, small shopkeepers and professionals into its ranks. It proclaimed its intentions to make the worker class conscious rather than craft-conscious and to combine "all the scattered battalions of labor's mighty host in one grand whole." It affirmed the solidarity of the working class in its motto, "an injury to one is the concern of all" and Powderley even dared call for the abolition of the wage system.

The Knights and their leaders did not always live up to their precepts of class solidarity. They inspired bloody battles against Chinese workers in the West and basely repudiated the Haymarket martyrs, causing a split in the ranks of the organization. On the other hand, the Knights opened their doors to Negroes, women, and the masses of unskilled workers ignored by the existing craft unions and later by the A. F. of L.

The officers of the order favored arbitration and boycotts and frowned upon strikes as a method of struggle. The militant moods of the rank and file and their feeling

What about Gallagher or the I.L.D., who expressed in open court brazen indifference to the jury's thoughts and feelings?

Pressure Counts Most

The truth is that, even in political cases, the action of the jury can rarely be foretold. A principled, well-reasoned, moving argument by the defense counsel, and still more the activity of the popular masses outside the court (public meetings and other impressive, serious manifestations which eventually impinge on the jury's consciousness) and may give to some the courage to vote their convictions rather than what the middle-class community wants) may result in a defeat of the reactionary forces behind the prosecution.

Support the Defendants

As it is, McIntire, who felt that there was little popular pressure for acquittal and who admits he was very antagonistic toward Attorney Gallagher of the I.L.D., gave in. And now he wants sympathy because he can not sleep nights.

Let us be a bit stony-hearted about McIntire. True, he is no vigilante. True, he feels bad: he gave a rotten verdict . . . and now the prosecution is hitting him into the bargain. But any spare sympathy can well be reserved for the eight workers he convicted . . . and should be expressed in the form of active support of the appeal struggle already under way.

of new found strength came into conflict with the die-hard opposition of the bosses and the pacifism of their leaders, however, producing situations that could only be resolved by strike.

In the summer of 1885 strikes began to explode in one industry after another. 100,000 members of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers around Pittsburgh struck against a threatened wage cut and won. The Knights of Labor led five railroad strikes during 1885 and won four of them easily.

Inspired by these victories, gained in short order and with little organization, workers everywhere throughout the country joined the vast army of strikers. The strike wave assumed unprecedented proportions. Coke workers in Pennsylvania, 20,000 bituminous miners in Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia and Ohio, 10,000 textile and boot and shoe workers in New England, 4,000 mill makers, workers in silk mills, bakeries, pastry shops were out fighting for union recognition, living wages, an eight hour day. "Not an issue of a daily paper in the early months of 1886 that did not contain references to strikes, boycotts, walk-outs, tieups, protests against wage-cuts," is the testimony of one historian.

The agitation in favor of the demonstration on May 1 for the eight-hour day had been spread by the radicals among the working class—the Socialists and Anarchists—against the opposition of the official labor leaders. As May Day approached, the movement gathered such momentum that Powderley was impelled to order the Knights not to participate in the demonstrations.

Meanwhile, the strike wave rolled on, reaching its crest in the strike of the railroad workers on the Missouri Pacific system controlled by Jay Gould, the most notorious of the money monarchs. Early in 1885 the shop mechanics had tied up all the traffic on the road and prevented a wage cut. Their victory led to the formation of numerous lodges and assemblies of the Knights of Labor on the line.

Alarmed by the aggressive tactics of the workers and the increasing power of the Knights, the management and receivers of the Railroad determined to have a showdown to decide who was master in the house. They precipitated a second strike in March 1886 by firing a union officer for attending a meeting of the order. The local head of the Knights, Martin Irons, accepted the challenge and called the men out to protect the right of the union to exist. Although the engineers, firemen, conductors, and brakemen, organized in separate craft unions, refused to come out, the Knights succeeded in tying up 6,000 miles of railroad in the Southwest.

State and federal troops had been used to break the bloody railroad strike of 1877. This time different methods were brought into play. On April 22 President Cleveland asked Congress to appoint a federal commission of three to arbitrate differences arising between the laboring classes and their employer. When it was set up two years later, the commission proved as impotent to settle any labor disputes as the present Labor Boards. The strike was finally broken by orders from Powderley.

Such was the state of the nation on May Day 1886. Despite the efforts of the Knights of Labor and A. F. of L. leaders to sabotage the demonstration, thousands of workers quit their jobs on the appointed hour and proceeded to give an unforgettable manifestation of their class strength and solidarity.

The First May Day
The demonstrators gained their most conspicuous success in Chicago. It was estimated that over 80,000 men had left work on May Day and as a result of their demonstration the packing house workers had been granted their demand for an eight-hour day with no reduction in pay.

This victory stimulated the fighting spirit of the Chicago workers and provoked police repression. Then came the memorable events, the shootings, the bomb outrage, the trials and executions that have entered the annals of history as "Haymarket."

Knights of Labor Declines
The Haymarket explosions and the vacillating, treacherous policy of the Knights of Labor leadership broke the back of the strike movement.

Torn by internal dissension, the Knights of Labor began to decline as rapidly as it had grown, giving way to the reign of Samuel Gompers and the craft-bound pure-and-simple unionism of the A. F. of L. Candidates put forward by labor tickets showed remarkable strength in the elections later in the year but these political successes did not compensate for the defeats on the economic field. They were the last spasms of this mighty upsurge of the working class. Later in the year after another abortive strike the gains of the packing house workers were lost and the ten hour day restored.

Nevertheless, the year when May Day was born in the fire of the class struggle and baptized in the blood of the Haymarket martyrs; the year when the American working class gave such magnificent examples of its courage and capacity for militant struggle; the year when the fight for the eight-hour day was hailed by workers throughout the world marks the coming of age of the American working class. 1886 will always remain a memorable year in its history, a milestone along the road to its conquest of power.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

N. G., NEW YORK—

QUESTION: Are not the two Stalinist theories, "socialism in one country" and "social fascism" contradictory and mutually exclusive, since the first led to united fronts from above with Chiang Kai Shek, Purcell, etc., whereas the latter prevented it from going into a united front with the Social Democracy against Hitler?

ANSWER: The contradiction here is only apparent. Do not forget that the united front with liberals "from above," i.e., the Amsterdam Congress, took place during the epoch of "social fascism". In reality the "theory of socialism in one country", i.e., the subordination of the international proletarian revolution to the national interests of the Soviet bureaucracy, expressed by the subordination of the various official Communist parties to the policy of the Soviet foreign office, is at the root of all of the Stalinists' actions. By hook or crook their aim is to prevent political changes, even if such change comes from a proletarian revolution since, having no faith in the success of such revolutions, their chief fear is that the "peaceful building of socialism" will be disturbed.

Depending upon conditions the strategy which they therefore pursue involves making united fronts with anybody or the refusal to make united fronts under any circumstances. "Social fascism" and the "united front only from below" are merely the theoretical formulations, whether conscious or unconscious on their part, of the fact that the Stalinists never had any intention of trying to seize power in Germany. As results show, could any theories have been better calculated to maintain internal political peace in Germany and not interfere with the "peaceful building of socialism"?

PIONEER BOOK NOTES

The first in the series of popular pamphlets to be issued by the Workers Party is off the press. The title is Which Party for the American Worker? by A. J. Muste. It sells for 5c. Branches should send their orders in immediately with an eye to large sales on May Day.

The publication of the "Suppressed Testament of Lenin" has created quite a stir in Stalinist circles. Most C. P. members have never read Lenin's letter demanding Stalin's removal from the post of general secretary of the party. Every Branch should have a quantity of these pamphlets at hand. They are exceptionally interesting in view of Trotsky's explanatory articles dealing with the struggle in the party during Lenin's last days and how the legend of Trotskyism was concocted by leading members of the C.P.S.U.

The political significance of "The Kirov Assassination" (10c) is admirably dealt with in the pamphlet by that title written by Leon Trotsky. The brazen attempt of the Stalinists to link the Workers Party (through Comrades Muste and Cannon) to the plot makes it of the utmost importance that every class-conscious worker study the significance of the "amalgam" cooked up by the Stalinist scribes. Toledo and May Day

TOLEDO, one of the brightest spots of the labor map that was drawn in 1934, is again the scene of action. Cutting straight through the net of deception, intrigue and betrayal which government and misleaders of labor have woven around too many unions this year, the workers of the Chevrolet plant have taken the road of militant struggle to enforce their demands. That is the way. And the participation in the present movement of the same militants who led the magnificent battles of 1934 is an assurance that the strike will be waged with militancy and skill. The struggle begins on the eve of May Day, an auspicious prelude to the international holiday of the working class. The example and spirit of Toledo will quicken the footsteps of marching labor throughout the entire country on this day.

The Toledo strike is a direct challenge to General Motors, the great moloch of the automobile industry, in one of its key plants. A militant labor force employing the most modern strike strategy comes to grips with the masters of entrenched capital. These features invest the strike at the Chevrolet plant with national significance. Here is the setting for an epic battle. The bosses, sensing the unbounded possibilities of a spreading movement, have brought up their heaviest batteries. Armed thugs are mobilized and the daily press screams with paid advertisements to poison public opinion. The strikers responded with a mass picket line that shut the plant down cold and a daily paper of their own, "Strike Truth." No stalling around at Toledo, but a swift sudden blow! The boys out there believe in action. You have to lay it on the line for them.

The strikers can expect every resource of the profit-swollen auto barons to be brought into play against them. The press will lie and slander, and the murderous thugs, in and out of uniform, will attack them with gas and club and gun. But far more dangerous than these direct instruments, as the tragic experience at Akron demonstrated once again, are the indirect agencies of the employers—the government boards and representatives and the faithless labor leaders who stand at the head of the A. F. of L. While fighting it out on the picket line the Chevrolet strikers will have to watch out for flank attacks from Washington and stabs in the back from Green, Dillon and Co. This is the real danger. There will be fatal consequences for the strikers at Toledo if they forget it.

The infamous Auto Labor Board, or a new government agency of the same perfidious quality, can be relied on to try, with suave and oily promises and treacherous intrigues, to trick the strikers out of a victory and maneuver them back to work empty-handed. Remember Akron! Green and Dillon will undoubtedly attempt to take over the negotiations and trade away the workers' rights and interests. Again, remember Akron! From all their militant energy, courage and sacrifice the Chevrolet strikers will reap only the bitter ashes of defeat if they trust the Auto Labor Board or any other agency or representative of the Roosevelt administration. After all the sad experiences with the National Run Around, in the automobile industry especially, this ought to be clear to the Toledo workers. A more insidious, but no less treacherous, agency of betrayal is precisely the official machine of the A. F. of L.

The one and only absolute safeguard against both is a firm resolution of the local union from the start to run its own strike and make its own settlement. It is high time, anyway, for the federal labor unions to revolt against the status of "second class citizenship" in the A. F. of L. and to assert the right to run their own affairs with the same autonomy enjoyed by other affiliated unions. A curt rebuff to Madame Perkins and similars is overdue. A strike of a federal union conducted militantly on the picket line and settled by the union membership itself, without the nefarious "assistance" of Green and Perkins, is precisely what is needed now to put hope and heart into the newly organized workers everywhere. Toledo is just the place to set the example and the Toledo militants, unless we are greatly mistaken, are the people to do it.

The Chevrolet strike begins after a series of demoralizing experiences in the automobile industry, and the latest debacle at Akron. It is also somewhat late in the auto production season. But over against these handicaps the strike has in its favor a local leadership of demonstrated intelligence and audacity. These are the very qualities needed to lead great mass movements and to spread them. The bitter discontent of the masses, and their impatient restlessness under the intolerable conditions of life and labor, also speak for the possibility of spreading the strike.

The bosses stand in mortal dread of such a prospect, for neither they nor anyone else can prophesy where a spreading strike movement may stop. With these factors on their side the Toledo strikers can well enter their struggle with hearts undaunted. The eyes of the workers of America are on them this May Day. More, it can be truly said that every May Day parade is marching behind them with confidence and hope, for they, by their audacious action, have put themselves in the vanguard of the American labor movement this First of May.

gains" offered the workers by the company proposals and feebly attempted to discredit the strike by labeling the progressive leaders as "extremists" demanding a "closed shop," although the closed shop has not even entered into the dispute.

Strikers Aggressive

Morale of the strikers is very high and not even plant officials were permitted to go through the picket lines without the sanction of the strike committee. Efforts of the company to move freight cars of supplies from company sidings was prevented by militant action of the pickets.

The real counter-attack of the company has not yet been launched. It is expected that General Motors will shortly pour millions of dollars into Toledo in an effort to smash the strike and the union. Every strike-breaking measure, from a bombardment of vicious propaganda, through efforts to disrupt the union from within, to outright murderous violence by a huge army of armed thugs and professional strike-breakers, is anticipated.

To Publish Strike Daily

The union is preparing to meet this attack by the issuance of its own daily paper, "The Auto Workers Spark," exposing the boss lies and disruptive tactics, by gaining the active support of the entire organized labor and unemployed movement in Toledo, and by spreading the strike into Detroit and other auto centers. The union men in the Bingham Stamping, Logan Gear, Auto-Lite and other plants are preparing to march in a body to the aid of the Chevrolet strikers whenever the call is given.

On May 1, a United Labor Demonstration, called by the Joint Action Committee, representing the Toledo Building Trades Council, Lucas County Unemployed League and Workers Alliance of Lucas County, and the Committee of 23, representing the entire organized labor movement in Toledo, will be held. It is expected that this demonstration will be the greatest outpouring of workers in the history of the city. The demonstration will have a three-fold purpose, to raise the slogan for a thirty-hour week with no reduction in weekly pay; to force a show-down with the Lucas County relief authorities in the ten-week general FERA strike; and to support the fight of the Chevrolet workers with the solid massed strength in action of all Toledo labor.

Rely on Own Strength

The W. P. militants in the union are exerting a healthy influence on the strike at present, and so far have succeeded in carrying to the union men the fact that the strike will have to be fought out to the bitter end; that no reliance of any sort is to be placed upon government agencies for mediation or arbitration; and that the rank-and-file of the union are to conduct their own strike and make their own terms of settlement.

Already the pressure of the labor situation in the auto industry and the stand of the local union has forced an endorsement of the strike from Bill Green with a promise of full support from the A. F. of L. Green, however, fell into character following his endorsement and promise by stating that "there is grave danger that the strike might spread throughout the automotive industry." This would be a grave danger to the auto barons but the sign of a great resurgence of American labor.

these wolves in sheep's clothing."

Following behind the Citizens Alliance and D. J. Tobin came the C. P. with the mimeographed leaflets (since then the mimeographing machines are looked upon rather unfavorably in 574) in which once more the famous "Rank and File Committee" without any rank and file called for the removal of the strike leadership and of the officers of Local 574. This was one of the many united fronts in which the C. P. participated and did not get to first base. The leaders of 574 were thoroughly disliked by almost everyone—by the vigilantes, by the bosses, by Tobin, by the C. P. But they were rather liked by the workers of 574, and that is what counts with these boys in the militant leadership of 574 who remained more than ever for militant unionism in Minneapolis and the Northwest.

574 Remains Firm

New methods were tried to separate the workers from the leaders. Newspaper publicity and mouth-to-mouth propaganda spread the rumors that 574 or its leaders are ready to break the agreement made at the conclusion of the strike, and prepare for a "general strike" in May. A new organization was formed, made up of preachers, business men, representatives of bosses organizations and last but not least, officers of the local A. F. of L. The purpose of this "Committee of 100" was to "find the facts and bring about friendly relationship between employers and employees." Members of 574 were approached to "get rid of the leaders and then reorganize the local" which came into disrepute before the bosses. The workers of 574 did not bite, but stood with their many-times tested and proven militant leadership.

The "United Front" against unionism did not figure with the real rank and file of Minneapolis, which rank and file considers 574 the teacher of labor in the fight for labor rights in the Northwest. They are rallying around Local 574 and its militant leaders to give the whole reactionary gang the fight of their lives.

But where is the Communist Party? They are also taking their place in this "united front from above" which the "fourth period" prescribes. In the evening of April 22, while the meeting of 574 was in progress a new mimeographed leaflet was distributed in front of the union headquarters. The Communist Party, in this leaflet, went the whole way with the Citizens Alliance, the Committee of One Hundred, Tobin and the local labor fakers. The leaflet pointed out the many misdeeds of the leaders of Local 574—repeating all the old stale slanders—and declared that "the full responsibility of this (the revocation of the charter) lies upon your leadership," although they forgot to explain why the Citizens Alliance would be so anxious to get rid of these leaders and why Tobin would revoke the charter of the union, if the leaders had been guilty of betraying the interests of the workers. The union membership couldn't understand this logic, either. That is why they are standing solid behind the leaders who are under attack of the bosses, the labor fakers and their "left" allies—the Communist Party.

May Day Manifesto of the WP

tion! Every city a union town! Every factory a union factory! Every industry a union industry! A united nation-wide trade union movement!

The rights of the workers—free speech, free press, freedom of assembly, freedom to organize, strike and picket—are systematically violated. The end of this process has been witnessed in countries where Fascism has destroyed every vestige of freedom, every independent institution of the workers and farmers. All the unions, all the unemployed organizations, all the farmers' organizations, all the political parties and groups of the working class, the Negro masses who in all these matters are subjected to the most ruthless attack, must fight to the death against every encroachment upon their rights, against every tendency toward Fascism!

In 1935, as the children born in 1914-18 come to manhood, the capitalist powers are feverishly preparing to slaughter them in another world-war. The supposedly liberal and peace-loving Roosevelt administration is playing a leading part in this betrayal of humanity, promoting the most colossal naval and military building program in the entire peacetime history of this nation in order that the interests of American capitalists and imperialists may be protected and advanced. The masses everywhere must rally for the fight against imperialist war, organize to overthrow the governments that make machine-fodder out of men in time of peace and cannon-fodder in time of war.

In order to break the chains of poverty, unemployment and tyranny that bind us, we must first break from our minds the chains of false ideas:

We cannot rely for the righting of our wrongs upon "cooperation" with the bosses. Their interest is profit from our labor. Our interest is freedom from wage slavery.

We cannot count upon "cooperation" from the Roosevelt administration or any other capitalist government.

We cannot trust trade union leaders who tell us to count upon the "cooperation" of our enemies, the bosses and the bosses' government.

We cannot gain plenty and security and peace under this capitalist system, nor by any reform of it. Capitalism leads to Fascism and War. We must smash capitalism and build a Workers' World!

Eighteen years ago the workers in Russia pointed the way. Under the leadership of the revolutionary party they demolished czarism and capitalism, took political power, and then began to lay the foundations of a socialist society. There is no other way out for the workers of the United States and of other countries.

Both the Socialist Party and the Communist Party, the Second International and the Third International, have proved in recent years their utter inability to organize the masses for defense against reaction and Fascism. They have organized defeats, not victories for the workers.

A mighty gain of the past year, which we celebrate on this May Day, is the birth of the new revolutionary party in this country, the Workers Party of the United States. Born directly out of the great class struggles of 1934, out of the union of the forces which led the historic battles of Toledo and Minneapolis, the founding of the Workers Party marks the end of the period of splits and disintegration in the revolutionary movement. Unity of THE VANGUARD WORKERS IN THE REVOLUTIONARY PARTY will be the basis for the unification of the workers and their allies for the final struggle to overthrow capitalism.

In Canada, Holland and other countries sister parties of the Workers Party of the U. S. have been established. Together they are working for the establishment, at the earliest possible moment, of THE NEW, FOURTH INTERNATIONAL, LEADER OF THE FUTURE VICTORIES OF THE WORKING CLASS OF THE WORLD.

Forward march! With hope, with faith, with unshakable determination! Forward to mighty struggles! Forward to Victory! This is the slogan of May Day 1935!

Against wage cutting, for a decent standard of living, for security against unemployment, accident, sickness, and old age!

For the six-hour day and thirty-hour week! For the unlimited right to organize, strike and picket!

For the 100 percent unionization of the workers in every industry!

For a united trade union movement!

For solidarity of the employed and unemployed!

Against the capitalist system which offers nothing but misery, insecurity, brutal oppression, degradation for the masses!

For the unity of the workers of every race and of all lands against their oppressors!

For the Workers Party of the U. S.!

For the Fourth International!

For a Workers' World!

MAY DAY IN BRITAIN

Taking time off from preparations for King George's silver jubilee (which the Labor Party supports), such labor leaders as Lansbury, who voted for 50,000 pounds ($250,000) for the king's festivities, will mouth some phrases about "socialism in our time." Leaders of the British Communist Party almost gagged into silence by Moscow's praise of the British national government, will no doubt reiterate the battle cry of that stalwart Stalinist, Harry Pollitt: "We are ready to kiss King George if that will help stop war." Such "leaders" will be the major speakers at the May Day demonstrations in the heart of the Bloody Empire, where, we are told, they are "marching steadfastly to socialism."

MAY DAY IN BERLIN

Herded by Nazi police, the workers of Berlin will turn out on May Day on orders of Hitler. The Nazi press will hail this prison muster as an enthusiastic demonstration for Nazism. The real voice of Berlin's proletariat is stifled in concentration camps or prisons, or heard only in secret meetings behind locked doors. So was it one time in Czarist Russia, and in Germany as in Russia, from these secret meetings will rise the leadership of the masses, which will put Hitler in a place reserved for him, side by side with the one-time powerful Czar.

NORMAN MINI

The eight Sacramento organizers found guilty of being militant union men are now behind the bars in San Quentin. Included in the eight is Norman Mini, whom the Daily Worker denounced as a "stool pigeon," etc. Under a barrage of criticism from without and within the Stalinist ranks, the Daily Worker has ceased its slanderous attacks on this courageous fighter. It has not, however, withdrawn its slanders, nor apologized to its readers for its William Randolph Hearst methods of attacking political opponents.

"JUSTICE" IN NEW YORK

That "justice" like God "moves in mysterious ways its wonders to perform" is again evidenced by the quashing of the indictment charging Louis J. McNally, former Superintendent of the City Home for Dependents, and his wife, with "conspiracy to defraud." The judge, in quashing the indictment, and clearing the McNallys, stated that "all the circumstantial evidence discloses the manipulation of two avaricious individuals exercising undue influence over a feeble-minded woman of 75 to obtain from her all her worldly possessions." That, according to the judge, was all that the McNallys did, so he quashed the indictment. The "aged woman," Mrs. Matilda R. Beecher, was the widow of a Spanish-American war veteran. Her savings of $10,000, almost entirely made up of money she received as a pension from the government, was transferred to the bank account of the McNallys' infant son. It was recalled that the same McNallys were charged with having an ex-seller act as a surgeon in the Home for Dependents, cutting out ulcers with a jack knife. He was paid in chewing tobacco, though the city did appropriate money for proper medical and surgical services. McNally is a stalwart supporter of the Democratic Party, always lining up the entire vote of the Home for Roosevelt, Smith, etc. An excellent example of "American" non-alien, non-Communist, rugged individualistic practices and politics for Hearst to write about.

Y.C.L. AND UNITY

John Little, of the Young Communist League, begged for "unity of the working people" on May Day. This is the same John Little and the same Y.C.L. that as late as October last made as a condition for a united front with the Young People's Socialist League that they should break a united front already established with the Spartacus Youth League. At every move the Stalinists make for a "united front," their past and present tactics form the best arguments for the reactionaries to oppose them on. We, who constitute the Workers Party, fought for united front of organization to organization when the Stalinists denounced it as counter-revolutionary. We have today in our ranks not a few former Y.C.L. and C.P. members who were expelled by the Stalinists for urging a united front of the S. P. and the C. P. against Hitler while it was yet possible to stop him. On the other hand, every time a Stalinist opens his mouth for "united action," he has to eat every word he uttered on this question from 1929 to 1934.

Toledo Leads Revolt of Auto Workers

May Day March Biggest in Post-War History

W. P. Section Voices Solidarity with Toledo at G. M. C. Building

NEW YORK, May 1.—More than 100,000 trade unionists and members of working class organizations marched in the biggest May Day parade New York has seen since the war. Heading the march were the strongest unions in the city, the unions of the needle trades, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. Hundreds of locals of other unions fell into line behind them, carrying militant banners proclaiming the struggle to the bitter end against Fascism and Imperialism.

The contingent of the Workers Party of the U. S., and of the youth organizations, the Spartacus Youth League and the Young People's Socialist League, lent color and strength to the whole march with their flying red banners and their vigorous songs of the international revolutionary movement. Time and again the strains of the "Internationale" and the "Red Flag" echoed in the city's streets as the marchers proceeded uptown from 15th Street and Eighth Avenue. Tremendous crowds greeted the demonstrators, lining up by the sidewalks and returning lustily cheers and greetings.

Boos for Hearst

As the workers passed the building which houses the Hearst publications, on Eighth Avenue in the 60s, powerful boos and shouts of derision gave vent to a storm of protest against "Workers' Enemy No. 1." Each contingent that passed vied with the others in displaying its deep hatred for this dispenser of reactionary venom against the Soviet Union and the American revolutionary labor movement.

Solidarity with Toledo

A block further up, at the central offices of the General Motors Corporation, the sector of the parade which included the Workers Party and the Spartacus Youth League turned into a ten minute demonstration of solidarity with the embattled Chevrolet strikers in Toledo. For fully ten minutes the air vibrated with an immense chorus of voices shouting "Support Toledo Chevrolet Strikers," "Down with General Motors Company Unions" and other militant strike slogans.

As the W. P. column entered Columbus circle, headed for the Central Park entrance, the ranks lining up in military formation behind the banner reading "Workers Party, U. S. A.—For the Fourth International" resounded with a volley of cheers for the new International, for the International of Lenin and Trotsky.

Highlights of May Day on Union Square

A comrade who left the tame and stultified May Day Concert at Central Park to seek revolutionary inspiration at the Stalinist Union Square demonstration sends us the following unforgettable snapshot of the high light of this affair, which, if not so revolutionary, was at least unique. The description of this hilarious novelty is taken from the New York Herald-Tribune. Comment on our part would be superfluous. There is no need to gild the Lily of the Valley. Here is the clipping:

Major J. Divine, the little Harlem Negro who calls himself God, stole the show from the Fourteenth Street mortals with the aid of two thousand of his black angels and cupids who had marched to the Square while he rode in a limousine with a liveried chauffeur and footman. A stuffed dove of peace perched on the radiator of the car.

A grinning brown-skinned man of middle age, arrayed in a pink shirt and brown suit, Father Divine spoke briefly into the microphone and aroused more applause than all the other speakers.

"Peace be to every one," said Father Divine.
"Peace, father," his disciples shouted.
"Good health and good will," said Father Divine.
"Thank you, father," was the response.
"Unify yourselves with righteousness and justice."
"Amen, father."

It was a strange speech for Union Square.

Father Divine was not a Communist, he explained, but had agreed to join with his followers in a demonstration against war and Fascism. The banners carried by his followers were more concerned with Father Divine than with current issues. Some of them read:

"Father Divine is God."
"Father Divine is the lily of the valley."
"Father Divine is the light of the world and the bright and shining star."
"There is no space where Father Divine is not."
"Over 20,000,000 people can't be wrong. Thank you, father."
"17th Assembly District—God has truly come to earth, Father Divine."

Sub-Getters, On the Job!

As the sub drive enters its fourth and last month with competition keen, Frank Collins of Allentown has established himself as the undisputed leader of the sub-hustlers for the month of April. His enviable record was a score of 25 full year subs. The prize goes to him.

From everywhere in the country we hear reports of the activities of the Workers Party. Everywhere the party is on the firing line. In Toledo, once again our members are lighting the prairie fire of class struggle. As the lines draw and the conflict sharpens, the workers need a voice to lash out against the lies of the kept press. The daily strike papers are the union voice. The New Militant is the political voice. The most casual glance at the periodicals issued by other sections of the labor movement will confirm our assertion that the New Militant leads in Marxian direction and political clarity.

Most important is that the New Militant finds a similar appreciation among the thousands of striking, union and unemployed workers. No miracle will accomplish this. Indeed, no amount of wishful thinking and self-praise will lead the workers to a condition where it is just as natural for them to read the New Militant every week as it is now for them to buy the daily capitalist press every morning.

What we need is pluggers, of the type of Frank Collins. More Frank Collins means more men and women, young and old, inside and outside the party.

The job is comparatively easy, nothing compared with some of the tasks our party members face on the picket lines. Reports from some of the leading hustlers have it that it doesn't take overmuch lung exertion to persuade a casual New Militant reader to become a subscriber.

But it needs a little punch and a little zest. The same reporters say that the subs did not fall into their laps, they had to go out and get them.

Let's have a little action! And let our party members show the way! The delinquent branches and comrades—and there are too many of them now—are urged to put their shoulders to the wheel.

Speed it up! Only one month left! At the end of the trail are prizes for the champion and trail are left for the laggards.

Illinois Confab Fights Threat To Stop Relief

3,000 Delegates Gather In Huge Four County I. W. A. Meeting

AUBURN, Ill., April 28.—Nearly three hundred visitors and delegates assembled at the Miners hall here Sunday, at a conference called by the four-county section of the Illinois Workers Alliance. Sangamon, Greene, Macoupin, Christian and Morgan counties were represented at the confab.

The conference laid plans to combat the threats of Gov. Horner to close down all the relief stations in the state. The Democratic machine in this state is maneuvering at the expense of the unemployed to force into line a stubborn legislature to pass a bill increasing the sales tax from 2c to 3c. The bill is being militantly fought by labor, liberal and unemployed groups from one end of the state to the other.

The conference went on record to stage a mass state march on the capitol within seven days after Gov. Horner closed the relief stations. Committees were elected to cooperate with the state unemployed organization. The conference also went on record asking for the payment of rent or taxes, $30 and 90-hour week on all relief work, etc. The conference also voted unanimously to endorse May Day as International Labor Day.

One of the features of the conference was a militant speech by Hugo Ochler, now organizing for the Illinois Workers Alliance in Illinois. Comrade Ochler received a great ovation from the audience and demands were made for him to tour the five counties. That evening he was called nearly a hundred miles north to deliver a speech at another mass conference of the unemployed at Galva, Ill.

The conference was presided over by its regular Chairman, Gerry Alford of the Progressive Miners. Tony Scremin, Kincaid Progressive miner, is secretary and Kenneth Shipley, an unemployed electrical worker, is vice-chairman of the four county conference of the Illinois Workers Alliance.

The conference decided to hold another conference at Auburn.

TOLEDO MILITANTS 'DISTURB' WASHINGTON A. F. L. LOBBY

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Toledo interrupted the peaceful proceedings of the A. F. of L. convocation in Washington which would have preferred to lobby in the corridors of Congress for the demands of labor.

Fresh from the picket lines at General Motors and in the FERA strike, a delegation came to Washington where the declared purpose of the smug bureaucrats was to pass a few resolutions in support of the Wagner Bill, the Black-Cannery Bill and the Guffey Bill, appoint a lobbying committee and go home.

Met with the direct challenge of industry to President Roosevelt to abandon all legislation in any way sympathetic to labor, Bill Green could only regretfully look back on the past and declare: "Better ten thousand times that Congress had never given us Section 7a than that it should be used as an instrument of persecution of those who believed in it."

Matthew Woll reported for the sub-committee. Characteristically enough he spoke of the possibility of labor being "misled" by congress. It was noted at the gathering that Mr. Woll, of strikebreaking fame, forgot to mention the reaction of the workmen in factories and shops when they will find that their right to strike was crippled by the hamstringing provisions of the Wagner Bill.

In contrast to this glorified NRA sponsored by the labor skates, the Toledo delegation exploded its bombshell. Disgusted with this perpetuation of the National Run Around and sick of begging at the back-door of congress, Oliver Meyers called for direct action. Vindicating the ever-growing sentiment of the workers in the country for bold steps, he demanded that the leaders quit playing around with the "typewriter" and called upon the labor unions to "get on the picket line."

The "Gag rule" was the opinion of the Toledo delegates on the proceedings of the conference, strongly reminiscent of similar action in Akron and Detroit.

"Settle the Strike on the Picket Line, Not in Washington," Strikers Slogan

FLINT INVADED

Jamesville, Atlanta Plants on Strike

1. Jim Roland, chairman of the Toledo Chevrolet strike committee, yesterday entered Flint with a flying squad of strikers in an effort to get support of strikers from that quarter. Arrested by the police at labor headquarters, the whole squad was immediately released on pressure from local labor bodies.

2. The Buick local in the Flint plant of General Motors notified the bosses that if their demands and those of the Toledo workers were not met, they would strike Monday morning.

3. The M. E. S. A., independent auto union in Detroit, announces no material from Toledo will be handled by its men while strike is going on.

4. A conference of the 23 auto locals of the A. F. of L. to take up joint strike action and their organization into an industrial union, as proposed by Jim Roland of Toledo, is being discussed for this coming Sunday.

5. A flying squad of Chevrolet strikers has set out for Muncie and Anderson, Indiana to take up contact with workers in G.M.C. plants there.

6. Louis Spivak, leader of workers in the Cleveland Fisher Body plants shut down several days ago, said the men there would not return to work until the Toledo strike was settled.

7. Second Cincinnati G. M. workers remained solid in their sympathy strike called to aid the Toledo walk-out.

8. As we go to press, news reaches us that the Atlanta plants have voted for a walk-out.

Claherty Hits at Akron Rebels

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, O., May 1.—The betrayal of the rubber workers by the American Federation of Labor bureaucracy had three significant results this week which are continuing the demoralization that set in after the sell-out agreement was foisted recently on the big three locals here.

1. The India Tire Co., which has a closed shop of the A. F. of L. union, looked out two hundred workers employed there when the union made wage demands last Saturday, thus continuing the capitalist offensive against organized labor in the tire industry.

2. Coleman C. Claherty, A. F. of L. rubber organizer, who acted with William Green to railroad the agreement on the rubber workers, began a terrific red scare in the locals in an effort to intimidate progressives who are trying to organize definitely against him.

3. Less than ten percent of the workers in the Goodyear union appeared at the Sunday meeting in delecting how the workers are falling away from the union because of their disappointment.

"India Tire" Workers Fight Back

The India rubber workers have set up strong picket lines around the factory aided by the Moagard Unemployed League and have refused to permit even company officials to enter the plant.

Although normally 400 workers are employed at the plant, seasonal decline in the industry reduced the personnel to half that number.

Following an article in the Summit County Labor News by Sherman H. Dalrymple, Goodrich local president, charging the Communists with being "disrupters," etc., Claherty has appeared at the local meetings and threatened expulsion to every "red" discovered.

The attack and red scare obviously are to divert the attention of the rubber workers from the sell-out and swing the resentment of the workers from Claherty to the progressives when they begin attacking him openly.

Heed the Call of Toledo!

By A. J. MUSTE

TOLEDO, April 30.—As this editorial is written on the eve of May Day in Toledo, the picketers march up and down on the line at the Chevrolet plant where not even a telephone operator is permitted to work. Every few minutes the telephone in our headquarters rings and a new and exciting report comes in from the rapidly extending battle-front: Norwood General Motors Plant Out One Hundred Per Cent. All Cleveland General Motors Plants Shut Down For Lack Of Transmissions. Flint Bails Plan To Take Toledo Work There. Will Take Strike Vote Tonight. The Mechanics Education Society Of America (independent union) Will Not Work On Scab Material.

Not since the Haymarket year of 1886 has there been a May Day as significant for the American labor movement as this May Day of 1935, marked by a strike which already involves 15,000 automobile workers, by the prospect of a general strike against at least one great automobile corporation, by the beginning of the show-down fight over the recognition of unionism in the basic industries of the U. S.

How does it happen that the workers of Toledo again act decisively and take their place in the vanguard of labor's battle? How explain the differences between the constant postponement of action in Detroit and in the steel centers, the "sell-out" of the strike of rubber workers in Akron before it got under way, and on the other hand the brilliant achievement of the Toledo workers in shutting down the key plant of General Motors and within one week bringing out over ten thousand G. M. workers in other centers with them? Such things do not come by accident.

On May Day 1934 the Auto-Lite strike in Toledo was dead on its feet because the officers of an infant Federal union passively submitted to an injunction and the leadership of the A. F. of L. could and would teach them no other course. By militant defiance of that injunction the Lucas County Unemployed League and the branch of the Workers Party of the U. S., cooperating with activists in the union revived the strike and paved the way for that night in May when ten thousand workers of Toledo stormed the Auto-Lite plant, drove the sheriff's deputies to cover, fought the militia. Thus a partial victory was wrung from defeat. In the succeeding months that victory was

65 Killed as Filipinos Rise

Wall St. Oppression Is at Bottom of New Revolt

The first audible signs of revolt against the new fake "independence" granted the Philippines by U. S. imperialism resounded around the world this week as 65 Filipino fighters fell in an insurrection led by the Sakdalista party. The casualties resulted from battles fought by Sakdalistas and constabulary detachments at Cabuyao and Santa Rosa in Laguna Province while other clashes occurred in outlying areas of Luzon Island. Manila, the capital, was cut off from the interior for several hours.

The Sakdalistas have been carrying on an active campaign against the "Commonwealth Constitution" which is to be subjected to a plebiscite on May 14. This party of radical agrarian anti-imperialist orientation has considerable following in a number of provinces and had three representatives elected to the Philippine Legislature in last year's elections.

The Philippine revolt follows close on the heels of the intensive agitation around the issue of independence or statehood for Puerto Rico, and is another indication of the extremely precarious internal situation prevailing in Wall Street's colonial possessions, due to the effect of the Cuban revolution on the Spanish speaking colonial countries as well as to the economic situation prevailing in the colonies themselves, where the crisis has penetrated to still greater depths than in the United States proper.

MEXICO CITY (FP).—About 800 striking miners, members of the Mining and Metallurgical Workers Union of Mexico, have decided to start on a hunger march from the state of Jalisco to Mexico City to bring their case to the attention of Pres. Lazaro Cardenas.

The strikers have been out since Feb. 8, when the Amparo Mining Co. and Piedra Bola, Inc. refused to sign wage and working conditions.

Public Backs Omaha Strike

By PAT MURPHY

OMAHA, April 27.—The strike of some 400 employees of the Omaha and Council Bluffs Street Railway Company, seeking higher wages and a closed shop, entered its eighth day at 4 A.M. today. Striking employees continued to picket car barns in Omaha and Council Bluffs.

In Omaha they have put a few cars in operation. These cars have heavy protection screens covering the entire car. From four to eight police ride each car, also a squad car follows each car. Every means is taken to intimidate the strikers and encourage the people to ride the trams. But the citizens as a whole are very indignant and refuse to ride.

The sheriff of Omaha has mobilized all available material to act as strike breakers. The company has apparently run out of local men, and they have resorted to importing men who have been discharged from the service here in the past. Some of these were dismissed for serious offense. The Central Labor Union is going to protest Monday morning to the city council about the sheriff hiring, for scab work, former city employees who are now on pension.

The car barns are surrounded by police and armed sluggers. In Council Bluffs not a tram moves. Public sentiment is all with the strikers. And the strikers are determined to win. We talked to one striker who had 21 years service and in case of disability would be eligible for a pension of $21.00 a month. He said, "We are fighting for our very existence. If we lose, then it looks like we will have to go on relief, but the morale of our men is holding strong. We are out to win."

NEW YORK (FP).—Unemployed workers in March 1935 numbered 9,760,000, according to the employers' National Industrial Conference Board. This is a decrease of 125,000, or 1.3 percent from the preceding month, but an increase of 369,000, or 3.9 percent, over March 1934.

FIGHT SPREADS

Local Votes Support for Daily Paper

Special to New Militant

TOLEDO, Ohio, April 30.—Swift moving storm clouds of labor revolt are spreading darkly throughout the nation over the wide-flung domain of General Motors Corporation. Moving with a precision, speed and power seldom ever displayed in this country, the progressive and militant strike committee of the struck Toledo Chevrolet plant, headed by Jim Roland, brilliant and aggressive young strike leader, twice today landed lightning blows against the massive citadel of Sloan, Rascob, DuPont and Co. and forced the shut-down of the Hue Fisher Body plant in Cleveland, Ohio, and the Chevrolet assembly and Fisher Body plants in Norwood, Ohio, suburb of Cincinnati.

Kidding rough-shod over the stalling and cowardly policies of Bill Green and his official machine, the Toledo strikers, acting through their local strike committee, have already sent strike calls to all locals of the United Automobile Workers Federal Labor Union in G. M. C. plants informing them of the 100 percent walk-out in Toledo and instructing them to take similar steps immediately. Swift moving strike action is expected to close plants in Flint, Mich., St. Louis, Kansas City, Janesville, Wis., Tarrytown, N. Y., Baltimore, Buffalo, Oakland and many other towns shortly. A general auto strike, without sanction of Bill Green, is in the making.

Flint Takes Strike Vote

As this is being written, a strike vote is being taken at the U.A.W.F. L.U., Buick local, in Flint. Representatives of this local conferred today with Toledo strike leaders and indicated that a walk-out is practically certain.

The management of the Cleveland Fisher Body plant forestalled impending strike action for propaganda purposes and shut down the entire factory. They denied this was a "lock-out," but due to lack of materials from the Toledo plant, Cleveland representatives of the auto union appeared this afternoon in Toledo and informed the strike committee that the Cleveland local is on strike until the Toledo strikers' demands are met and that they will not return to work even should the G.M.C. attempt to start up the plant again. Picket lines are being established and strike tactics similar to that now employed in Toledo will be used.

1,700 Out in Norwood

The 100 percent walk-out in Norwood, Ohio came as a result of the personal appeal to the auto workers there made Sunday by Jim Roland and Bill Prior, experienced strike man and organizer of the first mass picket lines around the Toledo plant. In his appeal, Roland urged the Norwood workers to walk out first and then wait for Bill Green's approval. Bolstered by the example of the Toledo strikers, the Norwood workers took his advice, and 1,700 walked out this morning. The present total of strikers is about 13,000, with 9,000 in Cleveland and 2,300 in Toledo.

An extraordinary development in the strike is the resolution of the Toledo strikers, adopted last night, to call upon all General Motors employees to strike and to set up a national joint-action committee composed of representatives of all strike committees to act as a national negotiating committee for the entire strike. The resolution further urges that the contract demanded in Toledo, or one similar, be made the basis for the national demands and that an agreement be made that no settlement be made except on a national basis with no local to return to work until every local agrees to return.

Dillon Tries to Stem Tide

One serious menace to the healthy conduct and development of the strike has been the attempt of the A. F. of L., through its organizers T. N. Taylor and Francis Dillon, to seize the reins of the strike from the strikers themselves and their elected committees. Last Friday night Dillon spoke before a mass

St. Louis Gas
Workers Stand
Firm in Strike

Second Month of Fight
Finds Picket Line Solid

ST. LOUIS.—It is now more than a month since the Gas House workers went on strike. Demanding as one of their major demands the closed shop they are determined to stay out until that and all other demands are granted. "Among the things that have contributed to the successful carrying on of the strike," we quote from one of the issues of the Daily Strike Bulletin, "are: 1. The solidarity of the strikers themselves and the spirit of the rank and file. Not a single union man has gone back to work since the beginning of the strike. 2. The splendid action of the St. Louis Central Trades Council in not permitting the union pipe trades to be utilized by the company and thereby presenting to the public the spectacle of one set of union men scabbing on another. 3. The support of the gas consuming public."

The distribution of gas is being seriously hampered. Water has seeped into the gas mains to the extent that the gas supply is cut off in many parts of the city. The company is becoming desperate. One of the most heartening features of the strike to date was the resolution of the St. Louis Central Trades voting financial support to the Gas House workers. The local unions have agreed on a voluntary assessment of 1 cent a day from each union member in the city. A delegate from the Carpenters union offered an amendment to the effect that all union men have their gas shut off until the strike is settled. The amendment was carried.

"The Gas Company is fighting a losing battle," says the Gas House Worker, the Daily Strike Bulletin, in one of its issues. "It has tried to carry on its business by employing scabs. It has employed thugs to terrorize the strikers. It has tried to frame up our union on a 'bombing' gag. And finally it has resorted to mass arrests of pickets. But all this will avail them nothing. . . . The ground is being cut away from under their feet. The fight is not yet over. Victory still depends on our future struggle. . . . The Union will fight on till the company is brought to its knees—till our battle is won and our demands are granted. The Union stands firm."

Capitol News Letter

The Meaning of the Wagner
Bill — A Noose for Labor

By JACK ELDER

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Senate Committee on Education and Labor has just concluded its prolonged series of hearings on S. 1958: Wagner bill to "outlaw" company unions. No doubt the Committee will report the measure out favorably; but that should hardly be a cause for rejoicing among the rank and file of the labor movement.

First, the bill as written is an invitation to the A. F. of L. to entangle itself more thoroughly than ever before in the complex arbitral machinery for which Section 7a is responsible. The A. F. of L. has plunged into the present network of boards head-over-heels. To the accompaniment of one "moral victory" after another, Green and Co. have succeeded in suppressing all strike movements to date: steel workers, automobile workers, aluminum workers, soft coal workers, and so forth.

Second, although the bill as written is prima facie innocuous, it is likely to be deadly poison to the right to strike before the Senate Committee gets through rewriting it. Do not forget what happened to S. 2926 in 1934. The original draft of the Labor Disputes bill expressly safeguarded the right to strike. The rewritten version—the National Industrial Adjustment Bill—called for compulsory arbitration.

Third, the Labor Relations Bill (in its present form) is not an Administration measure. Despite the wishful thinking of A. F. of L. sympathizers, President Roosevelt is not in favor of outlawing company unions. It may suit the President's convenience for the time being to let it be supposed that he looks on the measure with a kindly eye. But if the President does this, he does so because it is another neat device for bamboozling the "innocents" of the A. F. of L. leadership.

Suppose, however, that the Senate Committee reports the bill out without rewriting it substantially. Suppose the further miracle that the bill is enacted in the face of the President's tacit opposition. What of it? What the bill does is to create the equivalent, for "unfair labor practices," of the Federal Trade Commission for "unfair trade" practices. The Federal Trade Commission throughout its history has been a notorious paralytic, incapable of getting its orders enforced by the courts. There is no reason to suppose that the National Labor Relations Board would be anything more than a like paralytic, except where hamstringing of labor is concerned.

Those who get enthusiastic about the Labor Relations Bill forget that, in the last analysis, all the orders of the Board would be "enforceable and reviewable" by the federal courts. The courts, not the board, would finally decide whether or not an employer was forcing company unions on his hired hands. And there are no more thoroughly convinced enemies of the labor movement, no more ready puppets of the union-busting, open-shop masters, than the federal judiciary in the United States. What the judges did to Section 7a in the Weirton and the Belcher cases, they will also do to S. 1958—if, as, and when enacted.

The official Administration attitude on collective bargaining is revealed by the present draft of the measure to renew the National Industrial Recovery Act for two years more. This draft contains Section 7a verbatim, nothing less, nothing more. It leaves the field clear for company unions, works councils, proportional representation, and all the other devices which Richberg, Johnson, Perkins, Wolman and Roosevelt were able to contrive with the help of anti-labor employers.

Meanwhile, the whole ambitious program for guaranteeing "economic security" (for which the workers of course are expected to pay) has come to a standstill. The entire melange of unemployment insurance, old age pensions and the rest is headed for the scrap-heap. After all the Works Relief bill has gone through, empowering the President to batter down wage-rates wherever convenient to do so. The bill defines $50 a month per family as a living wage. That is "economic security" enough for any wage-earner who can eat the fancy sociological principles of the New Deal.

ECONOMIC SECURITY . . .

The Workers Party in Toledo and Detroit held mass meetings Sunday and Monday nights respectively, addressed by A. J. Muste. A clear presentation was given by Comrade Muste of the issues in the strike, its national significance and the course to be pursued in order to achieve victory. His warning on the dangerous influence of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy has had a powerful and responsive appeal.

Despite the efforts of the capitalist press in Detroit and other auto centers to keep news of the Toledo strike from its pages, word is spreading rapidly. Toledo strikers managed to evade Michigan state police and Detroit police for a sufficient length of time last Friday to place a brief picket line before the General Motors office building in Detroit and spread copies of "Strike Truth" in various G.M.C. plants. Further action in Detroit was halted by the arrest of 19 picketers, who were later released. Word has been received from J. J. Griffin, Detroit district organizer of the Mechanics Educational Society, that the M.E.S.A. has passed a resolution to refuse to handle any materials sent from struck plants and companies. This followed the action of the Toledo local of the M.E.S.A. in adopting a resolution to man the picket-lines if they are called.

meeting of the strikers here and with his usual class-collaboration line spoke in glowing terms of the vice-president of G.M.C., William S. Knudsen, declared that Francis Perkins and President Roosevelt were "behind labor," that the members of the Auto Labor Board had merely "tricked and betrayed Roosevelt," and termed the strike an "action," "protest" and "misunderstanding on both sides."

Knudsen returned Dillon's compliment by a blast in the next morning's paper calling the strike an "arbitrary and lawless act," charging that the strike committee was acting against the wishes of the workers, and asserting flatly that the G.M.C. would sign no contract with the union nor even meet with a union committee "until the men returned to work."

Despite Dillon's attempt to influence the strikers by his misleading statements to rest their case with the government, the strike committee and the strikers are insisting on nothing short of genuine union recognition, a signed contract and direct negotiations with the company. It is generally admitted here that the Auto Labor Board has the approval of Roosevelt and that it was he who personally wrote into the Automobile Code the notorious "merit" and "proportional representation" clauses. Strikers themselves point out that it was Roosevelt who forced the renewal of the Auto Code against the universal protest of organized labor and who could, if he would, remove the so-called "traitors" from the Auto Board.

Tries to Divide Workers

T. N. Taylor, Green puppet and machine-man, has been here for the past week trying to usurp the leadership of the strike and localize it. He had been in Toledo previously for five months attempting to divide the solid and powerful union here into many different locals in each plant, the divisive and ruinous craft policy of the old-line A. F. of L. bosses. The local union would have nothing to do with his policies before. His efforts here now are dangerous in view of the lack of experience of the Chevrolet workers.

The local press, always anxious to select labor leaders for the workers whom the employers can

Swarm into Springfield to Protest Mabie Murder

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—Five thousand pickets, members of the Progressive Miners union, retreated from this city after they had failed to stop the Woodside mine of the Peabody Coal Co. from operating. The sudden swarm of pickets was precipitated by the murder of Edris Mabie, a Progressive miner. Mabie and several other miners were shot down by Ray Edmundson, U.M.W.A. state president, and two other company gunmen, who broke up an Easter day affair at the miners' hall.

Hundreds of miners came from as far south as Saline and Franklin county to join the picket army. For days they swarmed around Springfield, sleeping on floors, eating piece-meal here and there, until finally misleadership on the part of the right wing caused them to leave in disgust.

The miners had a splendid opportunity to see the bankruptcy of the Keck leadership. From the outset of the march Keck's second lieutenants were telling everyone not to mention the officers of the union in connection with the picketing as it might result in their arrest. The miners were flabbergasted at such tactics and they wanted to know what officers in a union were for besides drawing handsome salaries.

Edris Mabie's funeral was truly an impressive affair. Fully ten thousand miners and the Women's Auxiliary members marched solemnly for three miles as an escort to the cortege. A sixty-five piece band from Gillespie, Wilsonville and Bend played at the rites. It took over an hour for the huge funeral procession to pass one given point.

Mabie was employed in one of the Progressive mines. He was the father of five children. Although an avowed right winger he had great courage and most all the hot struggles found him in the heat of the fight. The left wing miners came from many parts of Illinois by the hundreds to pay tribute to this worker, the 18th Progressive miner to die in the long mine war.

LANG-BEARSTIAN SOCIALIST

The latest exhibition of one of the Forward gang, a leader among the Old Guard of the Socialist Party is enough to make any worker in or outside of the Socialist ranks turn sick with disgust.

We refer to the series of articles—or should we rather say filth—running in the N. Y. Evening Journal. Not even a lurid minded editor of a Hearst Sunday magazine supplement could have conjured up so much horror and indecency to satisfy the depraved tastes of his thrill-seeking clientele.

A sense of respect for the tastes of our readers forbids us to quote at length from these atrocity stories. Just a scanning of the heads and sn-bends should give one an inkling as to the tripe Mr. Lang is dispensing with the good wishes of his editors, Abraham Cahan and Willy Randolph Hearst. "6,000,000 Dead in Ukraine," "Eat Children," "Graves Opened," "Red Army Soldiers Turn Bandits," etc., etc.

This hysterical yapping at the first workers' state, the Soviet Union, will undoubtedly defeat its own ends. But it marks again the necessity for vigilance and revolutionary mobilization for the defense of the Soviet Union. Only an aroused international working class can fulfill that defense!

The national committee of the Socialist Party has issued a statement criticizing Lang and disclaiming responsibility for the articles. The "Militants" have called for Lang's expulsion from the party. As a "preventive" step James O'neal has preferred charges against his colleague—so that they could pass a light sentence.

IN THE UNIONS

By KARL LORE

The fight at the Colt's Patent Firearms Company of Hartford, Conn. is one of the most significant labor battles that have come up the pike in some time. Its great importance is widely recognized in the trade union movement of New England. The strategy board of the Hartford Central Labor Union has threatened a general strike and authorization to go ahead has already been secured from the state Federation of Labor. No strike in some time has received the financial support from unions in Connecticut and Massachusetts in particular, that this struggle has called forth.

The issue is the basic one of union recognition. Months of negotiations left the union just as much in the soup as ever. The company would not recognize the right of its employees to organize into unions of their own choosing. A powerful and ruthless Manufacturers' Association is very much on the job and has done more than its share in stirring up sentiment for a city-wide walk-out.

A particularly interesting angle to the Colt strike is the revealing picture it paints of the NRA swindle. Most of Colt's business is with the government and if Uncle Sam were to withdraw its orders, the company would be in a bad way. The strikers demanded that the firm's Blue NRA Eagle be taken away for violation of Section 7a. The National Labor Board ruled to that effect and, according to the rules, government buying of Colt products should have automatically ceased. But Donald Richberg rushed into the breach to act as the manufacturer's fair haired boy once more. He has refused to notify government departments of the facts and U.S.A. purchase of Colt goods proceeds merrily.

Weakness . . .

The strike is a militant one and the labor movement seems remarkably well united behind it. But there is a serious weakness in the situation which, though not apparent as yet, may do great harm before the last chapter is written.

There are four unions in the Colt plant which are conducting the strike jointly. Two of them are Federal Labor Unions which take in the mass of the workers. The others are craft locals affiliated to American Federation of Labor internationalists. In order to coordinate the activities of these four, a plant council was set up. Representation on this Council, however, is not on the basis of proportional representation. The craft locals which represent a mere handful of the Colt workers, nevertheless have a vote equal to that of the two Federal Unions which embrace the unskilled and production workers. There seems, at present, to be no conflict among the unions. But this punk imitation of industrial unionism must be shown up for what it really is. Inevitably it will produce division and weakness in the ranks. The issue must be squarely faced and fought by the progressive and militant elements in the unions everywhere.

Shoe Workers . . .

One union of the shoe workers. It has been the goal of all intelligent unionists in the industry for years. A long step toward the achievement of the goal was the organization of the United Shoe and Leather Workers, brought into being by amalgamation of 5 independent unions in the industry. But some organizations stayed outside. And the A.F. of L. Boot and Shoe Workers would have no part in the unity movement.

Early in the year a conference held in Washington of every important labor group in the industry and including the Boot and Shoe Workers agreed on the necessity of unification. The United Shoe and Leather Workers posed three points as a minimum basis for amalgamation. They called for a progressive union democratically controlled by its membership; the right of referendum and recall with officials elected by referendum and regular conventions.

But the Boot and Shoe couldn't take it. A later meeting of their Executive Board called off the negotiations for the unity and, in effect, invited the membership of the other groups to join them as a substitute for amalgamation.

No Fights . . .

An attempt was made to at least come to an understanding which would end the bitter fights between the various organizations. "At an informal meeting held on March 15 at which several officials of the B. & S. and the heads of the independent Unions were present," reports the United Shoe and Leather Worker, "a sort of gentleman's agreement was suggested whereby each organization would undertake not to interfere with the organization activities of the other." Mr. Mara (chief of the Boot and Shoe) even sent a letter to all his locals in which he declared that where there was evidence of an organizing campaign by an independent group, no special efforts be made to discourage or disrupt them.

No Gentleman . . .

But Mr. Mara turns out to be no gentleman. The United now charges that the A. F. of L. union, with the approach of the slack season, is busily engaged in trying to persuade manufacturers to break their agreements with the independent and sign up with the Boot and Shoe. In Haverhill, Mass. they have induced the Emerson Shoe Company to get out from under its agreement by reorganizing and discharging the United members. Other bosses are being coaxed to move from their present locations for the same purpose. The Boot and Shoe offers lower wages and more docile labor. It has always relied chiefly on the union label to get contracts with manufacturers. Instead of genuine organization work, they have used the prestige and the buying power of the organized labor movement to set up a neat little racket all of their own. The movement for unification is proceeding, however. The various independent groups are continuing negotiations. It is probable that a real united organization will be too strong for the bureaucrats of the Federation union to withstand. The amalgamation movement seems to have taken real hold in this one industry at least. May its tribe increase. . . .

MARCH OF EVENTS

The Road to Power . . .

In the current issue of the New Leader appears an article by the Menshevik, Abramowitsch, on "Socialism on the Road to Power." Here reformist Socialism once more lifts its head and tries to create the impression that it may revive and come to life. Two currents in the rapidly moving world scene create the illusion among those like Abramowitsch, cast on the rubbish heap of history, that it is yet possible for them to come into their own. The first is the assumption of office in the so-called "democratic" countries by labor parties. Thus "labor" governments have come into power in the three Scandinavian countries; the labor party enters the national concentration government in Belgium; and finally in England events foreshadow a new Labor Party government. True, says Abramowitsch, the governments do not have a majority in parliament and hence "do not place before themselves the task of immediate realization of Socialism." Their immediate task is to supply "correctives" for capitalism. Such reforms can no longer be carried out by capitalism itself. The job of salvaging capitalism must be performed by the proletariat "through the instrumentalities of its own parties" and it is in this sense that these parties must take "power"; that is, take over responsibility for the bourgeois government and the bourgeois, not the Socialist, system of society!

The Betrayals . . .

Abramowitsch knows quite well the specific weight of the Scandinavian countries as against Germany. He recognizes in passing the "severe blow" dealt to international Socialism by the victory of Hitler. But he dare not stop to analyze the lessons of that blow, nor to apportion the responsibility for the frightful defeat of the German workers organized in the strongest Social Democratic party in the world. He is consoled by the misery to which the masses have been driven by the crisis. "The crisis now shaking the edifice of capitalism to its very foundation, emphasizing more clearly than ever the bankruptcy of capitalism, has compensated to a considerable degree the defeat suffered by Socialism in Central Europe." The reformist and parliamentary cretins, misleading the workers and preventing their taking power, thereby forcing them to undergo the wretchedness and suffering of a decaying capitalist system, feel compensated by this very misery! And when the Abramowitsches see signs of a recrudescence of the class struggle, they propose to play the game once more as in Germany, as though Hitler did not exist, as though the working class had learned nothing from its experience. "This process of recovery is taking place in countries where democracy is firmly in power, and on a platform of reformism and coalition with democratic-bourgeois parties." In short, he approves of the very process which creates illusions among the workers, which lulls them into passivity and disarms them at the very moment when fascism is making its bid for power (and not with votes!) in every country in Europe. The approaching imperialist war threatens the workers and all their democratic rights, gained through years of struggle and at untold sacrifice. Abramowitsch gives lip service to the fact that only the forces of Socialism can prevent war. And then this social chauvinist adds, in preparation for the actuality: "And only the working class, as the basic power upon which modern industry rests, can help win a war should it be impossible to avert it. Thus do the reformists guarantee their next betrayal in advance, guarantee national defense to uphold the capitalist system. . . .

Abramowitsch . . .

The second current that gives courage to the Mensheviks is the trend of the Stalinist bureaucracy in the Soviet Union. The complete swing to the right, the concessions made to the peasants, the blow dealt to the real Marxists have gained the applause of the Mensheviks. Abramowitsch encourages this trend and wants to see it go even further. After stating that the problem of power in Russia has not been solved, despite appearances, he asks for more concessions and greater steps to the right. "The democratization of the Soviet regime, conciliation (through compromise) upon abandonment of Utopianism) with the basic forces of the peasantry (read kulaks) and the proletariat (read the upper strata) is the immediate task in the problem of the 'road to power' in Russia." A reconciliation with the Mensheviks is guardedly proposed. This would strengthen "the revolutionary government" as well as the Socialist proletariat of Europe. The whole tenor of the remarks on the Soviet Union is to soften the struggle against Stalin, to ask further moves to the right from the bureaucracy, and on this basis to promise to "defend the Soviet Union." Such defense of the Soviet Union as would be made by the Mensheviks would mean the end of the Soviets. The founders of the Soviets, Lenin and Trotsky, were convinced that the October Revolution would not survive without the support of a proletarian revolution in the West. Stalinism is the living proof of the degeneration of the October Revolution, its downgrading, without that support. The failure to give that support, the defeat of the proletarian revolution in the West, can be laid at the door of the reformist Socialists. By continuing their historic role, they propose to end the last vestiges of October. It still remains true that only a revolution in one of the advanced countries can save the October Soviet Revolution. But that is the task, not of the Second or Third, but of the Fourth International.

In the Service of His Majesty

COPENHAGEN.—It was not of its own initiative nor by means of class struggle action that the Norwegian Labor Party came to power. The farmers' party withdrew support from the Mowinckel government and all of a sudden the Labor Party found that power had fallen right into its lap. But what sort of power was it? That is the point to be examined.

"The present government has no majority in this hall, but it is nevertheless a parliamentary government and will naturally consider it its duty, in this question as in all others, to carry out the will of the Storting as long as it holds its place."

The above was the declaration made in the Norwegian chamber (Storting) by Defense Minister Mowinckel of the Labor government. The whole program of the Labor government is practically summed up in these words. The Labor government is nothing more than the executive organ of the bourgeois-parliamentary majority. A more promising situation than this the Norwegian bourgeoisie could hardly imagine! It continues to determine the political course in the future, but leaves the responsibility with the Labor Party. And in their agitation, the bourgeois parties enjoy a free hand while the Labor party is open to attack from all sides.

Voting the King's Stipend

Here are a few examples of the government policy as it works out in practice.

The former Mowinckel government had already worked out the budget. Now the Labor government takes over this same budget—with several insignificant changes in the form of concessions to the farmers' party—that is, it now votes for most of the items in the budget which it previously voted against. Truly, a grotesque situation.

In monarchies it is the custom to deal first with the king's stipend. While the Labor party used to move every year in the past for a reduction of the king's stipend, this year the whole Storting fraction of the N.A.P. (Norv. Arbeider Partiet) voted to a man for the originally proposed 900,000 Kroner.

In the same manner, it unanimously approved the budget for the state police which it had opposed even in the budget commission. The state police, formerly nicknamed the "white guard" by the Labor Party, made itself particularly hateful to the Norwegian workers by its murderous assault on the striking forest workers in 1927. Today the Labor Party is assuming the duty of maintaining the "white guard" in existence.

Just to show that we haven't lost our sense of humor, we want to quote from the editorial in the Arbeiderbladet by the real leader of the N.A.P., Traaen, in which he defends this policy:

"The royal stipend was established by contract before he (the king) came here. He wanted to be assured of a regular salary which we would be legally responsible for. When the Labor Party voted for a smaller salary on previous occasions, it did not do so at any time as a demonstration against the king—because there is no cause for that—but against the maneuvers of Christian Michelsen, Wedel Jarlsberg and the other bourgeois politicians carried on in 1905 (1). This demonstration had its uses. It underscored our views of all the events that took place in the summer of 1905. But there are no grounds for continuing it now, that is why we have given up this demonstration. But it is self-evident that the party has in no way given up its basic republican principles."

New Uses for Cops
As for the state police, the editorial writer assures us it will only be utilized to regulate intoxication and traffic. And therefore everything is in the best of order. That is how the republican revolutionary Labor party behaves the moment power falls into its lap. It does not even occur to it that a king can be deposed. The only thing they have against the bourgeoisie is that it did not procure a cheaper king for the Norwegians after the dissolution of the royal Swedish-Norwegian union.

But what should the Norwegian government do? In order to guard ourselves against the accusation of being negative in our criticism and of wanting to transplant the Russian revolution schematically to Norway, we wish to make the following remarks: In the first place, it was the duty of the Labor Party after its electoral victory in 1933, to force its way into the government through extra-parliamentary struggle and not to wait until the parliamentary constellation would throw it into its lap.

However, to proceed from the accomplished fact—the Labor government has been formed. In the Storting there is a small bourgeois minority whose policy undoubtedly runs counter to the will of 90 per cent of the Norwegian people—the workers, the small farmers, the seamen, the fishermen. In the fall of the past year the Norwegian trades union congress met. It gave evidence to a splendid class spirit and demanded the formation of a workers' government.

Importance of Trades Unions
The trades unions are 200,000 members strong; Norway has a population of 2,800,000. If we add to the trades union members their families, they represent almost a third of the nation—its laboring, its productive section. Therefore, in order to create a counter weight to the reactionary majority in parliament, the government ought to first of all, call a permanent trades union congress into session. In the small towns and villages, the farmers and fishermen should then be called upon to elect their delegates to this trades union congress.

In this manner direct, popular representation could be created to express the will of the overwhelming majority of the Norwegian people. To this congress, the government could then propose the following measures: the nationalization of the banks, the introduction of workers control of production, aiming toward the independent administration of the factories by the workers, the confiscation of the landed estates, the introduction of a radically graduated property and income tax, the liberation of the small farmers from their mortgage and debt burdens, the organization of immediate relief measures for the needy fishermen, etc., etc.

There can be no doubt that under the influence of the radical trades union section, such a "Workers, Farmers and Fishermen's Congress" would support the government measures. After that, these measures could be laid before the Storting. Should they meet with rejection by this body, the Storting could be dissolved with the full support of the workers' congress. If the king opposed this policy—as most likely he would—the government could confidently proceed to depose the king. The responsibility for the use of arms could be placed squarely upon the shoulders of the opposition. Internationally, the difficulties of the situation would be more than offset by the enthusiasm that Socialist measures in Norway would arouse in the other Scandinavian countries and in the rest of Europe.

But these miserable "revolutionaries" of the N.A.P. cannot and will not recognize this sure road to the proletarian revolution in Scandinavia. Dissatisfaction in the party ranks and among the workers is growing constantly. But there is no group to give this revolutionary unrest expression, to raise its voice for the revolutionary way out. That increases the danger that dissatisfaction may turn into mistrust for the labor movement as such and thus pave the way for Fascist agitation. The need for a revolutionary group in Norway is of a transcendent importance.

(Unless we are greatly mistaken, the N.A.P. is still in close alliance with the "revolutionary" I.L.P., the S.A.P. and the so-called London Amsterdam Bureau. Some of these people will probably remember how they forsook a firm course towards the Fourth International in order to be with a mass party like the N.A.P. Did they reckon the king into the bargain also?)

police officers. The technique is different, the aim the same.

The next days and weeks may bring us concrete information of those against whom the Stalinist frame-up was directed this time. But, if the number of new victims is to be reduced to a minimum, it is necessary to begin a campaign to expose a new amalgam and its authors.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

F. H. NEW CASTLE—
Question: Is not the economy of fascism, as well as that of the Soviet Union, planned, i.e., are not the capitalists, forced to surrender their wealth to the government which operates it for all society, so that the economy is neither capitalist nor socialist? Does not the "New Deal," in tending towards this, lead to a planned economy?

Answer: Capitalist production is commodity production, i.e., the production of things for exchange (or sale), and so long as capitalism exists, so must the latter. The essence of this form of production is competition and the creation of goods for an unknown market. If competition did not exist between buyers and sellers, one with the other, there would be no way of arriving at prices, and the whole basis for capitalism would collapse.

A planned economy, however, can be conceived only if competition between the producers is eliminated and production organized by a central management, which knows the ultimate destination of all goods produced and has the power of controlling the amount of products to be made and the manner in which they are to be distributed. This, however would no longer be capitalism. It is true that monopoly does away, at least partly, with competition within certain industries, but this only aggravates it by raising the struggle between small industries to a contest between giants.

Under capitalism, therefore, and this applies to the "New Deal," planned economy is impossible so that the touchstone to the problem is this: in order to plan economy, capitalism must be abolished.

As even a superficial examination shows, fascism does not stand between capitalism and socialist society, but is capitalist society, so that a planned economy is excluded. The stock market remains, wage labor remains; the banks, factories, etc. all are in the hands of finance capital, as in bourgeois-democratic society. What appears here as "planning" consists in the fact that the state power, which, in class society, is always the agent of the class which owns the means of production, not only consistently suppresses and maintains in an amorphous state all organizations which might be used against it, particularly those of the working class (trade unions, political parties, etc.), but also directly suppresses those smaller capitalist competitors who are ruined under bourgeois democracy by more indirect methods, (e.g., lower prices, depriving of credits, raw materials, etc.). On the surface, therefore, it may appear that the capitalists are also being regulated and as though the government is being operated in the interests of "society," whereas the suppression is, in reality, carried out in the interests of a numerically small financial oligarchy which manages to keep its existence and identity successfully in the background.

The only social form, standing between capitalism and socialism, is the dictatorship of the proletariat, the form of state power in the Soviet Union, and only in that country is planned economy, made realizable by the expropriation of the capitalists and landlords, possible. This statement must be qualified because a COMPLETELY planned economy can be achieved only in a SOCIALIST society. The political conditions exist in the Soviet Union for organizing production along Socialist lines, but the economy of that country and the world are inseparably linked, so that the planning, subject to the unknown fluctuations and crises of the capitalist world, is necessarily limited. Humanity will know a completely planned economy, free of unknown social upsets only if and when the international Socialist society will become a historical fact.

"Strength of the Soviet Union!" Just as delighted as they must be when they contemplate the fact that the commander of the forces directly harassing them in Northern Kwelchow is none other than Hsueh Yoh, the Kuomintang officer who in April 1927 was sufficiently under the influence of his pro-Communist troops to offer his forces to the C. P. Central Committee to oppose the impending coup of Chiang Kai-shek. But under the orders of the Stalinized Comintern, the C. P. rejected his offer for fear of "provoking" Chiang! More mindless irony still!

Nothing can cover the ugly nakedness of this latest proof of the cynical contempt in which Stalin's representatives regard the deepest sensibilities of the workers of other countries. But let Stalin entertain the butchers of the workers and let the Chinese Stalinists drink the bitter draught and keep still. The Chinese Bolshevik-Leninists have their own work to do! —LO SEN

Bolshevik-Leninists in U.S.S.R. Face New Frame-Up

By L. TROTSKY

On January 18, 1935, I wrote on the question of the Zinoviev affair: "It would be criminal light-mindedness to think that Stalin has renounced his attempts to frame us up in some new 'affair' cooked up by the G.P.U. or its foreign agents. Stalin has no other method of struggle against us."

To be sure, the threat of such a new amalgam is hanging over the heads of our friends in the U.S.S.R. Its preparation is filthy and abominable. But that indeed does not hinder it from opening the road to bloody repressions against the Bolsheviks and their relations.

On March 20, Pravda published reports on the expulsion from Leningrad of old nobles, big industrialists, landed proprietors, judges and czarist police officers, in all 1,074 individuals. The report added: "Part of the exiles are indicted . . . for activity against the State in the interest of foreign nations."

We completely omit here the question of how, 18 years after October, there could be found in Leningrad more than one thousand dangerous representatives of old Czarist Russia. Does this mean that the G.P.U., while hunting down and exterminating the Leninists, had not noticed the class enemies?

Or does it mean that the thousand mentioned above did not previously represent any danger and had raised their heads only now after the Stalinist regime has led to terrorist acts inside the party and to bloody mass repressions against the party youth. In either case, the official information leaves no doubt as to the personalities against whom the Leningrad purging was directed: all the 1,074 individuals belonged unmistakably to strata of the former ruling classes and the Czarist bureaucracy.

But five days later, in Pravda of March 25, we already find a new version; on the question of the arrests and deportations, it says the following, word for word:

"The foul dogs of the Trotskyists, the Zinovievists, the old princes, counts, gendarmes, all this refuse, which acted in concert in an attempt to undermine the foundations of our state."

Thus, among the 1,074 people exiled and indicted, and at their head were to be found "Trotskyists and Zinovievists" who acted "in concert" with the former ministers and Czarist police officers. But why then were the group of Trotskyists and Zinovievists completely omitted from the official report of March 20, which gave a precise enumeration of all those expelled and indicted? It is absolutely clear: the laboratory of amalgams had carried a "correction" to the official information several days later: the former police agents, they aver, acted in concert with the Trotskyists and Zinovievists, which they had forgotten, God knows why, five days earlier.

Besides this unexpected "correction," they carry another not unimportant qualification, concerning the scope of the crime. The March 20 report says that the nobles and the police officers acted in the "interest (?) of foreign nations." The vagueness of this formula is self-evident. We have too close at heart the cause of the international working class and its need for the Fourth International to permit any trifling, or to lend our name and prestige as a cover for elements who attack the aims and policies of these groups who are the outstanding proponents of the Fourth International.

For the Fourth International. For a new revolutionary Youth International.

understood. March 25th Pravda, referring to the Trotskyists and the nobles who "acted in concert," uses a much more exact formula: they worked, it states, "according to the instructions of foreign information bureaus." Thus, in the span of five days, these miserable falsifiers permit us to see with the naked eye the beginning and the end of the new intrigue, which assuredly is not the last.

Only consummate idiots could think that Pravda has merely shown an excess of polemical zeal against the "Trotskyists," by adding lies and calumnies which are superfluous in the account. No, Pravda is not "Humanite." Behind Pravda is the G.P.U. The editors of the Pravda do not write what ever comes into their head; they act on instructions from specific institutions. The March 25th article is direct evidence that in five days it was decided to prepare new bloody repressions against the oppositionists and since there was no convenient terrorist act at hand, Pravda was instructed to link this newest extermination of Bolsheviks to the measures taken against the old proprietors, nobles and police officers.

We speak of new repressions: have they already taken place or do they merely threaten? We do not know that. It is highly possible that the cowardly article in the March 25 Pravda might be, after a fashion, an anonymous obituary for Leninists who have already been shot: it is also possible, that this is only a preparation for bloody repressions. In any case, it is clear that Stalin is repairing the setback of the Leningrad G.P.U.: the amalgam with the Leningrad G.P.U. missed fire—so he substitutes for it an amalgam with nobles and

Pouring Salt on the Wounds of China's Oppressed Masses

SHANGHAI.—Almost exactly 8 years ago Stalin's "bloc of four classes" led the workers of Shanghai on the morrow of their victorious insurrection, under the broad swords of Chiang Kai-shek's executioners. Chief of the murderous squads which patrolled the streets with their heavy blades and Mausers was Yang Hu, later rewarded with the command of the Shanghai garrison. Chief organizers of the attack on the workers during the night of April 12 were Hwang Ching-ung and Tu Yueh-sen, notorious uncrowned kings of the Shanghai gang world. Since then these three men have assumed direct responsibility for the frightful white terror waged against workers and all revolutionaries in the Shanghai area.

Last month another one of those mindless ironies which have accompanied the theory of socialism in one country completed a new point in China's Stalin cycle. Yang Hu, Hwang Ching-ung and Tu Yueh-sen were received on February 16 at the local Soviet Consulate General by scraping, smirking Soviet officials. Together with a coterie of notorious henchmen of Chiang Kai-shek, they took their places at the luncheon table, honored guests of the consular representative of the proletarian fatherland.

Banquet for Concubine
And the occasion? Perhaps it was another one of those affairs, like Radek's love feast with Filand-ski, justified by "Friends of the Soviet Union" on grounds of "high policy" and "diplomatic necessity"? No, it was a farewell luncheon to Mei Lan-fang, exponent of China's cob-web-ridden feudal dramatic art and darling protégé of the most reactionary cliques in the country, who together with "Butterfly" Wu, former mistress of Chang Hsueh-liang, movie star and one of the most decadent and hideous ornaments of Chinese bourgeois society, had been specially invited to Moscow by Stalin's Government. Stalin even sent a ship down from Vladivostok to hasten them on their way.

(Not long ago one of the founders and best fighters of the Communist Party of a certain colonial country was forced to flee, made his way to Shanghai and invoked the aid of the Soviet consulate for passage on one of the Soviet steamers to Vladivostok. His identification was unimpeachable and his plight desperate. But the Soviet officials threw him out to the mercies of the police-infested streets. All efforts by local Communist friends to get him aboard a Soviet steamer were frustrated because, prithce, he lacked a passport in proper order! But Stalin can send a whole steamer for Chang Hsueh-liang's whore!)
Irony of Fate

The Chinese Communist Party was relieved of the necessity of explaining this nauseating performance to the workers of Shanghai for it no longer has access to even the smallest section of the Shanghai proletariat. Perhaps the remains of the Stalinist apparatus was able to broadcast the happy news to the peasant armies, fighting desperately for their lives against pursuing Kuomintang forces in West China! How the peasant leaders would have been delighted with this new testimony to the

S. Y. L. Flays Youth Buro Rep. for Stand at Paris Meet

(Ed. Note.—We have been requested by the National Committee of the Spartacus Youth League to publish the following open letter.) . . .

April 19, 1935
To the International Bureau of Revolutionary Youth Organizations, Stockholm.
Comrades:

The Spartacus Youth League of America, youth section of the Workers Party of the United States, despite the handicap of distance, follows with keen interest the development abroad of the movement for the building of the Fourth International. It was with the sole desire of participating actively in the international field in every way possible that offered a means to further this most important work of a time, that our organization adhered to the Stockholm Bureau, the International Bureau of Revolutionary Youth Organizations. In order to keep our members actively informed on international questions and the work of the Bureau we have published and will continue to publish, the bulletin of the International Bureau in the English language. We have taken it upon ourselves to supply all English speaking countries with the bulletin (England, Australia, Canada, etc.). For the purpose of independently participating in all decisions of the Bureau we established regular connections through communications. Our attitude toward the Bureau and all that we have done in connection with it was predicated upon the real usefulness of the Bureau in helping to pave the road to the Fourth International, the necessary instrumentality for guiding the world proletariat to victory against reactionary capitalism.

Having taken these great steps forward it is not hard to imagine our feelings when we learn that at the recent Paris conference of the International Labor Alliance, the representative of the Stockholm Bureau, our "representative" also found it possible to utilize this occasion to attack vigorously and solely those representatives who were defending the need of the Fourth International. Our Dutch comrades Sneevliet and Schmidt were the most authoritative and outstanding spokesmen for the new International. The attack made on them was not personal but rather, in our view, a calculated blow at the ideas of the new Fourth International.

The fact that the representative of the Stockholm youth bureau was compelled by discipline to vote for the resolution in favor of the new International places the matter in no better light. An attack on the upholders of the need of a Fourth International, from those within its ranks, is an act of treachery and is not to be tolerated for one moment. As the representative of the Youth Bureau, his attack upon the upholders of the idea of the new International (Sneevliet and Schmidt) is interpreted as the official position of the Bureau and of all the Youth organizations affiliated to it. We wish to state that we dissociate ourselves from and condemn most emphatically the intolerable conduct of the representative of our Bureau at the Paris conference. We further demand that there be no repetition of this act. We record this fact publicly so that there be no question of our position.

How does it happen that the Stockholm Bureau, founded for the purpose of aiding the movement for the Fourth International, by gathering together the Youth forces of the world to ultimately organize the youth section of this Fourth International, could nevertheless send as its spokesman to Paris one who demonstrates in actuality such hostility to these basic ideas? To us the only explanation lies in the constitution of the Secretariat.

We here are under the impression that back of the Paris incident lies a completely false relationship of forces in the Secretariat: a combination of S.A.P. and Swedish youth leaders against the so-called "Trotskyites" who are faithful proponents of the Fourth International. We could have little to say if this representation reflected accurately the relationship of forces of the youth organizations constituting our Bureau. But that is far from the case. When we consider the real youth forces at the present time we think at once, in addition to those already represented on the bureau, of the youth section of the newly formed Dutch party (out of the fusion of the O.S.P. with the R.S.P.); of the French youth forming a part of the Bolshevik-Leninist fraction in the S.F.I.O. which exerts wide influence in the Federation of the Seine; of the Belgian Youth with deep roots in the J.G.S. Nor do we fail to add to these our own organization (the Spartacus Youth League of America) whose influence and strength continues to grow daily as indicated by the success of our numerous projects and by the fact that the membership of the organization has been far more than doubled in the past three months.

It is our decided opinion that the Bureau, if it is to mean anything, if it is to continue to serve as an apparatus for the Fourth International, must be immediately reorganized to take account of these influential sections. Accordingly we demand the immediate addition of two members to the secretariat; namely, a representative from the Dutch organization and one from the French. The new secretariat of five, we further demand, must be permitted to select its own residence and its own staff. Naturally we demand at the same time, as being constituted likewise on a false basis, the liquidation of the at present useless sub-bureau at Paris.

We request that an answer be given at once to our demands. What further steps we shall take depends entirely on your reply. The situation is at present utterly intoler-

Local 574 Under Fire Again

The revocation of the charter of Minneapolis Local 574 by Tobin, the reactionary president of the Teamsters' International, and the attempt, by this simple trick, to "outlaw" the union, coincides with a new conspiracy of the bosses to rob the Minneapolis labor movement of the gains made in the great strikes of 1934.

Local 574 was beyond all question the leader and the inspiring and organizing force of the resurgent movement which put trade unionism on its feet in Minneapolis. Naturally, therefore, the new maneuver of the notorious Citizens' Alliance, operating this time through a stooge organization known as the "Committee of 100," is directed first of all at the stronghold of unionism represented by Local 574. The new conspiracy was pretty well shattered by premature exposure and the savage counter attack of the progressive union forces. Tobin's perfidious action is designed to bolster up the sagging front of the Citizens' Alliance, and most probably was taken in direct agreement with this malodorous association of union haters.

The issue presented here is one of paramount importance to the labor movement of Minneapolis, for its fate is directly involved in the outcome of the new attempt to isolate and destroy the mighty local of Drivers, Helpers and Inside workers. The strategy, now, as in 1934, is to break 574, then crush the other unions one by one; and from the standpoint of the bosses it is a pretty good strategy. But this is all too obvious, and the wide-awake unionists of Minneapolis understand it clearly. They rallied around Local 574 in the strikes of last year and helped to carry it to victory. From all accounts they are responding to the present onslaught with the same essential solidarity. This gives the brightest prospect for another brilliant labor victory and another formidable advance of the cause of unionism in Minneapolis when the smoke of the present battle clears away.

Beyond that, the attempt to "outlaw" Local 574 is a matter of profound concern to the labor movement at large, especially to the unions of newly organized workers. The latter, attempting correctly to exist within the framework of the general labor movement represented by the A. F. of L., are confronted with a dilemma. If they trust to the policies and the leadership of the official heads of the A. F. of L. they get nothing but the run-around. Their strikes are headed off by shameful capitulations masked as "settlements" or, if strikes break out, they are cut to pieces and betrayed.

The bitter experiences of the steel, textile, auto and rubber workers, to mention only a few outstanding examples, all testify to the truth that the new unions have nothing whatever to gain on this road. The workers are beginning to realize this in increasing numbers. The Toledo strike, now spreading to other points, is proof of a deep-seated determination of the workers in the new unions to take things into their own hands and to act on their own account.

On the other hand, the unions which take the course of direct struggle to enforce their demands, as Local 574 did with such exemplary militancy, run straight up against the irreconcilable antagonism of the reactionary bureaucracy. If Green, Tobin and Co. cannot prevent strikes they try to break them; if they cannot control the unions they try to "outlaw" them.

What is happening at Minneapolis today will be repeated on a wide scale in the next rise of the class struggle. It is sheer utopianism to expect anything else; the part of wisdom is to understand what is coming and to prepare for it. The case-hardened agents of capital in the labor movement, tied with a thousand threads to the ruling interests, are incapable of any real struggle against them and completely devoid of any faith in the masses. They interpret—and not without good reason—every serious struggle of the workers against the bosses as implicitly a struggle against them.

These struggles are bound to increase and multiply; there is no other way for the workers to protect themselves. The Government will then throw off its mask of benevolence toward the unions and come out openly as a strike breaker. The labor betrayers will supplement this policy by wholesale expulsions of individual militants and whole union organizations. It is absolutely impossible to have a correct trade union policy if this perspective is not taken into account.

The case of local 574 is a test of the capacity of militants to cope with one of the key problems of strategy in the trade union movements. Alert militants in all parts of the country are bound to follow this development closely to see how the attack is met in Minneapolis. Local 574 showed the world how to conduct militant strikes against the heaviest odds and to come out victorious. The simple chronicle of the great battles waged under its banner in 1934 would constitute a handbook of modern strike strategy. And from all appearances the Minneapolis militants are also setting the pace and showing the way for a correct and effective struggle against the expulsion policy of a reactionary, boss-serving officialdom.

Two simple rules govern their strategy, each of equal importance.

First, they do not take the treacherous attack of Tobin lying down. They do not capitulate or give way to despair. They are not taken by surprise; the iron militants of Local 574 knew long ago that Tobin and his ilk are nothing but class enemies disguised as labor leaders. Nothing but treachery was expected of Tobin.

They prepared the ranks for the conspiracy, and Tobin's probable part in it, and took the offensive to mobilize the labor movement for the fight in good time. The fixed policy at Minneapolis is to fight for every position and not to give anything away. Without this spirit no real progress is possible anywhere in the labor movement.

Second, the union does not run away from the Teamsters' International and the A. F. of L. merely because a panic-stricken bureaucrat wants to get rid of them. They appeal against the expulsion, and announce their intention to fight it out at every step and through every channel of appeal, up to the highest bodies of the A. F. of L.

Meantime they take their case to the Central Labor Union in Minneapolis, appeal directly to every affiliated local union for support and aid in their fight for reinstatement, and prepare to carry the fight to the State Federation of Labor Convention. The answer of Local 574 to the command of a tyrant to get out of the International and the A. F. of L. is an intensified campaign deeper into the other locals of the International and the A. F. of L. unions generally, especially the unions of Minneapolis and the State of Minnesota.

This tactic goes hand in hand with an organizing and recruiting campaign to bring every eligible worker into the union, a militant campaign of agitation against the conspiracy of the bosses and the traitor president of the Teamsters' International, and a notice to the world that the union, which was built into a power of labor at the cost of great sacrifices and not a little blood, is going to fight to the last ditch to maintain its position as the union of the Minneapolis Drivers, Helpers and Inside Workers.

With the present mood of the laboring masses who are animated more and more by the feeling that they have nothing to lose, such a spirit and tactic is the prescription for labor success and advancement. The bosses and their agents in the labor movement who have provoked the new struggle in Minneapolis may get the surprise of their lives. There is the making of a magnificent labor victory there which can be no less an inspiration and a guide to other unions than the heroic strike victories of 1934. The Minneapolis militants are writing a bright new chapter of labor history which will take its place in the text book of the struggle against capitalism and its agents in the trade union movement. In 1935 as in 1934 Minneapolis and Toledo lead the way.

5,000 in Cleveland
May First Parade

CLEVELAND, O., May 1.—Approximately 5,000 workers turned out to Public Square to celebrate May Day. It was a real united front demonstration, the first that Cleveland has seen for some years. The Socialist Party, the Communist Party, the Workers Party, the I.W.O., and several rank and file unions participated in the meeting at Public Square and the parade that followed through the main streets of the city.

The speakers stressed the importance of the fact that a real united front of labor had been accomplished and that this should serve as a notice to the masters that the workers of Cleveland will stand solidly together when a common danger threatens. This point was especially emphasized by the speaker for the Workers Party, Comrade Nathan Gould. He was the only speaker who mentioned the word "revolution." All the others managed to avoid it some way or other.

He started out by referring to the Workers Party as "the revolutionary Workers Party of the United States," and proclaimed proletarian revolution as its ultimate aim, while meantime fighting for better conditions for employed and unemployed and for the struggle against Fascism and War.

Comrade Gould's talk was loudly applauded and the whole affair must be considered as a definite victory for the genuine united front idea.

Debate on WP vs. SP
Scheduled in N. Y.

"Which Party for American Labor? Workers Party or Socialist Party?" will be debated Thursday afternoon at 3 P.M. at New York University, Washington Square, Main Building, room 581.

Murray Baron, leader of the Militants, will defend the S. P. and Joseph Carter, administrator of the International Workers School will present the program of the Workers Party.

The debate is under the auspices of the N.Y.U. chapter of the Student League for Industrial Democracy and the Discussion Club. All interested are invited.

Heed the Call of Toledo!

made complete, the union got a signed agreement with the firm, and the company union was smashed.

The comrades of the W. P. did not go to sleep after that great effort or become arm-chair philosophers trying to live on the glory of the fight that was past. Patiently they gathered a few progressives in the unions around them. Tirelessly they threw themselves into every struggle that occurred. Eagerly they read and talked with more experienced comrades in order to deepen their knowledge both of the theory and the practical tactics of the revolutionary movement. Steadily their conviction of the fundamental role of the revolutionary party grew.

Thus the tradition of militancy was built up in the Automobile Workers Union in Toledo and to a large extent in other unions. As Oliver Myers, business agent of the Electrical Workers Union in Toledo, stated at the recent A. F. of L. conference in Washington which was passing resolutions as usual and letting it go at that: "We don't do things like this in Toledo. We strike the damned job. We don't come down to Washington, we go on the picket line."

Distrust of trade union officials who try to make the workers believe that their hope lies in "cooperation" with the bosses, and government agencies such as the Automobile Labor Board, was built up at least among the more progressive workers. Local union officials like Ramsey who played a questionable role in the Auto-Lite strike were undermined.

Week after week demonstrated that a revolutionary party such as the W. P. with a sound trade union policy is a tower of strength to the workers. Not one strike was lost in Toledo this past year. The Auto Workers Federal Union 18384 alone gained thousands of members, signed contracts with every important automobile parts plant in Toledo, and substantially improved conditions.

That is the background of the strike that broke the apathy and peace of the automobile situation last Tuesday and made it impossible for Wm. S. Knudsen himself to get into the Chevrolet plant until strike chairman, Jimmy Roland, granted permission.

To the crucial struggle which has now begun the Workers Party pledges anew its fullest support. (As I write these words, a union member comes into the room to report that the strike meeting tonight cheered and cheered again when the telegram of Morris Lewitt, N. Y. District Organizer of the W. P., pledging support and telling about the picketing of General Motors offices in New York by the W. P., was read.) Well do we know that if this strike attains its objective and brings General Motors to its knees a great step will have been taken toward that day when the giant American working-class rises in its might to smash capitalism.

The Strike Committee has outlined a sound policy: No going back to work except on the basis of a signed contract giving genuine union recognition.

Direct negotiations between strike committee and management—no turning over of authority to negotiate to government boards or union officials in Washington.

Extension of the strike to every General Motors plant in the country.

Establishment of machinery to coordinate the strike and settlement activity on a national scale.

We call upon our Party throughout the land, upon the unions, the unemployed leagues, all working-class organizations, to provide genuine, constant and enthusiastic support to the strike. Respond to every call from the union for help! Assist in manning the picket lines! Call upon any General Motors plants still working to come out on strike! Picket the salesrooms and offices of General Motors! Refuse to buy any General Motors products, automobiles, fridges, etc.!

For a victorious strike!
For decisive defeat of the anti-labor policy of the automobile barons!

For a fighting national union of automobile workers!
Workers in steel, textiles, rubber, automobiles, mining, every great industry, hear the call of Toledo!

Make the Chevrolet strike the signal for a general series of assaults upon the Roosevelt starvation policy and entrenched American capitalism!

May Day March
Biggest in Years

culminated and at this point the enthusiasm of the workers was considerably dampened by the maladroitness of the marchers to fold up their banners under police supervision and to proceed to the meeting in the park proper with their ranks broken.

The meeting in the park itself proved to be a harmless concert which, except for the speech of Comrade James P. Cannon, was entirely out of harmony with the militant, fighting spirit of the workers displayed throughout the parade. The reformist leaders of the unions and of the Socialist Party seemed more concerned to prove their "respectability" and "patriotism" to the park commissioner and the capitalist city government than to comply with the spirit of the May Day celebrations. That indomitable spirit of the workers' will to victory pervaded the ranks of the unions on the march and left them grumbling at the kowtowing tactics of their leaders in the park itself.

Cannon Alone Stresses Struggle

In his brief speech at the Mall, Comrade Cannon introduced the only note of revolutionary tenor in the whole meeting, sharply distinguishing himself from Antonini, Waldman, Norman Thomas and company by stressing the struggle character of May Day as represented and expressed by the heroic strike in Toledo. He warned against the war preparations of the capitalists and concluded that the only factor working for peace is the revolutionary struggle for the overthrow of capitalism. Lively applause greeted his remarks. The speaker for the I.W.O. was cut off by Antonini in abject deference to the command of the park commissioner to stop all speaking after the expiration of the "time limit" the leaders had supinely agreed to.

400 members and sympathizers of the Workers Party gathered at Germania Hall in the evening to round off the day with a celebration fitting for the day and for the party, which embodies its essential spirit. Comrade Reva Grainger spoke for the Spartacus Youth League and Comrades Cannon and E. R. McKinney, speaking for the party, berated the cowardly tactics of the reformists in the park and stirred those present with appeals to increase their activity and carry the militancy of the party more deeply into the ranks of the unions, so that such tactics and the leaders who practice them will give way to the real and inherent fighting spirit of the workers.

The Communist Party parade, which had to be carried on separately because the sectarian and splitting tactics of former years still makes the mass of the workers wary of a united front with them, and enables the reformist leaders to sabotage every move for united action, brought together about 50,000 and culminated in a mass meeting at Union Square. The pacifism which the Communist Party leaders introduced into it was of the same kind as that of the reformist union leaders and the S. P. "old guard" at Central Park.

AS RARE AS ALBINO FROGS

"A Socialist Party is a party of the workers. It is a revolutionary party. . . . Each party member must have his voice in the formation of party program. . . . He must have the right within the party to agitate for changes in management, in program, in tactics. . . . But he must confine his efforts to party circles. No Socialist carries his party differences to the capitalist press. . . . No Socialist ever splits his ticket. . . . Every Socialist is first and foremost a discipline propagandist for socialism." Editorial, Socialist Call. Would someone give the habitat of such a Socialist Party and such Socialists as described here? Around these parts they are as rare as albino frogs.

Phila. W. P. in May Day Unity

PHILADELPHIA, May 1.—Not in words but by stirring action did the Workers Party, Phila. Branch show how much it desires the unity of the working class. The banner of the Workers Party flew proudly on the platform in Reynburn Plaza throughout the whole day. From twelve o'clock noon when together with the Socialist Party and many trade unions, the party marched into the square, until three o'clock, when the Socialist Party closed its meeting the Workers Party banner was side by side with the banner of the other labor organizations. Then amid the hush that followed the closing of the meeting, comrade Roberts of the party stepped to the microphone and in the name of the Party invited the fifteen thousand workers to stay and participate in the Communist Party demonstration which was scheduled on Reynburn Plaza from 3 until 5 o'clock.

Several hundred Stalinists boomed when Comrade Roberts started to speak but his stirring appeal for unity of the working class changed those very booms into cheers and when he had finished a mighty roar of approval went up from the crowd.

When the meeting was over the Party and its sympathizers marched in the Communist Party parade for over two miles. Cheers for the Fourth International, the W.P., Comrade Trotsky, and many other slogans were roared to the skies and to the interested thousands that lined the road of the parade.

The end of the parade was just as dramatic as had been the events of the whole day. The parade was to end in a park several miles from Reynburn Plaza. In military formation four abreast the Party comrades and their sympathizers marched into the park. The path on both sides was lined with thousands of Communists and their sympathizers as the Party marched in behind their banner. In the center of the park the column came to a halt at attention. A silence spread over the park. A comrade stepped from the ranks. He raised his hand and "Long live the Workers Party" rolled through the park. Again he raised his hand: "Long live the United May Day" thundered to the sky, with the cheers of the Communist Party comrades who could no longer hold back their desire for a true united front between all working class parties.

WAR and the Franco-Soviet Pact

By JAMES P. CANNON

The military alliance between the Soviet Union and the French government, formally effected by the signing of the mutual assistance agreement on May 2, raises fundamental problems of the present epoch before the advanced workers of the world in the sharpest form. It was precisely on the question of war, which is only the other side of the question of proletarian revolution, that International Social Democracy consummated its historic betrayal in 1914. Will Stalinism, hand in hand with the unregenerate reformists, lead the masses to a similar catastrophe in the impending war?

A military alliance between the Soviet Union and one or more capitalist countries against others is not the main question here. In the absence of support in the form of revolutionary movements in the capitalist countries the Soviet Union might have no alternative in the event of war. That such a policy is deemed necessary now only testifies to the weakened position of the Soviet Union which ensued from the catastrophic defeats to which the Comintern under Stalin's domination has led the international working class. The betrayal of the Chinese revolution bore fruit in the aggressions of Japanese imperialism. The shameful capitulation of the Comintern in Germany, supplementing the treachery of Social Democracy, prepared the conditions for a Hitler offensive against the Soviet Union. The pact with the French government takes place on the basis of these defeats!

The Soviet Union agrees to defend the territory of imperialist France with the troops of the Red Army in return for a corresponding promise of the French government regarding the territory of the Soviet Union. Such an agreement could be made only because the heads of the Soviet government do not, or feel that they cannot, rely on the European working class to come to its defense. But in that case it is necessary to say: the heavy defeats inflicted on the working class movement by the policy of Stalinism have weakened the international position of the Soviet Union and compelled it to depend on the flimsy structure of a pact with imperialist France.

That is the blunt truth and the workers ought to know it. But the Stalinists, true to their policy and practice of deceiving the workers and leading them blind-folded to the abyss, do not talk this language. They point up the rapacious French imperialists as advocates of "peace" and represent the pact with them as a "victory for socialism," an "advance," etc. That is a lie, a deception, a fraud! By such perfidious methods the French workers can be dragged into the trenches to fight for "peace-loving" French imperialism; they cannot be led into a revolutionary struggle to overthrow it.

What position should the French working class take in the light of the military pact? That is the main question for France at the present time, and will very likely be the main question later in America. That is the heart of the problem of the coming war as it will be presented concretely in those countries which are lined up in the same bloc with the Soviet Union.

The Workers Party alone has given a clear answer to this question in its Declaration of Principles. We say, with Liebknecht and Lenin: The enemy

20 Workers Party Pickets Arrested in N. Y. Demonstration against General Motors

NEW YORK, May 6.—Twenty Workers Party and Spartacus Youth League members were arrested here today while picketing the General Motors office on Broadway, between 57th and 58th Streets. Led by Sam Gordon, managing editor of the New Militant and Al Dasch, W. P. organizer, over a hundred workers participated in a picket line along the G.M.C. building, shouting "Support the Toledo Chevrolet Strikers," "Smash General Motors Company Unions" and other militant slogans.

After forty-five minutes of picketing, the demonstration had attracted a noon-day crowd of 2,000 onlookers expressing their approval and tying up traffic in the immediate area. A squad of 25 uniformed police headed by a plainclothes captain, several mounted officers and two radio cars were soon rushed to the scene. Without any previous notice, the captain seized Gordon and placed him under arrest.
